As the years roll by the North Adams Alumni become more scattered and conditions are very much changed. At the annual meeting at the Congregational church on Friday evening there were 150 present and the program was carried out as stated last week. The toastmaster, Everett Williams called for extemporaneous remarks from the crowd many of whom responded in a very gracious manner. Among the notable events was a letter read from Mrs. Terrian, (Jennie Bennett) a former perceptress of the High School under Supt. Earl D. Reynolds of Rockford, Illinois (deceased). Mrs. Terrian is teaching in Brown University, at Sterling, Ill., and sends her best regards to all former pupils. She wishes to arrange for a homecoming on the old school grounds this summer. We shall publish her letter in full next week.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, sound-proof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

DETROIT 3rd IN MEN OF RICHES

Detroit ranks third in the number of citizens who have fortunes of $250,000 or more. New York, America's largest city, has 9,251 "quarter millionaires"; Chicago is second with 3,346, and Detroit comes next with 1,434. Philadelphia has 1,285; Los Angeles, 1,253; Pittsburgh, 1,174; Cleveland, 1,104, and San Francisco, 1,061.

These figures were compiled by Boyd's City Dispatch of New York. Just how they were obtained is not revealed, though it is believed that publicity given individual income tax returns formed the foundation.

The middle western states, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota, have 3,835 millionaires. The total number of persons in the United States who possess $1,000,000 or more is 15,217. The number of persons in the country possessing from $5,000 to $50,000 is 1,378,282; those worth $50,000 or more, 530,630; those worth $100,000 or more, 149,274; those worth $250,000 or more, 60,302; those worth $500,000 or more, 27,741.

FORD FUEL TANK DESIGN IS AMONG NEW PATENTS FILED

Patents granted to Michigan residents include a design by Henry Ford for a cowl fuel tank for automobiles. Application for the patent was filed in August, 1926.

The new Ford gas tank is built as an integral part of the automobile body, the tank being built into the cowl in such a way that the top of the cowl forms the top of the tank itself. The filler opening is placed in the top of the cowl and arrangement is made so that any overflow, due to splashing or other cause, is carried off to the ground.

Other patents issued to Detroit inventors were as follows:

Steve A. Davis, clamping mechanism for can openers; William C. Devereaux, door latch; Henry Ford, automobile body construction; Ralph C. Garland, assignor to Skinner Automotive Device Co., lubrication of internal combustion engine; Robert K. Jack, assignor to General Motors, internal combustion engine, and battery suport (2 patents); Henry C. Leonard and W. H. Whittier, Grand Rapids, assignors to Electric Refrigeration Corporation of Detroit, refrigerator fine construction; Montgomery W. McConkey, assignor to General Motors, automobile collision bumper; Elzear Michaurd, burner apparatus; Andrew Palka, radiator shell (2 patents); Ernest Pemberthy, lubrication of percussive tools; Rufus R. Ross, carburetor attachment; Ernest W. Seaholin, automobile radiator; William Shaw, apparatus for installing pavement joints; Edwin C. Spring, brake; Carl Ungerman, sash regulating device; Paul Weeks, assignor to Secretary of War of the United States, trustee, grouser.

Patents were issued to other Michigan residents as follows:

Grand Rapids—Walter H. Whittier, refrigerator door.

Jackson—Eugene Higgins, assignor to Hayes Wheel Co., rolling machine.

Saginaw—Henry J. Gilbert, hub for split pulleys and the like.

Ann Arbor—Frank M. Jones, internal combustion engine.

Adrian—Robert W. Kirk, automobile bumper, assigned to American Chain Company.

ALFALFA SEED AS CROP SEEN AS MORE PROFITABLE THAN HAY

That production of alfalfa for seed may be more profitable for Michigan farmers than cutting the crop for hay, is indicated by numerous reports.

Continuous rains interfered with hay making last year, with the result that many farmers saved their alfalfa fields for seed in the hope that a small amount might be obtained and a total loss be avoided on this year's crop.

The amount of seed produced by fields in several counties gives indications that seed production may be a highly profitable industry. One farmer harvested 135 bushels of first class seed.

95 POUND ENGINE WILL PULL TON

Most boys have hobbies. They like to build something, if it is only fashioning a gimcrack with a pocket-knife. Nowadays the boys build radio sets and model ships and model airplanes. But when the men of today were boys radio and airplanes were practically unknown and model ships weren't the style.

When Horace S. Rector, who lives at Lansing, Mich., was a lad, he was fascinated by locomotives. He was of a mechanical turn of mind as well, so he turned to making miniature locomotives.

About 20 years ago a manufacturer of railroad watches asked him to build a model locomotive.

Rector wasn't satisfied, so three years ago he started to build a model locomotive that would run under its own power. A locomotive that would be exactly like those that daily haul freight and passengers.

He recently finished it. It is of the Pacific type and is complete in every detail. It is 36 inches long and 15 inches high. But, despite its small size, it will run under its own steam power—the boiler holding 225 pounds of steam pressure. It will develop two horsepower, can pull a load of one ton and travel at the rate of 25 miles an hour and the gauge of the rails it travels on is only four inches. Its total weight is 95 pounds.

The model has a complete air pump and air brake system; automatic bell ringer; the interior of the cab is electrically lighted and the locomotive has its own electric system with a large headlight and running lights; steam turbine engine that runs the smallest electric generator in the world; boiler feed pumps; the latest Bell Chart gear which operates the piston valves; automatic grate shaker and coal feeder; a super-heater system for heating water before it enters the boiler and brakes that exert an air pressure of 40 pounds.

Everything is controlled from the cabin and the instruments are the same as the regular type. The throttle can be set for any speed; it has forward and reverse speeds; automatic fire box door opener and emergency air brake.

"I don't know how much money I have spent for the material in the model," Mr. Rector said, "but I do know that it took me three years of my spare time to build." Mr. Rector is a toolmaker.

SPARK FROM CAT PUTS TWO IN KENT HOSPITAL

Ernest Gunnison and Mason Manley were burned seriously in an explosion in the lethal chamber of the Grand Rapids pound, which they believe was caused by a spark from the fur of a cat. The explosion occurred shortly after the animal had been placed in the chamber. The cat was blown across the room and killed.

FELT HAT FOR ALL SEASONS

"A hat that I can wear shopping, to luncheon, to tea, to business, perhaps motoring,"—thus the busy modern woman enumerates the uses that one or possibly two hats will have to fill. Even if she does not have to think of the budget, she must remember economy of time. She must have one hat which she can wear throughout a day scheduled with various kinds of events.

The felt is an all-occasion, all-season hat, if the model is not too jaunty—or too severely tailored, bespeaking wear with only a mannish suit. Stitching, on the crown of a small felt takes away the everyday plainness, and yet keeps it trimly tailored. Such a hat, in a neutral color, could be worn with a suit, tweed coat, dress coat, or a sweater costume.

If a turban is chosen, severity can be avoided by a flange which trims it and also makes a flattering line for the face.

Sunshades of crocheted raffia and silk straw are delightful when worn with tiny matching hats at a resort. "Resort wear" is the name given to summer frocks and accessories that are suitable for other than town wear, you know.

Some delightful and novel bathing costumes have been offered to the non-bathing beach visitor, and they fill a real need for Miladi who is interested in sunshine and fresh air, but not necessarily in public bathing! These suits are short, reaching only to the knees, and comprise a two-piece suit of crepe cut out in a large decollette especially adapted to the taking of a sun bath. Over it is worn a thick sponge matching coat with long sleeves and skirt bordered with raffia, to make it fall well.

A carpet made in this same sponge and trimmed with matching raffia is carried on the arm.

A new Parisian hosiery shade is a copper tint. The French name for this color is "Gorde de Pigeon." We call it "Peach Blush."

Pale lavender, called "Iris Mauve," is considered very chic for evening. It is a shade that combines well with brocade or opalescent leather evening pumps.

Scallops, tucks and drawn-thread work are the decorations particularly suited for washable summer frocks. On lingerie frocks one finds groups of tucks which may be graded in size, while more habille models have the place of these tucks taken by groups of pleating.

The robe de style is an accepted type of evening gown, for all time. Something in a woman instinctively takes refuge in its charm when all else fails to intrigue her imagination. Robes de style this season are developed in everything from velvets and chiffons to organdies and voile.

Some of the formal evening gowns of the season sponsor this delightful style, as well as some of the most informal ones.

Remember the robe de style if you are the type—but remember, also, that you MUST be the type to wear it or else it will be hopelessly unbecoming! One MUST be slender for a robe de style and either very tiny or very tall, as well as slender.

And what about the ostrich ruff? We hear about it spasmodically, see it occasionally on a smart woman, and then do not see it at all!

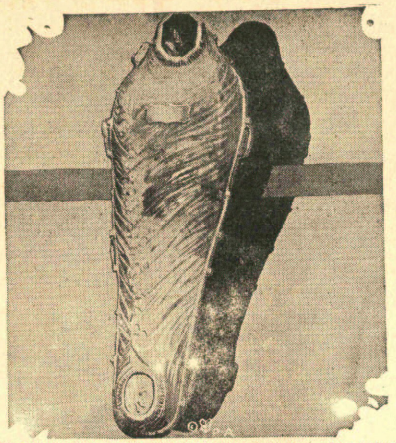
I believe one can sum up the situation in this way. That the ostrich feather scarf is worn by the smart woman of a rather feminine type, and when worn by the right type is very lovely and smart indeed—but when worn by the wrong woman it makes her look hopelessly fussy and poorly gowned.

Summer coats have finally settled into an acceptance of the straight, one-piece coat, occasionally with loose bolero effect, frequently only at the back, and usually beltless or belted only in front. There is still the occasional coat of other lines, of course, but it will be a long time before women voluntarily relinquish the flattering line of the straight coat.

Belts are among the important accessories this year, as no frock or three-piece costume seems complete without a belt of some sort. With the sports suit they are decidedly popular and some of the newer sports belts are extremely wide. The two-piece frock is not to be worn without a belt this year, it appears.

Sleeveless beach coats of bathing suit length, made of gay cretonne, of taffeta or of velveteen, are among the new beach accessories. Both belted and unbelted models are shown in the shops. Wide vertical striped coats of flannel are also new.

Ohio River Gives Up Man Dead---144 Years!



The remains found in this metallic casket—hermetically sealed, and found floating in the Ohio river near Henderson, Ky.—are believed to be those of Richard Henderson, a nephew of the founder of the town, who was buried in 1814. Rising waters of the river washed away the entire cemetery there. The coffin was made in 1800 in England.

World's Champion Boy Scout

This clean-cut, handsome-looking lad is Elwood Verner, of Minneapolis, Minn., who today holds the title of "World's Champion Boy Scout." Pinned to his bosom you see some of the 74 merit badges he earned to gain his honors. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that it is only possible for him to wear 76 such tokens, and he is now ready to pass the tests in the other subjects as soon as suitable examiners can be found.

Elwood became a first-class Scout in May, 1924. By September, 1926, he had won the 21 merit badges necessary to become an Eagle Scout, and since then he annexed 53 more.

CALL DETROIT TAX HIGHEST

George Lord, state tax commissioner, has prepared a table showing the state tax per capita in the larger cities of Michigan. The figures are based on the state tax collected in each city in 1926, as compared to the 1925 population estimate.

The table shows that the tax in Detroit was $5.50 per capita, and was the largest paid in the state, while the smallest per capita tar was $2.21, paid by the residents of Bay City. Lansing was next to Detroit with a tax of $5.17.

Following are the figures:

STATE IS HIT BY "SUN SPOTS"

Predictions that 1927 will be a year "without a summer" have cost thousands of dollars already to resort interests of Michigan. As a result, these interests are taking steps to combat the long-distance weather forecasting and are pointing to the statements of the United State Weather Bureau that it can not be done.

Herbert Janvrin Browne, of Washington, is the champion "long-distance weather forecaster," who is to become the target of the tourist and resort interests. It was Mr. Browne who predicted a severe winter in 1926-1927, when the Central West enjoyed the mildest winter in years. Now, it is Mr. Browne's prediction of the summerless summer, at which tourist and resort interests are centering their attack.

When publicity was given to one of Mr. Browne's forecasts of a year without a summer, owners of resort homes received many cancellations. One resort owner near Grand Haven had rented all his cottages when letters began to pour in, and within a few days half the reservations had been cancelled.

Browne bases his predictions on a study of the sun spots. The United States Weather Bureau agrees that sun spots do cause a slight change in weather, but contends that it is impossible to predict weather changes more than four days in advance.

But whether Mr. Browne or the Weather Bureau is right, the tourist and resort interests are suffering.

GAY COLORS RENEW HOME

We cannot discard our furniture or homes as we do a dress, nor can we buy new ones once a year, but changes in color can be evoked very simply and their effects are truly astounding. We note the color of a thing before its shape impresses us. Our feelings toward that thing are governed to a great extent by its color. We must be discerning indeed, and highly appreciative of detail, to like a thing in spite of its color, while it is highly human to prefer an object because of its color, regardless of its shape or size.

A great many women might apply this knowledge not only to furniture which they have tired of or do not like, but to their rooms and houses as well. Most of us have at least one room containing "mixed" furniture, no two pieces alike, or with no period or style predominating. There are straight chairs and rockers, metal beds and golden oak bureaus—everyone recognizes the type. But all of these alien pieces may be made, if not sisters under the skin, at least sufficiently near relatives to get along well together.

What is true of color in furniture is true of color on walls and ceilings. We can overcome, in part, the feeling of stiffiness or bareness a room may give by proper use of color. A too high ceiling may be made to appear lower by carrying the ceiling color down the wall two or three feet and finishing it off with a simple stenciled border. The bleak room may need nothing but a pale yellow ceiling, instead of the glaring white one that has been considered proper. The little stuffy room may need light green woodwork and gray walls, instead of the imitation oak finish and buff walls.

Sometimes all a room needs is a dash of color. A painted chair, corner closet of bookshelves may add the desired tone. Sometimes a change in the color of a floor or in the finish of the doors and trim may make all the difference in the world. By means of stains, varnished woodwork may be toned in with the color scheme of the rest of the room without damaging its intrinsic beauty, the graining of the wood.

If you own a piece of furniture that you dislike, or if you have a room that bores you, examine it critcally. See if it is not color, rather than the shape or architecture that is responsible. It is impossible to prescribe long-distance treatments for each type of defect that may exist, but if you think about it for a while and study the room or piece of furniture in question, you can be your own decorator. We are all born with a certain sense of color, which we absent-mindedly forget to use upon occasion.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"
Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

SANDWICHES OF ELITE "DUBBED"

Who names Pullman cars has long been a mystery, but the man who invents the names for the trick sandwiches for sale in Detroit sandwich "shoppes" has been discovered.

He is to be found, this fount of inspiration for "shoppe" keepers hungering for originality, in a dingy little office below Cadillac square, in an old building on a quiet side street. Through the five-story windows come faintly the noises of traffic—a modern orchestral accompaniment for the workings of this 1927 muse.

Like any true creative artist, he is likely to find inspiration anywhere. A fishing trip, a window shopping expedition, a visit to a dog show, or a perusal of the morning paper; any of these experiences may be reflected a few hours or weeks later on the menu cards of the newest "shoppe."

Thus was named the Leaping Lena sandwich, a fearsome conglomeration of tuna fish, toast, raisins, lettuce, tomatoes, salad dressing, olives, shredded cocoanut and a toothpick. Its name was evolved after long and prayerful meditation in a rowboat while our genius was bass fishing.

Again, there is the Book Tower sandwich, a toothsome heap of story on story of toasted bread cemented together with whatever the presiding officer in the kitchen can find at hand.

There is a legend afloat among "shoppe" proprietors to the effect that one of their number once attempted to name his sandwiches on the plan of cigars, in honor of famous men. This plan proved unsuccessful, however, for one personage thus honored ate the concoction baptized with his name.

Its ingredients included everything in the kitchen but the chief cook's cleaver and the great man's resulting indigestion brought about a suit for damages, libel, and defamation of character. Whereupon the penurious "shoppe" keeper gave up and turned his steps toward the studio of the original namer of sandwiches.

DOG RETURNS TO OLD HOME AT YALE AFTER 12 YEARS

Fritz and his old master are reunited after 12 long years.

Fritz is a large Scotch collie which Milton A. Edighoffer, of Yale, Mich., sold to a family in Detroit just 12 years ago. A few days ago the dog scratched at the door of the home where he [illegible]ped and frolicked when a puppy. [illegible] he's going to stay.

No one knows where the dog wandered from, but he made his way into the city, limping on bleeding feet, with tired, drooping head, searching for the scent of his old home.

Fritz made his way along the street, greeting no one and receiving no kindly word after his 12 years' absence. Turing in at the Edighoffer home he whined and pawed at the door to be admitted. When his old master saw the dog there was immediate recognition between the two.

The dog's wandering days are over. Edighoffer declares Fritz will never leave him again.

Fritz comes from a family of aristocratic stock, his grandfather commanding a price of $5,000 at one time, according to his pedigree.

ADMIRAL'S MESSAGE CARRIES CHEER TO SIGHTLESS VETERAN

An admiral's message to a youthful one-time shipmate who lost his eyes and his hands during the World War, has cheered Carl Bronner, Fordson, Mich.

Admiral Philip Andrews, U. S. N., sent a lithograph of the Constitution to Bronner. The picture bore the inscription—"To my old shipmate and friend, with the biggest and stiffest backbone I ever heard of."

Bronner, despite his blindness and other handicaps, studied law and was admitted to the bar. He is soon to be married. Recently he recovered from sleeping sickness.

YEAR BOOK AT HUDSON SHOWS CHURCH SINCE 1836

A year book of the Congregational Church, distributed at Hudson, contains much interesting history of the church and city. This church was organized in 1836. Services were held in the school house and various homes until the society built a frame church which was dedicated June 3, 1848. Later this building was sold and the present brick church was built. The history shows that this church has had 25 pastors, Rev. David Pratt being the first, and the Rev. C. C. Mitchell the present pastor. There are 226 members.

TWO SET OF TWINS REACH ATHLETICS' PEAK AT ANN ARBOR

One set of twins on any college team is generally enough to set the tongues of sport followers to wagging. And two sets on the yearling track team at the University of Michigan has caused a number of amusing incidents among the students.

Dalton and Dale Seymour never saw a track shoe until they reported to Coach Charlie Hoyt one day last winter. The boys hail from Marshall high school, of Michigan, and evidently Hoyt thought that being local products, they were entitled to a chance.

Dalton weighs only 133 pounds, and Dale 116. So they immediately picked out the toughest race on the card, the quarter mile, of which even the huskies are usually afraid. Within two months, both turned in the best indoor times for the quarter mile ever made. Dale's mark of 51 4-5 broke the field house record, while Dalton's mark of 52.1 is better than the winning time in the Michigan-Cornell dual meet.

Grosse Pointe contributed the other pair of twins, in the Evans brothers, Robert B. and Edward S., high jumper and hurdler respectively. The Evans twins are graduates of the Virginia Episcopal prep school, both having starred in track at that institution.

Coach Hoyt considers both men good prospects, and awarded the twins, together with the Seymour twins, their coveted numerals indoors.

AGED ATHLETIC HALL IS RAZED

As the old must give way to the new in a changing order, so Colonial Hall, the oldest structure of Olivet College campus fast is yielding to wrecking bars to make way for the new gymnasium to be erected this year, and the sturdy skeleton of timbers, erected in 1846, soon will be but a memory.

In the pages of an old college catalogue of an early date is recorded the following pledge made by people of Olivet, as "having been passed with great unanimity and harmony of feeling: 'Resolved, That in view of the importance of sustaining and carrying forward the institution, we, the people of Olivet, hereby pledge ourselves to expend a given portion of our time daily (Sundays and Thursdays excepted), or its equivalent thereto, for the benefit of the institution, under the supervision of committees appointed for that purpose." With no money in the treasury, it was in this way that Colonial Hall was framed, under direction of a local carpenter, the frame being completed in 1847. Up to this point the material for the framework and the oaken pins that held the joints had been secured from the forest, with no outlay except the contributed labor.

A full year passed with no funds for enclosing the naked timbers, when a meeting of the Marshall association was held in Olivet, and Samuel F. Drury, who later was associated with Olivet's history, started a fund for enclosing the building. The subscriptions came mainly from citizens and students, out of their meager necessities of livelihood. Their sacrifice was repaid the following year, 1848, when they were enabled to hold their commencement exercises in the building, though it was still unfinished, with loose boards for a floor.

WOMAN HOLDS POST AS GATE TENDER AT DAM

A woman tends the gates of the Consumers Power Company's dam in the Muskegon river at Newaygo.

She is Mrs. Mike O'Neil, whose husband is an employee of the power company. The family resides in a little house on the bank of the river, just below the dam.

An order from up-river to open the gates at Newaygo, relayed to Mrs. O'Neil, sends her out to operate a small, covered car, containing an electric motor and the machinery propelled by electricity. This car runs on a narrow track along the top of the dam, and, by means of heavy chains, raises the huge steel gates, two or more of which can be lifted to a height of 12 feet simultaneously. Seldom is it necessary to raise them more than eight or nine feet.

EX-CALUMET PASTOR GETS COLLEGE POST

Rev. Lewis James Bailey, formerly of Calumet, who was ordained in the priesthood of the Episcopal church two years ago and served at the Ontonagon church for a short time, has been named chaplain of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio. He is only 30 years old. He is a brother of the Rev. Percival Bailey, who for several years was rector of Christ church at Calumet.

SLENDER LINES DRESSING ART

Moanin' the blues may be purely American, but like many other things in the mode, the origin of which can be traced to these shores, Paris has sponsored them for decoration as well as entertainment.

Blues of every shade sound an insistent note in Miladi's wardrobe—in everything from lingerie to accessories.

But you know, don't you, that there are other colors which are just as modish that are more suitable to brunettes? Blues of the vivid greenish shades are the only ones that are flattering to a brunette, assuming that you know that the type with dark hair and blue or green eyes is not a true brunette, but instead, a demi-brunette.

Slenderness has come to be the world's ideal of beauty in the feminine figure. It was bound to become that because of the growing number of slender—in other words, girlish and physically immature—figures in adult society. And art always emphasizes ideals.

Dress art has always idealized the physique, and it has done it through optical illusion. For clothes are illusionary. They give to the body a form that it need not actually possess. They can heighten one, shorten one, make one look stouter or more slender. It is all a question of line and materials and, to some extent, color.

If we look over the classic styles of the past, we find that dress then emphasized maturity. They belonged to the age of the buxom styles. Not only was this true of such delicious conceptions as the Directoire and Empire fashions, but even of less distinguished and even ridiculous fashions. Think of the big sleeves and tightly-laced waists of the absurd style of the 1890's, and see how they emphasized the points of buxom maturity.

Small women are not children! They are not examples of arrested development, they are not odd-sized, in fact they are just as women should be—petite and dainty. Yet a not too far-seeing industry has chosen to more or less neglect them in favor of quantity if not quality. Many are the pleas we receive from "little ladies" who do not wish to be relegated to the Children's Departments when they shop for their wardrobes!

But so insistent has become the wrath of the small woman, so positive her demands for style and individuality, that the designers are at last awakening to her needs. Today in the shops she can find gowns and wraps that do not look as though they belonged in her daughter's closet. And clever and more individual garments are procurable from her dressmaker, who, with her aid, is able to interpret the mode and occasion in the smaller sizes.

In the first place, small women foolishly resent being called small, or short. They resent being sent to another department of a shop. Remember that there was a time when the wearing of velvet was allowed only to royalty, and since then its regal tone has sounded a continued reproach to frivolity. Too, this lovely fabric gives itself the personality of the wearer, thereby reversing the usual order where the fabric seems to be an added ornamentation.

So the very first suggestion to the small woman who would achieve dignity and distinction in her clothing is velvet, wherever it is appropriate and in good taste.

Point d'esprit contributes to the general effect of flimsy softness found in both line and material in the summer mode for women of all ages and sizes. For the smaller woman particularly lace lends itself to dignified graciousness of line. A lace gown automatically removes itself from the juvenile aspect that the small woman abhors.

The printed silks, as brought out for the spring and summer seasons of 1927, offer unusual selective opportunities to the women of the country in such adjuncts as durable weaves, almost endless patterns and harmonious color blends, that have never been approached by the productive efforts of other years. Some of the flowers that have been utilized by the designers are dahlias, primroses, violets, daisies, pansies and lilies of the valley.

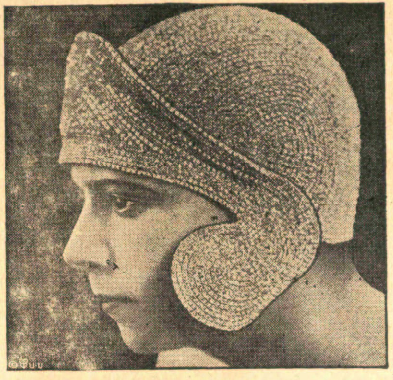
If a flower pattern is desired by the questioning shopper every conceivable description of this sort of design handling has been provided, from the daintiest of the all-over, bud, spray and trellis conceits, to the bold cluster treatments, which, together with the isolated flower, large flower applications, are at command printed on the sheerest of chiffons, georgettes, crepe de chines, radiums and tub silks.

"Spotty"--Canine Is Equal Of Human Acrobat!

Human acrobats can learn a thing or two from "Spotty," a little fox terrior pup owned by Paul Sydell, of Los Angeles Calif. The pup possesses remarkable gymnastic ability, as the photo above reveals.

In this stunt, "Spotty" stands on one paw atop her master's forehead—oft holding that pose as long as three and four minutes. She then slowly descends and kisses her master.

The "Last Note" In Evening Head-Dress



No—ladies—this is not the latest millinery creation. But it is the more advanced style in "coiffure du soir"—(whatever that is)—fresh from Paris.

Guess what the photo agency wanted to tell us is that it is the newest thing in evening headdress, to be worn at semi-formal and formal affairs. As you'll note, it is fabricated of steel beads formed and fashioned to the shape of a Roman helmet.

Wouldn't be a bad idea for the army to adopt. It ought to be bullet-proof!

MYSTERY VEILS BALL'S MOVING

A granite monument in the cemetery at Memphis, Mich., consisting of a base on which rests a 2,800-pound ball, has caused much conjecture for many years. Scientists who have sought to solve the mystery of how the ball moves, unaided by human agencies, have failed so far to com teo a definite answer to the problem.

The monument was placed on the Miller lot 24 years ago. A round, rough spot on which the ball first rested may be seen about half way up the south side of the sphere, or a distance of 26 inches from its first position.

The causes suggested include gravitation, the heat of the sun moving over the surface of the ball, and the processes of thawing and freezing. If a varied density in the granite is causing the slow motion, the ball cannot roll more than another quarter of a century, but if other causes are responsible for the strange phenomenon, it may continue indefinitely.

FARMER HERE IS IN BEST FIX

The Michigan farmer has not shared the financial depression of the grain belt states, and the outlook for agriculture in this state is "decidedly encouraging," according to a statement by R. S. Shaw, dean of agriculture at Michigan State College.

"The few bank failures, of the sort that manifested financial distress in the grain belt states, have not been due to agricultural financial causes in Michigan," he declared. "It is true that some Michigan farmers on poor or worn-out soils, with heavy indebtedness, big tax bills and crop losses, together with other misfortunes, have succumbed to the stress of the times.

"The average Michigan farmer, however, on good soil, with a fair amount of capital, is succeeding; he needs no apologies. Only 50 per cent of Michigan farms are mortgaged, and the indebtedness amounts to but 33 per cent of the appraised valuation. Far too many farms were bought during the high priced period of the war, with very little paid down. Owners of these farms are the ones who have suffered.

"Michigan farmers did not succumb to the depression started in 1920, because the state's agriculture was held to a good balance in a diversity of products, which in general have returned fair prices. Corn and cotton, neither of which Michigan sells, are two leading factors holding the agricultural figure to its present low point."

Dean Shaw believes farmers in the state are passing through a reconstruction period which will result in better and more intelligent agriculture, though the results may come slowly.

"Notable strides are being made in the restoration and conservation of fertility, in improved methods of culture, and in all the various economic factors leading to reduced costs of production," he said.

"When the time arrives that the rapidly increasing demand is for more products, at reasonably profitable prices, the Michigan farmer still will be able to meet that demand as the state still has enormous areas of valuable tilled land and other agricultural resources. The outlook for the Michigan farmer is an encouraging one."

DAM RIVER TO REGAIN BEAUTY

City officials of Grand Rapids are ready to let a contract to the Peninsular Construction Company of Grand Rapids for the erection of five dams within a half-mile in the bed of Grand River for the purpose of beautifying the stream as it flows through the downtown business section.

The dams will raise the water sufficiently to cover the river bed, which is dry for the greater part of each summer, and will restore a semblance of the rapids found here by the pioneers, which suggested the city's name.

The first dam is to be erected about 100 feet north of the Bridge street bridge, several hundred feet below the Consumers Power Company dam. It will be two and one-half feet high. The other four dams will be only one foot high and will be scattered along to a point just below the Pearl street bridge. It was near this point that less than a half century ago steamboats from Grand Haven docked when halted by the rapids.

By way of contrast with the present low water, it is planned that during the construction of the dams the entire river flow can be diverted through the west side canal.

The dams will be of concrete. The width of the river at the points they will be erected is about 475 feet. The cost will be approximately $25,000.

$50,000 HOME GIVEN TO KING'S DAUGHTERS FOR HOWELL HOSPITAL

A movement started by the Kings' Daughters for a fund to establish a hospital in Howell has culminated in the gift of the $50,000 residence of the late Edward G. McPherson, by Miss Isabelle McPherson, of California, his daughter.

Miss McPherson gave the property to the city with the provision that it be used for hospital purposes only, and be named the Edward G. and Rose E. McPherson Memorial Hospital in honor of her parents.

Martin J. McPherson, only surviving member of the original McPherson family, and his wife, have added to this gift by giving a cash sum of $15,000 for equipping the hospital.

The remodeling, maintenance and operation of the hospital shall be assumed by the city.

TEACHER, 50 YEARS, NOW IS DIRECTOR OF GOLF AT UNIVERSITY

Up on a shady corner of Hill street, in Ann Arbor, lives a retired professor who can claim what is probably the longest continuous period of athletic service to the University of Michigan. Thomas S. Trueblood is his name, and, after 50 years as a teacher, he is now taking life "easy," writing textbooks and spending the daytime coaching the Michigan golf team.

Back a half century ago Trueblood came to Ann Arbor as a young instructor and had hardly found himself a place to room when he had organized the faculty baseball team, whcih he served as captain, director, coach, manager and player. When the faculty nine wasn't practicing or in action, Instructor Trueblood could have been found out on the varsity diamond helping to shape the undergraduate team.

After a decade at baseball Dr. Trueblood shifted his affections to the tennis court and for many years distinguished himself as an able player and coach. When advancing years began to make themselves felt, he "took up golf" and has never laid it down. For the past 20 years his allegiance to the university has taken two forms: one in the classroom, where he proved a brilliant and inspiring teacher, and another on the golf course, where he proved himself no less able a teacher of the game.

Dr. Trueblood is now director of golf at Michigan.

Why Prohibition Has Come To Stay

Prohibition will stay because no citizen would vote against it without looking back to see what he was voting for.

If you abolish prohibition, you will have to have the license system with all its corruption of public morals, its putting up the morality and souls of men for sale for tainted revenue. You would have to have the Brewer's Association and the Distiller's Liquor League and put the wine merchants of California again in the saddle.

You would have the saloon, the public solicitation to drinking, the treating system reestablished, the tramping down of our Sunday laws in every city; the violation of our midnight closing ordinances; the selling of liquor to minors; the harboring of women; the reestablishment of the ladies' side entrance; the brothel up-stairs; the gambling accompaniments.

It is needless to say we will not stand this.

The same men who established these evils and fought for them would be in control.

Prohibition will stay with us because we like the atmosphere, the type of men now conducting politics, the cleaner order than we ever had in the old days. We are rid of those base and debasing men who used to represent the saloon in the politics of America; those Judges who stood in with the "gang" for their reelections; those Sheriffs and District Attorneys who made a scrap of paper of their oaths of office; those politicians who used to come from the slum vote of the cities, overwhelming the better element and getting to the legislatures, city councils and even into both Houses of Congress and by conduct that was a shame to mankind, misrepresenting a Christian nation and a decent people.

The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment is really inviting us back to that, but we will not accept the invitation.

Prohibition has come to stay,because a new generation has come on the scene and these young men and women, now voters, have been trained up in the public schools and know the nature of narcotics, intoxicants and opiates. They have been taught that booze is never a food but always a poison; that the sale of it is not a business but a crime; that rum rule is the ruin of popular institutions.

When I was a boy, living in Maryland, I came to a word in my second reader, "chattel-slavery." This was a strange looking word. I came to my father and asked, "Papa, what is this word?" He replied, "Son, don't you know that word 'chattel'?

He took me upon his lap and told me about the days of slavery, until my heart was in my throat, and a glance at my face showed my father that he had made too deep an impress upon his child, and changing his tone, he said, "Don't worry about that, my boy. Abraham Lincoln stopped all that and there isn't a slave, living under our flag."

Prohibition will make it necessary for the readers of this leaflet to explain to their children some day what the liquor traffic used to be; what the license system was; what a rum seller was like; what the Brewer's Association meant; what a drunkard used to be; what a lowdown, self-seeking, conscienceless liquor politician, representing the saloons for the graft that came to him and the reelection they could assure, so low down that they would have to jump up to touch bottom, so crooked that you would have to dig their graves with a cord-screw—we will have to tell our children what these things were when there isn't another one left in the United States even as a sample of the sad old days when the wide open saloon set pit-falls for our young men, death traps for our young girls, and corrupted public morals by the wholesale debauching of mankind.—Clarence True Wilson, D.D

The End

Valedictory of the Class of 1927

Following is the valedictory delivered to the graduating class of 1927 by Miss Edith Bohn. Miss Bohn has kindly consented to its publication in full.

WORK CONQUERS ALL THINGS

"Work has been defined as the birthright of the human race. It is not a curse but a benediction. It is not a mark of degradation or of servitude but an insignia of royalty. There is dignity in toil. All labor that tends to supply man's wants, to increase his happiness, to elevate his nature—in fact all labor that is honest is honorable. It is the worker who dignifies the task not the task that elevates the worker. Be not ashamed then of lowly surroundings or humble work Many emphasize the contrast between mental and manual labor. However, should we not pause and weigh carefully the aspects of each before we are satisfied with our conclusions? Is it not true that the only distinguishing feature between mental and physical labor is that of thought and action? Thought plans action; action executes thought. Good thinking produces effective fruitful action, while good manual work is a result of highly concentrated logical thinking. Man being possessed of a mental, moral and physical nature, we can see that it is only by the development and exercise of each that he is able to realize his greatest possibilities.

The realization of a certain need is, I believe, the most powerful motive in the world. Elias Howe, watching his wife patiently plying her needle, saw the need of a machine for quicker and more efficient work; consequently we have the sewing machine. The need of a printing press was realized, as was also the telegraph and many other inventions which are a help and blessing to us today. We are induced, as it were, into undertaking some thing new or into entering unknown fields, but once the attempt is made and results become apparent there is ever present a spur for higher ideals and a challenge for the best. Thus work becomes essentially the joy of living, for who can meet the problems of his time without sensing that exuberant thrill of pride, accompanied by a keen and ever alert desire for further attainment.

The wonderful advances made in science, electricity and mechanical devices are the result of hard study, persistent conscientious efforts and diligent labor. As a result of this effort we are enjoying today the greatest comforts and blessings of any age. The value of the work of Thomas Edison to the world cannot be over estimated.

Some men have achieved material success through talents or have been endowed with riches, but the great majority of successful men gained their success by hard toil, perseverence, and energy. No talent or gift will carry a man far without ability to work earnestly and continuously even though work is distasteful. Success comes, not as a result of genius, but from continued and untiring devotion to a defined and well directed purpose. So by means of work we establish good habits, which if properly directed will become an invaluable asset of life. When one suddenly has riches bestowed upon him he is apt to find himself wholly unprepared for it. The discipline gained and habits formed in acquiring wealth help him to value it rightly and use it to the best advantage.

This principle is equally true in regard to gaining success in other things. An education is not acquired without hard study and hours of toil. Learning is not an instinct but an acquisition and we never get beyond the need of having more and more knowledge. He who would excel must apply himself diligently to his work. If our High School Course has taught us only one thing and that—the value of honest work well done—we have acquired a truth which will be of ever-lasting benefit to us as we go forth to take our place in life.

Classmates, tonight we have come to the close of our four years of High School Work. We now have gained only the first round in the Ladder of Life; let us continue to go forward, gaining more knowledge, taking up our tasks willingly and being a help and benefit to the community in which we live I am sure we will ever appreciate the help and kindly advice given us by our teachers. To our Parents, Board of Education, and Faculty, we feel a debt of gratitude for making it possible for us to achieve the goal which we have reached tonight. As we go out to assume the responsibilities of life in a newer and larger field, may each one of us fill our respective place in as efficient and dignified a manner as shall bring only words of commendation and approval from those who have so faithfully guided our course in the past. May the application of those principles and ideals instilled by them gratify their fondest hopes.

With our motto ever before us, let us over come obstacles, master situations, and prove ourselves worthy to exclaim, "Work Conquers All Things." "

County of Hillsdale, State of Michigan. 3t3

On Friday night, Ed Tremaine and Fred Bodenbender of Hillsdale had an auto smash-up in Jonesville. Nothing out of the ordinary in that, except, that, both were in that advanced stage of intoxication known as "dead drunk." Their car was wrecked, as well as several poles along the road, belonging to the Southern Mich. Light & Power Co. and on the arrival of the officers both men tried to hide themselves in the weeds, by pretending they were animals, the general concensus of opinion seems to be that they were. (The kind that runs about grunting). Fred appeared before Justice Fitzsimmons the next day and plead guilty to driving while drunk. For his share he drew $100 and costs and 10 days in jail. Ed had previously plead guilty in Circuit Court to violating the Liquor Law and was waiting sentence, so he will appear before the Judge this week to hear his fate. Again we repeat, Alcohol and gasoline don't mix.

Tim Straub of Hillsdale was arrested Saturday afternoon charged with drunkenness on the streets He will appear in Court on Monday.

No. of prisoners in the County Jail 7. No. under sentence 2. No. awaiting trial 5.

Here's Something Important

Hon. William Jardine Secretary of Agriculture in President Coolidge's cabinet is to address a large concourse of our farm citizens at Lansing College on Monday August 1. Of course as we all understand, there is great possibilities of Jardine cancelling his dates as these big boys quite generally do for so many small unimportant (to them) functions scattered over the United States, but let us hope we can truthfully say he will be present, and delight the hearts of thousands of Michigan's humble tillers of the soil, This week in August is to be a wonderful farm week all through, and large number of farmers organizations and kindred are to be there to talk conditions, over, lambast the corn borer, and drink red lemonade. "Sarah and "Johnnie" the baby and the hired girl will be there, and Jardine will go back to his duties in Washington with a long, pleasant remembrance of what he saw and the beneficent farm folks he met in the Wolverine state where dandelions are free and Dutch cheese costs nothing at all. God bless him! May he live long and happy,

Speaking of the humble dandelion which Michigan makes a specialty of raising for its succulent juice, we don't presume the Secretary ever uses anything of the kind but if he did he surely would have to admit we are premiers on its culture. We have some of the most famous butter fat producing bossies in America and then there are other things, to beat the band. Who has not heard of the famous little "Tin Fliver" which they turn out at Highland Park and sell to Arabs on the Sahara Desert though the Lord only knows what these heathens can do with them. They also send them to Spain that funny little old yellow country where the sun shines till it simply dries every thing up in its skin including the inhabitants, and where the streets are so narrow pedestrians have to go inside when the automobiles pass Well, we are getting along way from the farm question but who cares! We tried hard to bring our good president to Mackinaw this summer and we are now trying just as hard to land Jardine, but we guarantee nothing. Michigan looks a vast sight smaller to the big men in Washington than we imagine.

Bookcase in Hall

In place of having the conventional console table and mirror in the hall, a bookcase with either an etching or wood cut will prove very effective. It is not necessary to fill the cabinet with books; instead, pieces of brass, pottery and pewter will look attractive in the shelves.

LIFE-SAVER LOSES LAST BATTLE; DEATH IS VICTOR

UNIVERSITY OF DETROIT ERECTS NEW BUILDINGS

Three New Units of $10,000,000 Program Are Under Way

Construction of three more buildings costing approximately $600,000 by the University of Detroit are under way this year, it was announced recently by the Rev. Fr. John P. McNichols, S.J., president of the institution. Six buildings are now nearing completion on the university campus, at Livernois avenue and the Six-Mile road.

The university's construction program will eventually total $10,000,000.

With the recent acquisition of 11 acres of land adjoining its campus, the University now owns 75 acres, which it is believed will be sufficient for the 18 buildings which the University eventually hopes to erect there. Upon the completion of the second group, it is planned to erect a $350,000 gymnasium early in 1928 in order that mass exercise may become a part of the university curriculum.

MICHIGAN SISTERS MAY GO TO CHINA

Volunteers Asked to Establish Hospital in Wu Chang; Over 150 Accept Call

The Sisters of Charity of Mt. St. Joseph, Cincinnati, O., who operate St. Joseph's Hospital and Sanitarium at Mt. Clemens and conduct parochial schools in Detroit, Bay City, Alpena, Lansing and Jackson, will send a mission band to Wu Chang, China, in September for the purpose of establishing a hospital there, it was announced recently.

Volunteers for Chinese service already number over 190, it is said, and from this number six or more nuns will be chosen to make the trip. This is the first time that the "Black Cap" or American Sisters of Charity have entered into the foreign mission field.

ESTABLISHES NEGRO CATHOLIC PARISH

St. Benedict the Moor parish, the second Roman Catholic parish in Detroit to be established especially for Negro worship, will be opened soon. The Rev. Fr. Norman A. Duckette, one of four Negro priests in the United States, will be pastor.

Father Duckette is the first Negro to be ordained priest in the Detroit diocese. He was born in Washington, D. C., and came to Detroit 18 years ago. His theological studies were made in St. Paul, Minnesota and he was ordained in 1926 by the Rt. Rev. Joseph C. Plagens, D. D., auxiliary bishop of Detroit.

IONIA PRIEST GETS NEW POST

The Rev. Fr. Hugh D. McCarthy, formerly of Ionia, was recently appointed pastor of St. Leo's church, Detroit, by the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit. Father McCarthy has occupied the Ionia pastorate since 1905. He was ordained in 1898 by the late Bishop John S. Foley, having been educated at St. Francis' Seminary, Milwaukee. He was born in Lenox, Mich., in 1870.

The ninth anniversary of the death of the Rt. Rev. John S. Foley, D. D., former Bishop of Detroit, was commemorated with a solemn high mass of requiem in SS. Peter and Paul's cathedral, Detroit, by the present Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher. According to custom, delegations of children from the parochial schools of the city attended the Mass and offered their Holy Communions for the repose of Bishop Foley's soul. Bishop Foley died Jan. 5. 1918.

Salutatory of Class of 1927

Following is the salutatory delivered to the graduating class of 1927 by Miss Margaret Shambaugh Miss Shambaugh has consented to its publication in full.

WISDOM IS WEALTH

"Webster defines wisdom as the quality of being wise; the ability to judge soundly and deal sagaciously with facts, especially as they relate to life and conduct, knowledge, with the capacity to make due use of it; perception of the best means and ends, etc.

He also defines wisdom as a title of honor and respect and in that, there is wealth more precious than possessions.

Plato said, "Perfect wisdom has four parts: viz; wisdom, the principle of doing things aright; justice, the principle of doing things equally in public and private; fortitude, the principle of not flying danger, but meeting it; and temperance, the principle of subdueing desires and living moderately."

When we choose our life work we look for that thing which will give us benefit and gain the best results, not only for our own good but for those around us. We should seek to know only the things worth knowing.

However difficult a task may seem or however many times we may fail in our efforts to accomplish worthy undertakings we should remember that faithfulness in each attempt will increase our powers and lead us on to victory.

Failure is not so much in missing the goal as in mistaking the path. A little more time for thought saves many a mistake.

The things that chiefly constitute wisdom are temperance, justice, fortitude and faith. To have all these is to have Wisdom, the most valued thing possible, for this is real wealth.

In a certain sense wealth means great possessions such as mines, land or money, but in a higher sense it means Wisdom. Wisdom is Power and he who has power controls Wealth.

Two of the most necessary traits in acquiring wisdom are Faith and Perseverance. One must have faith in God and in himself. This kind of a faith coupled with perseverance is at the foundation of Success.

Solomon, when asked to choose between riches and wisdom, chose wisdom. He, by that decision has a living name, has lived down through all these centuries and still lives as a man who made a wise choice.

Croecus, the last king of Lydia, is remembered for his wealth which has become proverbial and he is referred to as a man of riches, while Socrates, an ancient Greek philosopher is distinguished for his wisdom. Though he did not found a school of philosophy, he questioned men and suggested the right path to real knowledge. He created many enemies but also had many distinguished friends.

Now, which more brightly illuminates the pages of history, the wealth of Croecus or the wisdom of Socrates? The story of Croecus is one of dazzling riches but also one of sore disappointment and failure. The story of Socrates is that of a struggle for wisdom and his name has come down to us to teach us how to live. So may we in the words of Charles Kingsley:

> "Be good and let those who will, be clever;
> Do noble things, not dream them all day long.
> And so make life, death, and that vast forever,
> One Grand sweet song."

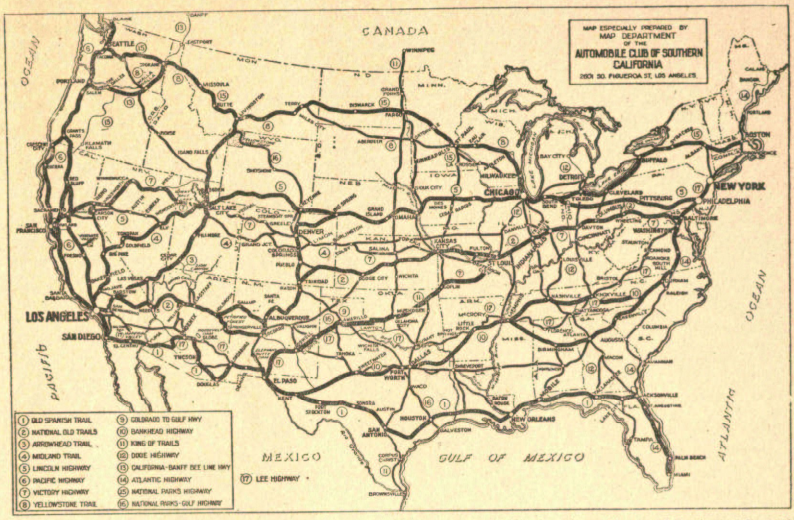
Thousands of Motorists Throng Roads To National Beauty Spots of West



The wide world beckons and the motorist is answering the vacation call. New roads, new conveniences and new services have made the whole United States almost as close as the wheel of one's car. Thousands and scores of thousands motorists all over the land are responding to the travel lure. They are going from each place and in all directions.

New roads in the far West this year and improved old roads have made practically every national beauty spot pleasantly accessible and there is already an indication that the great national parks will make records for visitors this year never before approached. But no matter how many come the parks will not be crowded. To the man in the East, park mean a green spot in a city. To the Westerner it means a great preserve of natural beauty, in many instances containing thousands of square miles. And it is equipped to take care of visitors. The visitors may either camp or may stop at mountain lodges as fine as any.

Some of the points that are now included on a complete all summer motor trip to the Pacific Coast alternating as between North and South on the go and return journey are:

Glacier National Park, Yellowstone National Park, the Columbia River Highway, the Snoqualmie Falls and Pass, Rainier National Park, the Mount Hood Loop, Crater Lake National Park and then the famous series in California—Mount Shasta, the Mount Lassen Volcanic National Park showing the only active volcano in the United States, the Redwood Highway, Muir Woods, Yosemite National Park with its matchless waterfalls and rock formation, the Sequoia National Park with its General Sherman Tree, thirty-six and one-half feet in diameter and with five thousand trees greater than ten feet in diameter in an area of two miles square, Los Angeles, Hollywood and Old Mexico. Then on the Sothern route, Zion National Park, Brice Canyon, the Kaibab National Forest, the Petrified Forest, the Grand Canyon and the residences of the pre-historic cliff dwellers, and Indian pueblos where the native American still lives much as he did before Cortez came to the shores of North America.

If any of our readers wish to make a motor journey to the Pacific Coast that touches Southern California on either the going or return journey, by special arrangement, the Automobile Club of Southern California will act as their guide and servant without charge. Write or telegraph the club, mentioning this paper, at its headquarters, Twenty-sixth and Figueroa streets, Los Angeles. Say from what point you will start, give the time of start and the time you hope to be back home again. Mention the several important places on the route that you want to visit. The Club will then send you complete detail route maps, selecting the go and return routes so that the journey will be pleasantest from a weather standpoint. Say whether you are going to camp out, camp in motor camps or stay in hotels. If specific information is wanted, make the reqest definitely in the communication. On arrival in Southern California the Automobile Club will make the visitor a guest member without charge. These courtesies are extended in return for the courtesies invariably shown to California motorists when traveling in the other parts of the United States. All of our readers intending the journey should avail themselves of the offer. It will make their journey decidedly more pleasant and workmanlike than if they pioneer.

Watch Out for Moth Which Produces Borers

The experts are now telling us that the corn borer worm is the progeny of a moth which begins its flight about June 15th as a butterfly and deposits its eggs on the ground and on weeds. This moth can fly twenty miles and lays on the average 400 eggs.

The entire surface of the quarantined area must be free of all corn refuse before this date if a 100 per cent control job is to be accomplished. The need of thoroughness is apparent when it is realized that the borers which are transformed into female moths are capable of laying 400 eggs. These eggs in turn hatch out into borers.

A corn borer moth is able to fly at least 20 miles, entomolgists have observed, and by laying eggs at intervals is able to infest a wide territory. It is evident that every borer which escapes destruction constitutes a menace to control work.

To protect the interests of those farmers who have cleaned up their premises in a satisfactory manner, it is essential that those who have not completed their clean-up operations should do so without further delay. Only through the cooperation of every farmer in the area will the borer be controlled, authorities say.

Report of the Sheriff's Office, Week Ending June 11th, 1927

On Tuesday night, June 7th, Otto Ziegler of Hillsdale was arrested in the act of delivering a pint of alleged moonshine to a thirsty customer. Otto lost his head and tried to break the bottle but was out of luck all the way around. This makes Otto's second debut before the Court on a liquor charge, he already having been bound over to the Circuit Court for trial on a previous violation. He appeared before Justice Aldrich on Wednesday and waived examination and was bound over to the Circuit Court under $1500 bail, which he was unable to furnish, and so remains in durance vile.

The same night, Officers armed with a Search Warrant went thru the home of Otto's famous brother Fred, who also attempted to dispose of some alleged fire water which he said he was afraid would get him in bad. It did. A quantity of alleged moon, wine and beer mash was seized in the raid, together with the person of Fred, himself. Fred waived examination before Justice Aldrich and was released on $1000 cash bond to appear at the October term of Court.

On Thursday night, the home of Geo. Lyons, 46 N. Manning St., Hillsdale was burglarized. A valuable Hudson seal fur coat, several dresses, etc. belonging to Mrs. Lyons were stolen. Officers are still working on the case.

The same night a Ford Sedan belonging to D. J. Strang, 220 N. Manning St. was stolen from a garage in the rear of his home. The car was recovered the next morning in a somewhat damaged condition. The mystery surrounding the theft and the wrecking of the car has been cleared up in a manner satisfactory to all.

We Print and We Guarantee

The Sign of The Four

By A. CONAN DOYLE

"Surely I can come with you, then?" said I.

"No; you can be much more useful if you will remain here as my representative. I am loath to go, for it is quite on the cards that some message may come during the day, though Wiggins was despondent about it last night. I want you to open all notes and telegrams, and to act on your own judgment if any news should come. Can I rely upon you?"

"Most certainly."

"I am afraid that you will not be able to wire to me, for I can hardly tell you where I may find myself. If I am in luck, however, I may not be gone so very long. I shall have news of some sort or other before I get back."

I heard nothing of him by breakfast-time. On opening the Standard, however, I found that there was a fresh allusion to the business. "With reference to the Upper Norwood tragedy," it remarked, "we have reason to believe that the matter promises to be even more complex and mysterious than was originally supposed. Fresh evidence has shown that it is quite impossible that Mr. Thaddeus Sholto could have been in any way concerned in the matter. He and the housekeeper, Mrs. Bernstone, were both released yesterday evening. It is believed, however, that the police have a clew to the real culprits, and that it is being prosecuted by Mr. Athelney Jones, of Scotland Yard, with all his well-known energy and sagacity. Further arrests may be expected at any moment."

"That is satisfactory so far as it goes," thought I. "Friend Sholto is safe, at any rate. I wonder what the fresh clew may be; though it seems to be a stereotyped form whenever the police have made a blunder."

I tossed the paper down upon the table, but at that moment my eye caught an advertisement in the agony column. It ran in this way:

"Lost.—Whereas, Mordecai Smith, boatman, and his son, Jim, left Smith's Wharf at or about three o'clock last Tuesday morning, in the steam launch Aurora, black with two red stripes; funnel black with a white band; the sum of five pounds will be paid to anyone who can give information to Mrs. Smith, at Smith's Wharf, or at 222B Baker Street, as to the whereabouts of the said Mordecai Smith and the launch Aurora."

This was clearly Holmes' doing. The Baker Street address was enough to prove that. It struck me as rather ingenious, because it might be read by the fugitives without their seeing in it more than natural anxiety of a wife for her missing husband.

It was a long day. Every time that a knock came to the door, or a sharp step passed in the street, I imagined that it was either Holmes returning or an answer to his advertisement. I tried to read, but my thoughts would wander off to our strange quest and to the ill-assorted and villainous pair whom we were pursuing. Could there be, I wondered, some radical flaw in my companion's reasoning? Might he be suffering from some huge self-deception? Was it not possible that his nimble and speculative mind had built up this wild theory upon faulty premises? I had never known him to be wrong; and yet the keenest reasoner may occasionally be deceived. He was likely, I thought, to fall into error through the over-refinement of his logic—his preference for a subtle and bizarre explanation when a plainer and more commonplace one lay ready to his hand. Yet, on the other hand, I had myself seen the evidence, and I had heard the reasons for his deductions. When I looked back on the long chain of curious circumstances, many of them trivial in themselves, but all tending in the same direction, I could not disguise from myself that even if Holmes' explanation were incorrect the true theory must be equally outre and startling.

At three o'clock in the afternoon there was a loud peal at the bell, an authoritative voice in the hall, and, to my surprise, no less a person than Mr. Athelney Jones was shown up to me. Very different was he, however, from the brusque and masterful professor of common sense who had taken over the case so confidently at Upper Norwood. His expression was downcast, and his bearing meek and even apologetic.

"Good-day, sir; good-day," said he. "Mr. Sherlock Holmes is out, I understand."

"Yes; and I cannot be sure when he will be back. But perhaps you would care to wait. Take that chair and try one of these cigars."

"Thank you; I don't mind if I do," said he, mopping his face with a red bandanna handkerchief.

"And a whisky and soda?"

"Well, half a glass. It is very hot for the time of year, and I have a good deal to worry and try me. You know my theory about this Norwood case?"

"I remember that you expressed one."

"Well, I have been obliged to reconsider it. I had my net drawn tightly around Mr. Sholto, sir, when pop! he went through a hole in the middle of it. He was able to prove an alibi which could not be shaken. From the time that he left his brother's room he was never out of sight of someone or other. So it could not be he who climbed over the roofs and through trap-doors. It's a very dark case and my professioned credit is at stake. I should be very glad of a little assistance."

"We all need help sometimes," said I.

"Your friend, Mr. Sherlock Holmes, is a wonderful man, sir," said he, in a husky and confidential voice. "He's a man who is not to be beat. I have known that young man go into a good many cases, but I never saw the case yet that he could not throw light upon. He is irregular in his methods, and a little quick, perhaps, in jumping at theories, but, on the whole, I think he would have made a most promising officer, and I don't care who knows it. I have had a wire fro mhim this morning, by which I understand that he has got some clew to this Sholto business. Here is his message."

He took the telegram out of his pocket and handed it to me. It was dated from Poplar at twelve o'clock. "Go to Baker Street at once," it said. "If I have not returned, wait for me. I am close on the track of the Sholto gang. You can come with us tonight if you want to be in at the finish."

"This sounds well. He has evidently picked up the scent again," said I.

"Ah, then he has been at fault, too," exclaimed Jones with evident satisfaction. "Even the best of us are thrown off sometimes. Of course, this may prove to be a false alarm; but it is my duty as an officer of the law to allow no chance to slip. But there is someone at the door. Perhaps this is he."

A heavy step was heard ascending the stairs, with a great wheezing and rattling as from a man who was sorely put to it for breath. Once or twice he stopped, as though the climb were too much for him, but at last he made his way to our door and entered. His appearance corresponded to the sounds which we had heard. He was an aged man, clad in seafaring garb, with an old pea-jacket buttoned up to his throat. His back was bowed, his knees were shaky, and his breath was painfully asthmatic. As he leaned upon a thick oaken cudgel his shoulders heaved in the effort to draw the air into his lungs. He had a colored scarf around his chin, and I could see little of his face save a pair of keen dark eyes, overhung by bushy white brows, and long gray side-whiskers. Altogether he gave me the impression of a respectable master mariner who had fallen into years and poverty.

"What is it, my man?" I asked.

He looked about him in the slow methodical fashion of old age.

"Is Mr. Sherlock Holmes here?" said he.

"No; but I am acting for him. You can tell me any message you have for him."

"It was to him himself I was to tell it," said he.

"But I tell you that I am acting for him. Was it about Mordecai Smith's boat?"

"Yes. I knows well where it is. An' I knows where the men he is after are. An' I knows where the treasure is. I knows all about it."

"Then tell me, and I shall let him know."

"It was to him I was to tell it," he repeated, with the petulant obstinacy of a very old man.

"Well, you must wait for him."

"No, no; I ain't goin' to lose a whole day to please no one. If Mr. Holmes ain't here, then Mr. Holmes must find it all out for himself. I don't care about the look of either of you, and I won't tell a word."

He shuffled toward the door, but Athelney Jones got in front of him.

"Wait a bit, my friend," said he. "You have important information, and you must not walk off. We shall keep you, whether you like it or not, until our friend returns."

The old man made a little run toward the door, but, as Athelney Jones put his broad back up against it, he recognized the uselessness of resistance.

"Pretty sort o' treatment this," he cried, stamping his stick. "I come here to see a gentleman and you two, who I never saw in my life, seize me and treat me in this fashion."

"You will be none the worse," I said. "We shall recompense you for the loss of your time. Sit over here on the sofa, and you will not have long to wait."

He came across sullenly enough, and seated himself with his face resting on his hands. Jones and I resumed our cigars and our talk. Suddenly, however, Holmes' voice broke in upon us.

"I think that you might offer me a cigar, too," he said.

We both started in our chairs. There was Holmes sitting close to us with an air of quiet amusement.

"Holmes!" I exclaimed. "You here? But where is the old man?"

"Here is the old man," said he, holding out a heap of white hair. "Here he is—wig, whiskers, eyebrows, and all. I thought my disguise was pretty good, but I hardly expected that it would stand that test."

"Ah, you rogue!" cried Jones, highly delighted. "You would have made an actor, and a rare one. You had the proper workhouse cough, and those weak legs of yours are worth ten pounds a week. I thought I knew the glint of your eye, though. You didn't get away from us so easily, you see."

"I have been working in that get-up all day," said he, lighting his cigar. "You see, a good many of the criminal classes begin to know me—especially since our friend here took to publishing some of my cases; so I can only go on the war path under some simple disguise like this. You got my wire?"

"Yes; that was what brought me here."

"How has your case prospered?"

"It has all come to nothing. I had to release two of my prisoners, and there is no evidence against the other two."

"Never mind. We shall give you two others in place of them. But you must put yourself under my orders. You are welcome to all the official credit, but you must act on the lines that I point out. Is that agreed?"

"Entirely, if you will help me to the men."

"Well, then, in the first place I shall want a fast police boat—a steam launch—to be at the Westminster Stairs at seven o'clock.

"That is easily managed. There is always one about there; but I can step across the road and telephone, to make sure."

"Then I shall want two staunch men, in case of resistance."

"There will be two or three in the boat. What else?"

"When we secure the men we shall get the treasure. I think that it would be a pleasure to my friend here to take the box around to the young lady to whom half of it rightfully belongs. Let her be the first to open it. Eh, Watson?"

"It would be a great pleasure to me."

"Rather an irregular proceeding," said Jones, shaking his head. "However, the whole thing is irregular, and I suppose we must wink at it. The treasure must afterwards be handed over to the authorities until after the official investigation."

"Certainly. That is easily managed. One other point. I should much like to have the details about this matter from the lips of Jonathan Small himself. You know I like to work the detail of my cases out. There is no objection to my having an unofficial interview with him, either here in my rooms or elsewhere, as long as he is efficiently guarded?"

"Well, you are master of the situation. I have had no proof yet of the existence of this Jonathan Small. However; if you can catch him, I don't see how I can refuse you an interview with him."

"That is understood then?"

"Perfectly. Is there anything else?"

"Only that I insist upon your dining with us. It will be ready in half an hour. I have oysters and a brace of grouse, with something a little choice in white wine. Watson, you have never yet recognized my merits as a housekeeper."

CHAPTER X

The End Of The Islander

Our meal was a merry one. Holmes could talk exceedingly well when he chose, and that night he did choose. He appeared to be in a state of nervous exaltation. I have never known him so brilliant. He spoke on a quick succession of subjects—on miracle plays, on mediaeval pottery, on Stradivarius violins, on the Buddhism of Ceylon, and on the warships of the future—handling each as though he had made a special study of it. His bright humor marked the reaction from his black depression of the preceding days. Athelney Jones proved to be a sociable soul in his hours of relaxation, and faced his dinner with the air of a bon vivant. For myself, I felt elated at the thoughts that we were nearing the end of our task, and I caught something of Holmes' gayety. None of us alluded during dinner to the cause which had brought us together.

When the cloth was cleared, Holmes glanced at his watch, and filled up three glasses with port. "One bumper," said he, "to the success of our little expedition. And now it is high time we were off. Have you a pistol, Watson?"

"I have my old service revolver in my desk."

"You had best take it, then. It is well to be prepared. I see that the cab is at the door. I ordered it for half-past six."

It was a little past seven before we reached the Westminster wharf, and found our launch awaiting us. Holmes eyed it critically.

"Is there anything to mark it as a police boat?"

"Yes—that green lamp at the side."

"Then take it off."

The small change was made; we stepped on board, and the ropes were cast off. Jones, Holmes, and I sat in the stern. There was one man at the rudder, one to tend the engines, and two burly police inspectors forward.

"Where to?" asked Jones.

"To the Tower. Tell them to stop opposite to Jacobson's Yard."

Our craft was evidently a very fast one. We shot past long lines of loaded barges as though they were stationary. Holmes smiled with satisfaction as we overhauled a river steamer and left her behind us.

"We ought to be able to catch anything on the river," he said.

"Well, hardly that. But there are not many launches to beat us."

"We shall have to catch the Aurora, and she has a name for being a clipper. I will tell you how the land lies, Watson. You recollect how annoyed I was at being balked by so small a thing?"

"Yes."

"Well, I gave my mind a thorough test by plunging into a chemical analysis. One of our greatest statesmen has said that a change of work is the best rest. So it is. When I had succeeded in dissolving the hydrocarbon which I was at work at, I came back to our problem of the Sholtos, and thought the whole matter out again. My boys had been up the river and down the river without result. The launch was not at any landing-stage or wharf, nor had it returned. Yet it could hardly have been scuttled to hide their traces—though that always remained as a possible hypothesis if all else failed. I knew that this man Small had a certain degree of low cunning, but I did not think him capable of anything in the nature of delicate finesse. That is usually a product of higher education. I then reflected that since he had certainly been in London some time—as we had evidence that he maintained a continual watch over Pondicherry Lodge—he could hardly leave at a moment's notice but would need some little time, if it were only a day, to arrange his affairs. That was the balance of probability, at any rate."

"It seems to me to be a little weak," said I. "It is more probable that he had arranged his affairs before ever he set out upon his expedition."

"No, I hardly think so. This lair of his would be too valuable a retreat in case of need for him to give it up until he was sure that he could do without it. But a second consideration struck me: Jonathan Small must have felt that the peculiar appearance of his companion, however much he may have top-coated him, would give rise to gossip, and possibly be associated with this Norwood tragedy. He was quite sharp enough to see that. They had started from their headquarters under cover of darkness, and he would wish to get back before it was broad light. Now, it was past three o'clock, according to Mrs. Smith, when they got the boat. It would be quite bright, and people would be about it an hour or so. Therefore, I argued, they did not go very far. They paid Smith well to hold his tongue, reserved his launch for the final escape, and hurried to their lodgings with the treasure box. In a couple of nights, when they had time to see what view the papers took, and whether there was any suspicion, they would make their way under the cover of darkness to some ship at Gravesend or in the Downs, where no doubt they had already arranged for passages to America or the Colonies."

"But the launch? They could not have taken that to their lodgings?"

"Quite so. I argued that the launch must be no great way off, in spite of its invisibility. I then put myself in the place of Small, and looked at it as a man of his capacity would. He would probably consider that to send back the launch or to keep it at a wharf would make pursuit easy if the police did happen to get on his track. How, then, could he conceal the launch and yet have her at hand when wanted? I wondered what I should do myself if I were in his shoes. I could only think of one way of doing it. I might hand the launch over to some boat-builder or repairer, with the directions to make a trifle change in her. She would then be removed to his shed or yard, and so be effectually concealed, while at the same time I could have her at a few hours' notice.

"That seems simple enough."

"It is just these very simple things which are extremely liable to be overlooked. However, I determined to act on the idea. I started at once in this harmless seaman's rig and inquired at all the yards down the river. I drew blank at fifteen, but at the sixteenth—Jacobson's—I learned that the Aurora had been handed over to them two days ago by a wooden-legged man, with some trivial directions as to her rudder. 'There ain't naught amiss with her rudder,' said the foreman. 'There she lies, with the red streaks.' At that moment who should come down but Mordecai Smith, the missing owner. He was rather the worse for liquor. I should not, of course, have known him, but he bellowed out his name and the name of his launch. 'I want her tonight at eight o'clock,' said he—'eight o'clock sharp, mind, for I have two gentlemen who won't be kept waiting.' They had evidently paid him well, for he was very flush of money, chucking shillings about to the men. I followed him some distance, but he subsided into an alehouse; so I went back into the yard, and, happening to pick up one of my boys on the way, I stationed him as a sentry over the launch. He is to stand at the water's edge and wave his handkerchief to us when they start. We shall be lying off in the stream, and it will be a strange thing if we do not take men, treasure, and all."

"You have planned it all very neatly, whether they are the right men or not," said Jones; "but if the affair were in my hands, I should have had a body of police in Jacobson's Yard, and arrested them when they came down."

"Which would have been never. This man Small is a pretty shrewd fellow. He would send a scout on ahead, and if anything made him suspicious, he would lie snug for another week."

"But you might have stuck to Mordecai Smith, and so been led to their hiding place," said I.

"In that case I should have wasted my day. I think that it is a hundred to one against Smith knowing where they live. As long as he has liquor and good pay, why should he ask questions? They send him messages what to do. No, I thought over every possible course, and this is the best."

While this conversation had been proceeding, we had been shooting the long series of bridges which span the Thames. As we passed the city, the last rays of the sun were gilding the cross upon the summit of St. Paul's. It was twilight before we reached the Tower.

"That is Jacobson's Yard," said Holmes, pointing to a bristle of masts and rigging on the Surrey side. "Cruise gently and down here under cover of this string of lighters." He took a pair of night-glasses from his pocket and gazed some time at the shore. "I see my sentry at his post," he remarked, "but no sign of a handkerchief."

"Suppose we go downstream a short way and lie in wait for them," said Jones, eagerly. We were all eager by this time, even the policemen and stokers, who had a very vague idea of what was going forward.

"We have no right to take anything for granted," Holmes answered. "It is certainly ten to one that they go downstream, but we cannot be certain. From this point we can see the entrance to the yard, and they can hardly see us. It will be a clear night and plenty of light. We must stay where we are. See how the folk swarm over yonder in the gaslight."

"They are coming from work in the yard."

"Dirty-looking rascals, but I suppose everyone has some little immortal spark concealed about him. You would not think it, to look at them. There is no (a priori) probability about it. A strange enigma is man!"

"Someone calls him a soul concealed in an animal," I suggested.

"Winwood Reade is good upon that subject," said Holmes. "He remarks that, while the individual man is an insoluble puzzle, in the aggregate he becomes a mathematical certainty. You can, for example, never foretell what any one man will do, but you can say with precision what an average number will be up to. Individuals vary, but percentages remain constant. So says the statistician. But do I see a handkerchief? Surely there is a white flutter over yonder."

"Yes; it is your boy," I cried. "I can see him plainly.

"And there is the Aurora," exclaimed Holmes, "and going like the devil. Full speed ahead, engineer. Make after that launch with the yellow light. By heaven, I shall never forgive myself if she proves to have the heels of us!"

She had slipped unseen through the yard entrance, and passed behind two or three small craft, so that she had fairly got her speed up before we saw her. Now she was flying down the stream, near in to the shore, going at a tremendous rate. Jones looked gravely at her and shook his head.

"She is very fast," he said. "I doubt if we shall catch her."

"We must catch her!" cried Holmes, between his teeth. "Heap it on, stokers! Make her do all she can! If we burn the boat we must have them!"

We were fairly after her now. The furnaces roared, and the powerful engines whizzed and clanked like a great metallic heart. Her sharp, steep prow cut through the still river water and sent two rolling waves to right and to left of us. With every throb of the engines she sprung and quivered like a living thing. One great yellow lantern in our bows threw a long, flickering funnel of light in front of us. Right ahead a dark blur upon the water showed where the Aurora lay, and the swirl of white foam behind her spoke of the pace at which she was going. We flashed past barges, steamers, merchant vessels, in and out, behind this one and around the other. Voices hailed us out of the darkness, but still the Aurora thundered on, and still we followed upon her track.

Pile it on, men; pile it on!" cried Holmes, looking down into the engine room, while the fierce glow from below beat upon his eager, acquiline face. "Get every pound of steam you can."

"I think we gain a little," said Jones, with his eyes on the Aurora.

"I am sure of it," said I. "We shall be up with her in a very few minutes."

At that moment, however, as our evil fate would have it, a tug with three barges in tow blundered in between us. It was only by putting our helm hard down that we avoided a collision, and before we could round them and recover our way, the Aurora had gained a good two hundred yards. She was still, however, well in view, and the murky, uncertain twilight was settling into a clear starlit night. Our boilers were strained to their utmost, and the frail shell vibrated and creaked with the fierce energy which was driving us along. We had shot through the Pool, past the West India Docks, down the long Deptford Reach, and up again after rounding the Isle of Dogs. The dull blur in front of us resolved itself now clearly enough into the dainty Aurora. Jones turned our search-light upon her, so that we could plainly see the figures upon her deck. One man sat by the stern, with something black between his knees, over which he stooped. Beside him lay a dark mass which looked like a Newfoundland dog. The boy held the tiller, while against the red glare of the furnace I could see old Smith, stripped to the waist, and shoveling coal for dear life. They may have had some doubt at first as to whether we were really pursuing them, but now, as we followed every winding and turning which they took, there could no longer be any question about it. At Greenwich we were about three hundred paces behind them. At Blackwall we could not have been more than two hundred and fifty. I have coursed many creatures in many countries during my checkered career, but never did sport give me such a wild thrill as this mad, flying man-hunt down the Thames. Steadily we drew in upon them, yard by yard. In the silence of the night we could hear the panting and clanking of their machinery. The man in the stern still crouched upon the deck, and his arms were moving as though he were busy, while now and then he would look up and measure with a glance the distance which still separated us. Nearer we came and nearer. Jones yelled to them to stop. We were not more than four boats' lengths behind them, both boats flying at a tremendous pace. It was a clear reach of the river, with Barking Level upon one side and the melancholy Plumstead Marshes upon the other. At our hail the man in the stern sprung up from the deck and shook his two clinched fists at us, cursing the while in a high, cracked voice. He was a good-sized, powerful man, and, as he stood poising himself with legs astride, I could see that from the thigh downward there was but a wooden stump upon the right side. At the sound of his strident, angry cries there was a movement in the huddled bundle upon the deck. It straightened itself into a little black man—the smallest I have ever seen—with a great, misshapen head and a shock of tangled, disheveled hair. Holmes had already drawn his revolver, and I whipped out mine at the sight of this savage, distorted creature. He was wrapped in some sort of dark ulster or blanket, which left only his face exposed; but that face was enough to give a man a sleepless night. Never have I seen features so deeply marked with all bestiality and cruelty. His small eyes glowed and burned with a somber light, and his thick lips were writhed back from his teeth, which grinned and chattered at us with a half-animal fury.

WARNS AUTOIST TO WATCH FAGS

Not "Woodman, spare that tree," but "Tourists, spare Michigan's forests—by installing ash trays in your automobiles," is the plea advanced by Professor A. K. Chittenden, head of the Michigan State College forestry department.

Professor Chittenden issued a statement urging automobile owners to provide themselves with ash receivers to carry in their cars, particularly when they travel through forest lands. By using this convenient and harmless receptacle instead of throwing cigarette and cigar stubs out the side of the car, where they may touch inflammable material, tourists can reduce the damage through forest fire, he declared.

Statistics quoted by Chittenden show that there were 1,499 forest fires in Michigan last year, burning more than 166,112 acres, and entailing a damage of $114,279. All taxpayers have a financial interest in state forestry, he stated, because the 361,000 acres in the forest reserve must be administered out of state tax funds.

"Forty years ago Michigan stood at the head of the list as a producer of timber in the United States," he asserted. "The fire hazard has kept Michigan from continuing to lead in the field. The citizens of the state are paying the bill over and over, each year. If they will spend the small amount necessary to have some type of ash receiver installed in their automobiles and then see that they are used, the number of forest fires will decrease. Some states require this by law. There should be enough public spirit in Michigan so that such a law is unnecessary. There are many ways in which we can help protect our forests, but this is one thing that can be done now before the fire season is upon us. One ounce of fire prevention will do more good than a ton of fire suppression."

LOGGING CAMP, LIKE PAST DAYS, LOCATES NEXT TO AIRPORT

At the Grand Rapids airport, just beyond the southern city limits, are being conducted lumbering operations which are reminiscent of the pioneer days, when millions of feet of western Michigan logs were sent to the mills.

Three large groves of trees, owned by the county and located on the old fair grounds, which subsequently became a work farm for county prisoners before it was converted into a flying field, were found to constitute a menace to aviation, and despite the board of supervisors' policy for conservation of wood lots, the board decided that the development of the port was of greater importance than the maintenance of the groves, which were composed for the most part of mature trees.

R. J. Thompson, of Cedar Springs, has the contract for the removal of the trees and he has established a real old-time lumber camp and sawmill. Heavy draft horses haul the fallen timber on wooden sleds through the brush to the mill. Railroad ties, fence posts, lumber and firewood are being manufactured.

SHIPPERS SET RECORD FOR LOWEST DEATH RATE

The Sparta Livestock Shipping Association lays claim to the lowest mortality rate in its shipments of any co-operative shipping association in Michigan.

In the seven years of its existence, it has shipped hundreds of cars of cattle to Detroit and Buffalo without a single loss. It has handled more than 10,000 calves without loss by death, and with only two crippled. Considering the greater risk, its swine losses have been proportionately low. Few lambs have died in transit.

Jesse R. Bettes, manager, attributes the association's showing to the practice of farmers in hauling, instead of driving their livestock to loading point.

OLDEST U. OF M. GRAD. IS RESIDENT OF MUSKEGON

Dr. John Parker Stoddard, 92 years old, of Muskegon, and oldest graduate of the University of Michigan, continues to take a keen interest in his alma mater. He first visited the U. of M. campus in 1855 as a student of the literary department. He was graduated with the class of 1859.

Dr. Stoddard is in good health and devotes a large portion of his time to reading at the Old People's home, where he is spending his last days.

MAN 76 SAVES MEMORY TREE

Descriptions of the lumberjack in Northern Michigan in Civil War days are graphically pictured by Allen Kennedy, Sr., 76 years old, living near Port Austin, Mich., on the 80-acre tract of land where he was born and that was cleared of its timber by his father a century ago.

The lumberjack has gone, but memories of him still linger.

"Slipping out into the cold from our bunks at sunrise, eating a hasty meal in the cookshack, and then working through the wet snows until the cook sounded his four-foot brass dinner horn at noontime—that was the life of a lumberjack. At night, after satisfying our hunger and hanging up our socks by the fire to dry, a fiddle would fill the bunkhouse with rasping, old-time jigs and square dances.

"Singing was not prohibited, unless the singer's voice broke too often or strayed too far from the original melody. This would often happen, and the victim would be showered with missiles, such as shoes, socks and firewood. Card playing was another form of amusement.

"The boys were quite mischievous in camp. To wake up in the morning and find your socks tied in your shoes, the laces in a dozen knots, was nothing unusual. Fights? Sure, we had plenty of them. A new arrival in camp always fought the champion of the lumberjacks. If he won, he would become champion. Sometimes the fighting would run to free-for-all, and then you would be lucky to come out of it without having a broken head.

"Breaking up of camp in spring was a glorious affair. Everyone received his winter's pay. Everyone was thirsty for the outside world. All would troop to town and line up at the bar in a corner saloon. The sky was the limit and the boys cared little for cost. For some it ended as suddenly as it commenced. They would wake up in a strange room, broke. Back to summer camp they would go and start work again. The lucky ones, who tarried at the corner only long enough for one or two drinks, found their way home and came back to camp in the fall."

Mr. Kennedy, still a strapping man, lives with his youngest son, Angus, 26 years old. Together they till the soil of their land. Around his home stand what he calls his "memory trees," a few aged pines that escaped the fate of their brothers.

LAKE TROUT PRODUCTION NOW RELIEVED ON WANE

Production of lake trout probably has reached its peak in the waters of both the United States and Canada.

Lake Michigan, owned entirely by the United States, supplies 66 per cent of the domestic catch. The fishery of the other Great Lakes is divided between the two countries by an international boundary.

It is probable that the lake trout of the other Great Lakes, except Lake Erie, do not migrate from the waters of one country to those of the other. If this theory is correct, imports which constitute 26 per cent of domestic consumption come mostly from sources that are available to Canadian fishermen only.

The principal market for lake trout is the mid-western part of the United States, and the largest single market is Chicago. The last survey showed the cost of the fresh domestic trout laid down in Chicago as 0.9 cent per pound more than that of the foreign product.

The frozen domestic lake trout in the same market cost 2.3 cents per pound more than the foreign.

DEER LICK ROADS FOR SALINE TASTE AND DIE

The report comes down from the deer country that health and happiness of our white-tailed deer is seriously threatened every time a highway crew spreads calcium chloride over the gravel turnpikes or sand roads.

The chemical, being high in saline compounds, lures the deer and they eat great quantities of it, which is quite likely to cause death.

FEW COUNTIES MINUS LAKES

For a county that has so much historic background connected with legends of the past, Saginaw county is unique in one respect. It is without a single lake.

Few indeed are the counties in Michigan, a state renowned the nation over for its picturesque and abundant lakes, where there does not exist even a solitary pond where small-mouth bass or deep-water bluegills may be found.

This is even more strange in view of the fact that historians of the past have often referred to Saginaw county as typical of the natural beauties to be found throughout the state. The stately pines, which once crowded the banks of the Saginaw river, were once made the subject of a piece of widely read poetry.

It is a disturbing fact that these same pines which meant so much to the prosperity of Saginaw and this vicinity of Michigan are practically extinct.

As relics of the past, there stand two small groups of these trees, both located on the west sid eriver road running to Midland. They tower above all the other trees along the road and their drooping boughs hang over the road. One group casts its shade on an antiquated farm residence which has seen better days.

Just why the woodsmen did not complete their ravages on the timber in this section and fell the trees in these two groups now standing is a source of mystery, although a story prevails that the owner of the site where stands the farm saw the possibility of these trees in the decorative scheme for his farm and insisted they be spared.

Thus, without lakes and its woods long a memory of past years, Saginaw county has only its rivers left as a source of interest to conservationists and those who love spots of natural beauty.

Four rivers flow through Saginaw county, joining as tributaries of the Saginaw river, which runs into the Saginaw bay and thence to Lake Huron. These rivers are the Cass, the Tittabawassee, the Shiawassee, and the Flint.

There are places of natural beauty along all four and recently there has been a sentiment to have the county purchase property for the public use as parks and picnic grounds.

POSTMASTER 48 YEARS AT EAGLE HARBOR IS OUT

The Eagle Harbor postoffice has a new postmaster for the second time in 48 years. Jacob Martin has been named to succeed George Rickard, who resigned recently to make his home in Detroit. Rickard's father was named postmaster at the Harbor in 1879, and he obtained the post upon the death of his parents.

The office, with the same equipment as when it was established, is being moved back to the little store at the Harbor where it was once the outpost of Michigan's frontier.

In the early days of the Civil War the little office was located in one of the town's three stores. Competition between the merchants for the office was keen.

After the war President Grant named a Republican postmaster.

Between 1869 and 1879 it was located in the Verhoven store.

MINOR SPORTS COME TO FRONT AT ANN ARBOR

Michigan's championships in the major sports are known far and wide, but now the minor sports claim attention, due to the remarkable showing made by Michigan this past season.

Michigan took first place in swimming and tennis, tied for the first place in hockey, ended second in wrestling, and the chances for a Wolverine title in golf appear bright. The season has produced four Big Ten championships, thus far, with Michigan on the long end.

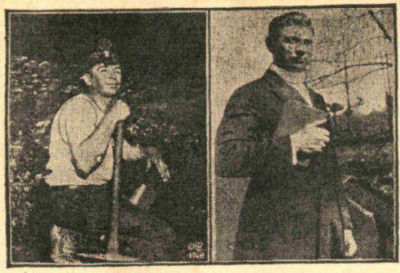
The majority of us would have to work twenty-four hours a day if we were to love our neighbors as they love themselves.

Many men and women tie up their dogs at night, but allow their children to run around promiscuously.

Many a widow gets busy and marries a man because he doesn't want her to.

The recording angel plays no favorites.

Minister--Miner and Athlete!



From Sewellsville, Ohio, comes the story that the Rev. H. O. Teagarden—shown at the right in the left composite photo—will attempt the Catalina Island swim this summer just to "show the world that a preacher is as good as any other man."

Rev. Teagarden's abilities are quite diversified. He served in the A. E. F. in France as an athletic director. He's a football, baseball and boxing star besides a good swimmer. To tune up his muscles, he has opened a coal mine on his farm where he mines—(see left photo)—his own and his neighbors' fuel. He puts in three days a week in the mine, two days preparing his sermons, and the sixth day he devotes to real exercise.

SEES RADIUM WONDER AGE

What a wonderful age!

Millions said it when Capt. Charles A. Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic; millions said it when a man stood at a telephone receiver in New York and listened to another's voice from London; millions say it daily in America, when listening to the radio, and yet one man in Detroit does not say it.

"Wonderful age, nothing!" this man, Charles F. Kettering, exclaimed. "The wonderful age is yet to come. We are merely crawling along, groping for the truly wonderful things that the future will see."

Inventor of the starter on automobiles, the Delco system, ethyl gas and various other things and now head of the General Motors Research Laboratory, a man who has so modernized his habits that he uses his own private airplane for all his trips out of the city, Mr. Kettering is in a position to scoff at man's egoism.

"When man discovered bronze and substituted that metal for his flint weapons and tools, no doubt he swaggered about and boasted of what a wonderful age he lived in," continued the scientist. "As each new invention came into the world, man first scoffed and later bragged about the wonderful age."

Mr. Kettering recalls that when he was a small boy in the town of his birth in Ohio, his home was lighted with electricity.

"A man in the same building threatened to move," recalls the scientist, "because he believed the electricity gave him rheumatism."

Mr. Kettering suggests that all cease their remarks about "the wonderful age," but this is difficult to do after a trip through the General Motors laboratories.

Here, for instance, one sees an electric furnace made for research work. Within it one sees hard steel at white heat, or, thoroughly melted. And yet, Mr. Kettering, when in the demonstrating mood, will place a cake of ice on top of the furnace and it will remain there without melting. On the ice he will place a skillet and in the skillet drop an egg. The egg fries, the ice underneath does not melt, and, under the ice a piece of steel glows to a white heat.

"And you say this is not a wonderful age?" one asks the scientist.

"All ver ysimple," he replied. "All we have is a transformer of very high frequency that sends out radiations. When we place in the furnace a piece of metal these radiations induce electric currents in the metal which make it hot. We all know that electric currents will not flow into ice, so the ice does not get hot. We get all our heat from the sun, whose rays pass through space that is absolutely zero, and it is only when they strike something they are converted into heat. The heat was generated in the steel and not the ice."

What is going to happen when gasoline runs out?

"I never worried much about that," said Kettering. "When the good Lord started this thing off he had it all planned, so I'm not going to worry much about it. By the time we run out of gasoline it will be so worthless that we won't want it.

"Radium is a very peculiar substance. It is one of the natural elements of the earth and has about the same power as the X-ray. We have a tiny bit of it in the laboratories. You can hold it up at night and it will light up the face of your watch. If you place it in your pocket for 30 minutes you would have a blistered place on your side the next day.

"You have noticed a steam boiler when the pressure gauge was 300 pounds and you thought it was awfully high pressure. But possibly few think of this other example of pressure. I open this knife blade, which has a tensile strength of maybe 100,000 pounds to the square inch, holding it together. In radium, the pressure acts the reverse, for some reason, and it shoots radium out with a pressure equivalent to the strength of the radium itself, which is equivalent to more than 100,000 pounds per square inch.

"In that property of radium, which shoots out particles, we have the forerunner of some of the spectacular things that will be done tomorrow."

TWO GIRLS STAR IN ATHLETICS

Two Michigan State College co-eds were awarded the highest possible honor by the college for participation in sports activities, when their names were placed upon the honor roll of the Women's Athletic Association for earning 1,500 points by participation in co-ed athletic events.

Four others were given the "S" for 1,000 points and 11 co-eds won monograms for 500 points.

Miss Arla Pangborn of Bad Axe and Miss Julia King of East Lansing were given a place on the 1,500-joint honor roll, which contains the name of only one other co-ed, Miss Jean Horning, who was graduated in 1926.

The four co-eds to receive the "S" were Miss Esther Caruso, Owosso; Miss Marjorie Sanford, East Lansing; Miss Phyllis Trautman, Perrington; Miss Nessie Castle, Lansing. Monograms went to Miss Marqorie Seigneur, Munson; Miss Lucile Bings, Oak Park, Ill.; Miss Beatrice Comstock, Fenwick; Miss Marian Eddy, Saginaw; Miss Alice Lange, Lansing; Miss Ellen Munger, St. Clair; Miss Gertrude Woodworth, Glen Ellyn, Ill.; Miss Margaret Amrhein, Plymouth; Miss Irene Chapin, Lansing; Miss Winifred Kalchtaler, Algonac; and Miss Frances Perrine, Saginaw.

BROILERS FROM SOUTH BREAK NORTHERN PRICES

Poultrymen in Western Michigan are expressing keen disappointment over the early break in broiler prices this spring. They are attributing the crash to the cotton growers switching from cotton to truck crops and poultry.

Heavy car lot shipments of poultry from the South have been made each week to New York since the first of April, and these shipments unsettled the market, farmers declare, before the northern crop started to move. Early this month 200 cars of poultry were being received weekly in New York, and Michigan poultrymen note the origin of these shipments was about a half dozen southern states. Missouri, Kentucky, Texas, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Kansas and Arkansas were among the heaviest shippers.

KNIFE AID TO FRUIT BEARING

Fruit trees respond favorably to a surgeon's knife, horticultural experiments at the Graham experiment station near Grand Rapids indicate.

Where Michigan State College pomologists used a knife last year on a row of young Northern Spy apple trees in efforts to force early productiveness, they got results, as the girdled branches and trees burst into full bloom this spring.

Other trees in the block, however, refused to be frightened by the pomologists' threats to "choke" them to death. Not a single blossom appeared in the rows where bands of rafia were securely tied about the limbs or where the branches were tied bow-like to the trunks.

The pomologists have abandoned hope of "strangling" the trees into bearing and now are preparing to practice more surgery in an effort to scare them into production next spring. Station workers soon will dig holes under the trees and chop their "toes" off. The ends of the roots will be severed, in a belief that this disturbance of the root systems may cause the trees to form fruit spurs upon which beautiful Spy apples may be produced next season.

DRAG FOR CULTIVATOR PRODUCES PRIZE CROPS

Crops soon may be grown without the aid of cultivators, in the opinion of many persons who heard Paul Clement, of Britton, and J. C. Redpath, of Kalamazoo, tell how they grew their champion corn and potato crops in 1926. Each produced prize crops with only one deep cultivation of the fields.

Clement's corn crop went 90 bushels of shelled corn to the acre, while Redpath's potatoes yielded 423 bushels per acre.

These growers substituted the drag for the cultivator. The harrow was run over the fields several times before and after the crops came up. With the weeds nearly all killed in this manner, they found it unnecessary to cultivate more than once during the season.

The belief is growing that farmers in the past have cultivated their crops too deeply and too often. Larger yields may be obtained, it is believed, by exercising the drag frequently immediately following planting.

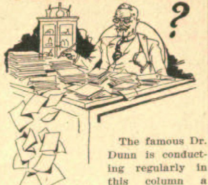
DO YOU KNOW ?



The famous Dr. Dunn is conducting regularly in this column a "QUESTION AND ANSWER BOX," dealing with a large number of subjects of general interest to the readers of this paper. You are invited to send in your questions to Dr. Dunn, care of this paper, and they will be given prompt consideration; and where deemed of general interest, will be answered through this column so far as space permits.

Dr. Dunn has for a long time been a member of the executive staff of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company of Detroit, and has become famous through his weekly broakcasting over WGHP. The doctor has had wide professional, commercial and sociological experience, and while the absolute accuracy of the answers to all questions is not guaranteed, the most authentic sources of information will be the basis of all replies.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

Why do installment payments stimulate business instead of destroying prosperity by top-heavy indebtedness of the individual? This is apparent in the living standards of the United State, as compared to that of Europe, where installment payments are almost unknown.

A. Political economists are somewhat divided as to the wisdom of such widespread credits as follow our system of installment payments for commodities. But they are generally agreed that the tremendously valuable natural resources to be found in the United States, coupled with our intensive methods of utilizing same, are two big factors that will continue to make for prosperity despite what otherwise might be described as "top-heavy indebtedness."

The natural wealth of the United States is almost incalculable; and the potential wealth of the individual living on this continent is consequently many times greater than that of persons inhabiting the Old World. Full utilization of all kinds of mechanical devices and the consequent tremendous mass production, has been largely responsible for the higher standard of living obtaining on this continent; and it is quite true that many things that our working men regard as necessities are stil rare luxuries to people living on the continent of Europe.

Q. Dear Mr. Dunn: What causes most fatal falls?

A. Most falls are due to carelessness on the part of individuals, or to lack of proper facilities. Thus, falls down stairways result from the lack of a hand-rail, the presence of sharp turns or narrow treads. Falls may be due to tripping over articles left on the steps. Cellar stairs are frequent menaces in the case of narrow treads, sharp turns and lack of hand-rails. Such stairs should be rebuilt or remodeled to make them safe.

Q. Dear Doctor Dunn:

Where can I obtain a reliable set of printed instructions for the operation and maintenance of a motor car? I have just purchased my first car and I want to take good care of it.

A. If you will write to the Automobile Division of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company, at 3154 Cass Avenue, Detroit, they will be pleased to send you a copy of their valuable publication, "Service Book for Motorists," which, in addition to instructions for the operation and maintenance of a motor car, contains some valuable legal pointers for the motorist. This book is free and every motorist should have one.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn: If the plaintiff in a suit growing out of an auto accident wins, can he seize the defendant's car? If there is no mortgage on the car, how would he get title even should he seize the car? Is it true that a person who loses a suit in this state growing out of an auto accident must go to jail in default of paying the judgment?

1. Yes, he can seize the defendant's car or any other property belonging to the defendant, and this property is then sold at a sheriff's or constable sale to the highest bidder.

2. When the plaintiff recovers a judgment he has an execution levied by the sheriff or constable, and the property seized is sold by the sheriff or constable, and the person purchasing it obtains title to the car, and the amount received from the sale of the car is applied on the plaintiff's judgment.

3. Yes, a man may be sent to jail on a body execution under such circumstances.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

When you are about to stop, start or turn, what should you do?

A. Always signal when preparing to stop, start or turn. If possible, signal by extending the arm, or have a good type of mechanical signaling device installed.

Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When I started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were pills, tablets and salt waters for the relief of constipation, and artificial remedies made from coal tar, which I did not believe were good for human beings to put into their systems. So I wrote a prescription for a laxative to prescribe to my patients.

The prescription for constipation that I used early in my practice, and which I put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, and I have never had reason to change it. I intended it for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

I am gratified to say that under successful management my prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and I believe if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

It is particularly pleasing to me to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

Sheriff's Weekly Report Week Ending June 4th, 1927

(Received last week)

On Thursday the Sheriff was called to Detroit in connection with the passing of worthless checks these checks amounting to $125 were issued on a Grand Rapids bank by a Doctor who is at present in the Wayne Co. Jail awaiting trial before a Federal Court. The checks reached the local merchants thru LaVerne Fitten of Hillsdale, who became acquainted with the Doctor while they were both in the Detroit Jail. Examination reveals the fact that the Doctor is wanted in other states on a similar charge, so it is safe to assume that the checks in the hands of the unfortunates here are worthless.

On Thursday evening, James Wallace, age 19, was arrested and charged with unlawfully driving away three automobiles. One was an Essex, the property of Mr. French, another was an Essex, the property of Chas Moine of Waldron, and the last was a Chandler Sedan, property of Mr. Gibson a student of Hillsdale College. Persistent and concentrated effort on the part of City and County Officers, brought this young man to the Bar of Justice. "Jimmy" said he didn't intend to steal anything but he didn't have any way to go see his girl, so he just "borrowed them". He was arraigned in Justice Court on Saturday, where he waived examination and was bound over to the October term of the Circuit Court, and his bail was fixed at $500. It was supplied by Mr. Hukill, of Ransom Township.

Clarence Tressler, who spent 20 days as a guest of Hillsdale Co. was released on Saturday.

Prisoners in the County Jail 3. Under sentence 1. Awaiting trial 2. Total 3.

Col. Earl H. Kerr, Sheriff.

Baccalaureate sermon was preached Sunday morning at the College Baptist church by President Spencer of Hillsdale to a class of 62 graduates, and the President chose for his subject the unique phrase "Three Cemeteries". He stated the basis of his sermon harked back to a country church flanked by God's acre and he defined the three classes of mankind as the Black, the Grey and the White cemeteries. He said the black contained the salt and criminal of the earth, was not sought after though often entered unexpectedly, the white typified the elite of earth the Godly and the righteous, was often sought but not always gained, while the grey was a mixture of both white and black and could combine good and bad—but was by far the most dangerous. He said by their epitaphs you could know them; Judas brought his own doom with money from his iniquity. He quoted from a Princeton College faculty man "That Leaders of Men are those with compasses in their heads and magnets in their pockets". He issued the usual exhortation to the Senior class as they should go out in the world and he thanked the City of Hillsdale for their interest in the Class. Splendid music was rendered by the choir assisted by special numbers from the music department. President Emeritus Mauck delivered the invocation. In illustration of different points President Spencer quoted random scripture among which we noted 2nd Kings, 9th Chapter, verses 30 to 37.

SOME FRUITS, TOO, MUST HAVE THEIR IRON

ALL human beings should have a proportion of iron in their diets, and the pineapple is one of the few fruits which requires this element in order to come successfully to maturity. The soil of Hawaii is a rich volcanic dust, but pineapples grow better in it with the addition of fertilizer in order to give them a balanced ration.

It was found long ago, however, that, though the soil contains much iron, this iron was combined with manganese, and prevented the plants from getting enough. In order to provide them with iron in the form in which they needed it, an "iron ration" was invented, and now they get it in the form of a spray while they are growing, and they keep green under this treatment, and bear delicious fruit.

Boys and girls in their teens are in special need of iron in their diet, and most of them will welcome it when it comes in the form of pineapple, whether in the fruit salad, the pie or cake, or, what may be liked best of all, the fruit cup. Mothers may be interested in trying some of these recipes.

Pineapple Salad: Make individual jellies with lemon jelly powder and the juice from canned sliced pineapple which is substituted for the water. When the jellies are beginning to set, drop into them small sections of sliced pineapple and blanched almonds. Serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise. This is equally nice as a dessert, in which case the jellies should be surrounded with mounds of whipped cream and served with lady-fingers.

Pineapple Pie: Drain the juice from a can of sliced Hawaiian pineapple. Heat one and a half cups milk. Mix one-half cup sugar, one-eighth teaspoon salt, and two tablespoons cornstarch and slowly add hot milk. Cook in double boiler until the cornstarch is thoroughly cooked. Pour on two beaten egg yolks and let cook in double boiler about two minutes, stirring all the time. Cool and add one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple, well drained, and one-half teaspoon vanilla. Pour into a baked crust and cover with a meringue made of two stiffly-beaten egg whites and two tablespoons sugar. Brown in a moderate oven.

Pineapple Cake: Cream one-half cup shortening and one cup sugar together until light and add two well-beaten egg yolks. Mix and sift two cups flour, one-quarter teaspoon salt, and four teaspoons baking powder. Add alternately with three-quarters cup syrup drained from crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Fold in two stiffly beaten whites of egg. Bake in layer cake pans in a moderate oven. Put pineapple icing between the layers and on top. The icing is made by adding drained crushed pineapple to a boiled icing.

Pineapple Punch: Mix together the juice drained from canned pineapple, the juice of lemons, simple syrup, and ginger ale. Dilute with water to suit the taste.

The old Lake Shore depot in this village has been struck off to Mrs. C. S. Wertz and will be torn down and re-erected at Round Lake where she has a lot. This will serve as a nucleus for a summer cottage. Operations of wrecking are now in progress and some of the excellent timber contained in this building was a surprise to all. Agent Ballard is nicely located in the old freight house on the east side of the track and most of us will agree that the present location is certainly an improvement in every way. Why the Railroad company did not build this depot on the east side of the rails originally no one can imagine.

The Junket To Washington

James Meeks who was chosen to represent the 4-H Clubs of this part of Michigan to the grand encampment at Washington D. C. Left here on Sunday June 12th going to Ann Arbor where he joined the Michigan delegation which went in three large touring cars overland by way of Niagara Falls, the beautiful Hudson River Valley and Princeton New Jersey. A card received from James written at Washing D. C. says he is enjoying to the fullest extent the advantages of the trip. The delegates are encamped at the foot of the Washington monument near the Potomac river, and Jim says the grounds looks like a sea of white tops, all electrically lighted and properly policed. They are sight seeing in New York City also, in fact it is planned to give the youngsters a wonderful education of the big cities of the East and life in general among the elite. It can no longer be said the farmers children are backwoodsmen. They have entered the realm of the higher experience which savors of real object lessons on the spot of what they have dreamed and studied about since they graduated from the primer class. The trip is being financed by the Clubs of the country and each state is represented by two boys and two girls. When these young folks return we shall expect they can edify us by descriptions of things supposed to be but not real unless you saw them. We hope the note books and cameras will constantly be on the work, at least they should be. No matter how long these young people live or where they go the impressions of this their first trip to the "land of Mystery" will always come back in pleasant unforgetable memories.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

The Sign of The Four

By A. CONAN DOYLE

"Fire if he raises his hand," said Holmes, quietly. We were within a boat's-length by this time, and almost within touch of our quarry. I can see the two of them now as they stood, the white man with his legs far apart, shrieking out curses, and the unhallowed dwarf, with his hideous face, and his strong, yellow teeth gnashing at us in the light of our lantern.

It was well that we had so clear a view of him. Even as we looked he plucked out from under his covering a short, round piece of wood, like a school-ruler, and clapped it to his lips. Our pistols rang out together. He whirled round, threw up his arms, and with a kind of choking cough fell sideways into the stream. I caught one glimpse of his venomous, menacing eyes amid the white swirl of the waters. At the same moment the wooden-legged man threw himself upon the rudder and put it hard down, so that his boat made straight in for the southern bank, while we shot past her stern, only clearing her by a few feet. We were round after her in an instant, but she was already nearly at the bank. It was a wild and desolate place, where the moon glimmered upon a wide expanse of marshland with pools of stagnant water and beds of decaying vegetation. The launch with a dull thud ran up upon the mud-bank, with her bow in the air and her stern flush with the water. The fugitive sprang out, but his stump instantly sank its whole length into the sodden soil. In vain he struggled and writhed. Not one step could he possibly take either forward or backward. He yelled in impotent rage, and kicked frantically into the mud with his other foot, but his struggles only bored his wooden pin the deeper into the sticky bank. When we brought our launch alongside he was so firmly anchored that it was only by throwing the end of a rope over his shoulders that we were able to haul him out, and to drag him, like some evil fish, over our side. The two Smiths, father and son, sat sullenly in their launch, but came aboard meekly enough when commanded. The Aurora herself was hauled off and made fast to our stern. A solid iron chest of Indian workmanship stood upon the deck. This, there could be no question, was the same that had contained the ill-omened treasure of the Sholtos. There was no key, but it was of considerable weight, so we transferred it carefully to our own little cabin. As we steamed slowly upstream again, we flashed our searchlight in every direction, but there was no sign of the islander. Somewhere in the dark ooze at the bottom of the Thames lie the bones of that strange visitor to our shores.

"See here," said Holmes, pointing to the wooden hatchway. "We were hardly quick enough with our pistols." There, sure enough, just behind where we had been standing, stuck one of those murderous darts which we knew so well. It must have whizzed between us at the instant that we fired. Holmes smiled at it, and shrugged his shoulders in his easy fashion, but I confess that it turned me sick to think of the horrible death which had passed so close to us that night.

CHAPTER XI

The Great Agra Treasure

Our captive sat in the cabin opposite the iron box for which he had done so much and waited so long to gain. He was a sunburned, reckless-eyed fellow with a network of lines and wrinkles all over his mahogany features, which told of a hard, open-air life. There was a singular prominence about his bearded chin, which marked a man who was not to be easily turned from his purpose. His age may have been fifty or thereabouts, for his black, curly hair was thickly shot with gray. His face, in repose, was not an unpleasing one, though his heavy brows and aggressive chin gave him, as I had lately seen, a terrible expression when moved to anger. He sat now with his handcuffed hands upon his lap, and his head sunk upon his breast, while he looked with his keen, twinkling eyes at the box which had been the cause of his ill-doings. It seemed to me that there was more sorrow than anger in his rigid and contained countenance. Once he looked up at me with a gleam of something like humor in his eyes.

"Well, Jonathan Small," said Holmes, lighting a cigar, "I am sorry that it has come to this."

"And so am I, sir," he answered, frankly. "I don't believe that I can swing over the job. I give you my word on the Book that I never raised my hand against Mr. Sholto. It was that little hell-hound Tonga who shot one of his cursed darts into him. I had no part in it, sir. I was as grieved as if it had been my blood relation. I welted the little devil with the slack end of the rope for it, but it was done, and I could not undo it again."

"Have a cigar," said Holmes; "and you had better take a pull out of my flask, for you are very wet. How could you expect so small and weak a man as this black fellow to overpower Mr. Sholto and hold him while you were climbing the rope?"

"You seem to know as much about it as if you were there, sir. The truth is that I hoped to find the room clear. I knew the habits of the house pretty well, and it was the time when Mr. Sholto usually went down to his supper. I shall make no secret of the business. The best defense that I can make is just the simple truth. Now, if it had been the old major, I would have swung for him with a light heart. I would have thought no more of knifing him than smoking this cigar. But it's cursed hard that I should be lagged over this young Sholto, with whom I had no quarrel whatever."

"You are under the charge of Mr. Athelney Jones, of Scotland Yard. He is going to bring you up to my rooms, and I shall ask you for a true account of the matter. You must make a clean breast of it, for if you do I hope that I may be of use to you. I think I can prove that the poison acts so quickly that the man was dead before you ever reached the room."

"That he was, sir! I never got such a turn in my life as when I saw him grinning at me with his head on his shoulder as I climbed through the window. It fairly shook me, sir. I'd have half killed Tonga for it, if he had not scrambled off. That was how he came to leave his club, and some of his darts, too, as he tells me, which I dare say, helped to put you on our track; though how you kept on it is more than I can tell. I don't feel no malice against you for it. But it does seem a queer thing," he added with a bitter smile, "that I, who have a fair claim to nigh upon half a million of money, should spend the first half of my life building a break-water in the Andamans, and am likely to spend the other half digging drains at Dartmoor. It was an evil day for me when first I clapped eyes upon the merchant Achmet, and had to do with the Agra treasure, which never brought anything but curses upon the man who owned it. To him it brought murder; to Major Sholto it brought fear and guilt; to me it has meant slavery for life."

At this moment Anthelney Jones thrust his broad face and heavy shoulders into the tiny cabin. "Quite a family party," he remarked. "I think I shall have a pull at that flask, Holmes. Well, I think we may all congratulate each other. Pity we didn't take the other alive; but there was no choice. I say, Holmes, you must confess that you cut it rather fine. It was all we could do to overhaul her."

"'All is well that ends well," said Holmes. "But I certainly did not know that the Aurora was such a clipper."

"Smith says she is one of the fastest launches on the river, and that if he had had another man to help him with the engines we should never have caught her. He swears he knew nothing of this Norwood business."

"Neither he did," cried our prisoner; "not a word. I chose his launch, because I heard that she was a flyer. We told him nothing, but we paid him well, and he was to get something handsome if we reached our vessel, the Esmeralda, at Gravesend, outward bound for the Brazils."

"Well, if he has done no wrong, we shall see that no wrong comes to him. If we are pretty quick in catching our men, we are not so quick in condemning them." It was amusing to notice how the consequential Jones was already beginning to give himself airs on the strength of the capture. From the slight smile which played over Sherlock Holmes' face, I could see that the speech had not been lost upon him.

"We will be at Vauxhall Bridge presently," said Jones, "and shall land you, Doctor Watson, with the treasure-box. I need hardly tell you that I am taking a very grave responsibility upon myself in doing this. It is most irregular; but, of course, an agreement is an agreement. I must, however, as a matter of duty, send an inspector with you, since you have so valuable a charge. You will drive, no doubt?"

"Yes, I shall drive."

"It is a pity there is no key, that we may make an inventory first. You will have to break it open. Where is the key, my man?"

"At the bottom of the river," said Small, shortly.

"Hum! There was no use your giving this unnecessary trouble. We have had work enough already through you. However, doctor, I need not warn you to be careful. Bring the box back with you to Baker Street rooms. You will find us there, on our way to the station."

They landed me at Vauxhall, with my heavy iron box, and with a bluff, genial inspector as my companion. A quarter of an hour's drive brought us to Mr. Cecil Forrester's. The servant seemed surprised at so late a visitor. Mrs. Cecil Forrester was out for the evening, she explained, and likely to be very late. Miss Morstan, however, was in the drawing-room; so to the drawing-room I went, box in hand, leaving the obliging inspector in the cab.

She was seated by the open window, dressed in some sort of white, diaphanous material, with a little touch of scarlet in the neck and waist. The soft light of a shaded lamp fell upon her as she leaned back in the basket-chair, playing over her sweet, grave face, and tinting with a dull, metallic sparkle the rich coils of her luxuriant hair; one white arm and hand drooped over the side of the chair, and her whole pose and figure spoke of an absorbing melancholy. At the sound of my footfall she sprang to her feet, however, and a bright flush of surprise and of pleasure colored her cheeks.

"I heard a cab drive up," she said. "I thought that Mrs. Forrester had come back very early, but I never dreamed that it might be you. What news have you brought me?"

"I have brought something better than news," said I, putting down the box upon the table, and speaking jovially and boisterously, though my heart was heavy within me. "I have brought you something which is worth all the news in the world. I have brought you a fortune."

She glanced at the iron box. "Is that the treasure, then?" she asked, cooly enough.

"Yes, this is the great Agra treasure. Half of it is yours and half is Thaddeus Sholto's. You will have a couple of hundred thousand each. Think of that. An annuity of ten thousand pounds. There will be few richer young ladies in England. Is it not glorious?"

I think that I must have been rather overacting my delight, and that she detected a hollow ring in my congratulations, for I saw her eyebrows rise a little, and she glanced at me curiously.

"If I have it," said she, "I owe it to you."

"No, no," I answered; "not to me, but to my friend, Sherlock Holmes. With all the will in the world, I could never have followed up a clew which has taxed even his analytical genius. As it was, we very nearly lost it at the last moment."

"Pray sit down and tell me all about it, Doctor Watson," said she.

I narrated briefly what had occurred since I had seen her last—Holmes's new method of search, the discovery of the Aurora, the appearance of Athelney Jones, our expedition in the evening, and the wild chase down the Thames. She listened, with parted lips and shining eyes, to my recital of our adventures. When I spoke of the dart which had so narrowly missed us, she turned so white that I feared she was about to faint.

"It is nothing," she said, as I hastened to pour her out some water. "I am all right again. It was a shock to me to hear that I had placed my friends in such horrible peril."

"That is all over," I answered. "It was nothing. I will tell you no more gloomy details. Let us turn to something brighter. There is the treasure. What could be brighter than that? I got leave to bring it with me, thinking that it would interest you to be the first to see it."

"It would be of the greatest interest to me," she said. There was no eagerness in her voice, however. It struck her, doubtless, that it might seem ungracious upon her part to be indifferent to a prize which had cost so much to win.

"What a pretty box!" she said, stooping over it. "This is Indian work, I suppose?"

"Yes; it is Benares metal-work."

"And so heavy!" she exclaimed, trying to raise it. "The box alone must be of some value. Where is the key?"

"Small threw it into the Thames," I answered. "I must borrow Mrs. Forrester's poker." There was, in the front, a thick and broad hasp, wrought in the image of a sitting Buddha. Under this I thrust the end of the poker and twisted it outward as a lever. The hasp sprung open with a loud snap. With trembling fingers I flung back the lid. We both stood gazing in astonishment. The box was empty!

No wonder that it was heavy. The iron-work was two-thirds of an inch thick all round. It was massive, well made, and solid, like a chest constructed to carry things of great price, but not one shred or crumb of metal or jewelry lay within it. It was absolutely and completely empty.

"The treasure is lost," said Miss Morstan, calmly.

As I listened to the words and realized what they meant, a great shadow seemed to pass from my soul. I did not know how this Agra treasure had weighed me down until now that it was finally removed. It was selfish, no doubt, disloyal, wrong, but I could realize nothing save that the golden barrier was gone from between us.

"Thank God!" I ejaculated from my very heart.

She looked at me with a quick, questioning smile. "Why do you say that?" she asked.

"Because you are within my reach again," I said, taking her hand. She did not withdraw it. "Because I love you, Mary, as truly as ever a man loved a woman. Because this treasure, these riches, sealed my lips. Now that they are gone, I can tell you how I love you. That is why I said, 'Thank God'."

"Then I say, 'Thank God,' too," she whispered, as I drew her to my side. Whoever had lost a treasure I knew that night that I had gained one.

CHAPTER XII

The Strange Story of Jonathan Small

A very patient man was the inspector in the cab for it was a weary time before I rejoined him. His face clouded over when I showed him the empty box.

"There goes the reward!" said he, gloomily. "Where there is no money there is no pay. This night's work would have been worth a tenner each to Sam Brown and me, if the treasure had been there."

"Mr. Thaddeus Sholto is a rich man," I said. "He will see that you are rewarded, treasure or no treasure."

The inspector shook his head despondently, however. "It's a bad job," he repeated; "and so Mr. Athelney Jones will think."

His forecast proved to be correct, for the detective looked blank enough when I got to Baker Street and showed him the empty box. They had only just arrived, Holmes, the prisoner, and he, for they had changed their plans so far as to report themselves at a station upon the way. My companion lounged in his armchair with his usual listless expression, while Small sat stolidly opposite to him with his wooden leg cocked over his sound one. As I exhibited the empty box, he leaned back in his chair and laughed aloud.

"This is your doing, Small," said Athelney Jones, angrily.

"Yes, I have put it away where you shall never lay hand upon it," he cried, exultantly. "It is my treasure; and if I can't have the loot I'll take darned good care that no one else does. I tell you that no living man has any right to it, unless it is three men who are in the Andaman convict-barracks and myself. I know now that I cannot have the use of it, and I know that they cannot. I have acted all through for them as much as for myself. It's been the sign of four with us always. Well I know that they would have had me do just what I have done, and throw the treasure into the Thames rather than let it go to kith or kin of Sholto or of Morstan. It was not to make them rich that we did for Achmet. You'll find the treasure where the key is, and where little Tonga is. When I saw that your launch must catch us, I put the loot in a safe place. There are no rupees for you this journey."

"You are deceiving us, Small," said Athelney Jones, sternly. "If you had wished to throw the treasure into the Thames, it would have been easier for you to have thrown box and all."

"Easier for me to throw, and easier for you to recover," he answered, with a shrewd, sidelong look. "The man that was clever enough to hunt me down is clever enough to pick an iron box from the bottom of a river. Now that they are scattered over five miles or so, it may be a harder job. It went to my heart to do it, though. I was half mad when you came up with us. However, there's no good grieving over it. I've had ups in my life, and I've had downs, but I've learned not to cry over spilled milk."

"This is a very serious matter, Small," said the detective. "If you had helped justice, instead of thwarting it in this way, you would have had a better chance at your trial."

"Justice?" snarled the ex-convict. "A pretty justice! Whose loot is this, if it is not ours? Where is the justice that I should give it up to those who had never earned it? Look how I have earned it. Twenty long years in that fever-ridden swamp, all day at work under the mangrove tree, all night chained up in the filthy convict-huts, bitten by mosquitoes, racked with ague, bullied by every cursed black-faced policeman who loved to take it out of a white man. That was how I earned the Agra treasure; and you talk to me of justice because I cannot bear to feel that I have paid this price only that another may enjoy it! I would rather swing a score of times, or have one of Tonga's darts in my hide, than live in a convict's cell and feel that another man is at his ease in a palace with the money that should be mine!" Small had dropped his mask of stoicism, and all this came out in a wild whirl of words, while his eyes blazed, and the handcuffs clanked together with the impassioned movement of his hands. I could understand, as I saw the fury and the passion of the man, that it was no groundless or unnatural terror which had possessed Major Sholto when he first learned that the injured convict was upon his track.

"You forget that we know nothing of all this," said Holmes, quietly. "We have not heard your story, and we cannot tell how far justice may originally have been on your side."

"Well, sir, you have been very fair-spoken to me, though I can see that I have you to thank that I have these bracelets upon my wrists. Still, I bear no grudge for that. It is all fair and above-board. If you want to hear my story, I have no wish to hold it back. What I say to you is God's truth, every word of it. Thank you; you can put the glass beside me here, and I'll put my lips to it if I am dry.

"I am a Worcestershire man myself—born near Pershore. I dare say you would find a heap of Smalls living there now if you were to look. I have often thought of taking a look round there, but the truth is that I was never much of a credit to the family, and I doubt if they would be so very glad to see me. They were all steady chapel-going folk, small farmers, well known and respected over the countryside, while I was always a bit of a rover. At last, however, when I was about eighteen, I gave them no more trouble, for I got into a mess over a girl, and could only get out of it by taking the queen's shilling and joining the Third Buffs, which was just starting for India.

"I wasn't destined to do much soldiering, however. I had just got past the goose-step, and learned how to handle my musket, when I was fool enough to go swimming in the Ganges. Luckily for me, my company sergeant, John Holder, was in the water at the same time, and he was one of the finest swimmers in the service. A crocodile took me, just as I was half-way across, and nipped off my right leg, as clean as a surgeon could have done it, just above the knee. What with the shock and loss of blood, I fainted, and should have been drowned if Holder had not caught hold of me and paddled for the bank. I was five months in the hospital over it, and when at last I was able to limp out of it with this timber toe strapped to my stump, I found myself invalided out of the army and unfitted for any active occupation.

"I was, as you can imagine, pretty down on my luck at this time, for I was a useless cripple, though not yet in my twentieth year. However, my misfortune soon proved to be a blessing in disguise. A man named Abelwhite, who had come out there as an indigo-planter, wanted an overseer to look after his coolies and keep them up to their work. He happened to be a friend of our colonel's, who had taken an interest in me since the accident. To make a long story short, the colonel recommended me strongly for the post, and, as the work was mostly to be done on horseback, my leg was no great obstacle, for I had enough knee left to keep a good grip on the saddle. What I had to do was to ride over the plantation, to keep an eye on the men as they worked, and to report the idlers. The pay was fair, I had comfortable quarters and altogether I was content to spend the remainder of my life in indigo-planting. Mr. Abelwhite was a kind man, and he would often drop into my little shanty and smoke a pipe with me, for white folk out there feel their hearts warm to each other as they never do here at home.

"Well, I was never in luck's way long. Suddenly, without a note of warning, the great mutiny broke upon us. One month India lay as still and peaceful, to all appearance, as Surrey or Kent; the next there were two hundred thousand black devils let loose, and the country was a perfect hell. Of course, you know all about it, gentlemen, a deal more than I do, very like, since reading is not in my line. I only know what I saw with my own eyes. Our plantation was at a place called Muttra ,near the border of the Northwest Provinces. Night after night the whole sky was alight with the burning bungalows, and day after day we had small companies of Europeans passing through our estate, with their wives and children, on their way to Agra, where were the nearest troops. Mr. Abelwhite was an obstinate man. He had it in his head that the affair had been exaggerated, and that it would blow over as suddenly as it had sprung up. There he sat on his veranda, drinking whisky-pegs and smoking cheroots, while the country was in a blaze about him. Of course we stuck by him, I and Dawson, who, with his wife, used to do the bookwork and the managing. Well, one fine day the crash came. I had been away on a distant plantation, and was riding slowly home in the evening, when my eye fell upon something all huddled together at the bottom of a steep nullah. I rode down to see what it was, and the cold struck through my heart when I found it was Dawson's wife, all cut into ribbons, and half-eaten by jackals and native dogs. A little further up the road Dawson himself was lying on his face, quite dead, with an empty revolver in his hand, and four Sepoys lying across one another in front of him. I reined up my horse, wondering which way I should turn, but at that moment I saw thick smoke curling up from Abelwhite's bungalow and the flames beginning to burst through the roof. I knew then that I could do my employer no good, but would only throw my own life away if I meddled in the matter. From where I stood I could see hundreds of the black fiends, with their red coats still on their backs, dancing and howling round the burning house. Some of them pointed at me, and a couple of bullets sang past my head; so I broke away across the paddy-fields, and found myself late at night safe within the walls at Agra.

"As it proved, however, there was no great safety there, either. The whole country was up like a swarm of bees. Wherever the English could collect in little bands, they held just the ground that their guns commanded. Everywhere else they were helpless fugitives. It was a fight of the millions against the hundreds; and the cruelest part of it was that these men that we fought against, foot, horse, and gunners, were our own picked troops, whom we had taught and trained, handling our own weapons, and blowing our own bugle-calls. At Agra there were the Third Bengal Fusiliers, some Sikhs, two troops of horse, and a battery of artillery. A volunteer corps of clerks and merchants had been formed, and this I joined, wooden leg and all. We went out to meet the rebels at Shahgunge early in July, and we beat them back for a time, but our powder gave out, and we had to fall back upon the city. Nothing but the worst news came to us from every side—which is not to be wondered at, for if you look at the map you will see that we were right in the heart of it. Lucknow is rather better than a hundred miles to the east, and Cawnpore about as far to the south. From every point on the compass there was nothing but torture, and murder, and outrage.

"The city of Agra is a great place, swarming with fanatics and fierce devil-worshipers of all sorts. Our handful of men were lost among the narrow, winding streets. Our leader moved across the river, therefore, and took up his position in the old fort of Agra. I don't know if any of you gentlemen have ever read or heard anything of that old fort. It is a very queer place—the queerest that ever I was in, and I have been in some rum corners, too. First of all, it is enormous in size. I should think that the inclosure must be acres and acres. There is a modern part, which took all our garrison, women, children, stores, and everything else, with plenty of room over. But the modern part is nothing like the size of the old quarter, where nobody goes, and which is given over to the scorpions and the centipedes. It is all full of great, deserted halls, and winding passages, and long corridors twisting in and out, so that it is easy enough for folks to get lost in it. For this reason it was seldom that anyone went into it, though now and again a party with torches might go exploring.

"The river washes along the front of the old fort, and so protects it, but on the sides and behind there are many doors, and these had to be guarded, of course, in the old quarter as well as in that which was actually held by our troops. We were short-handed, with hardly men enough to man the angles of the building and to serve the guns. It was impossible for us, therefore, to station a strong guard at every one of the innumerable gates. What we did was to organize a central guard-house in the middle of the fort, and to leave each gate under the charge of one white man and two or three natives. I was selected to take charge during certain hours of the night of a small, isolated door upon the southwest side of the building. Two Sikh troopers were placed under my command, and I was instructed, if anything went wrong, to fire my musket, when I might rely upon help coming at once from the central guard. As the guard was a good two hundred paces away, however, and as the space between was cut up into a labyrinth of passages and corridors, I had great doubts as to whether they could arrive in time to be of any use in case of actual attack.

FARMER TO BE TEACHER AFTER EXTENSION COURSE

Lessons in soil management and poultry husbandry will be taught to farmers in extension schools now being arranged in a dozen or more counties by Michigan State College.

Soils schools will be held in eight counties, according to present plans. College specialists will meet with groups of farmers to give them instruction in soil management. Each member of these groups will be expected to relay the lesson to similar groups in their local community.

Similar schools in poultry husbandry will be held this summer in 12 counties, six in eastern Michigan and six on the west side of the state. Special instruction will be given in poultry culling, feeding, breeding and housing.

PUT SHRINE TO FR. MARQUETTE

A bluff, overlooking L[illegible], near where the Pere Marquette [illegible]s its way into Lake Michigan, is to become a shrine to the memory of Fr. Jacques Marquette, famous French Jesuit missionary and explorer, who played such an important part in the early history of North America, and especially the Great Lakes region. There on the exact spot, where Fr. Marquette died May 18, 1675, a granite monument is to be erected by the students of Marquette University of Milwaukee. Every year pilgrimages will be made across the lake to the shrine.

And while Marquette University prepares to erect its monument, a Michigan city, St. Ignace, is to honor the memory of Fr. Marquette. It was 250 years ago this summer that the body of Fr. Marquette was borne tenderly in a birch bark canoe by friendly Indians from Ludington to St. Ignace, where it was buried under the altar of his chapel, erected in 1771. To make the St. Ignace event more significant, it was just 50 years ago this summer that the grave was discovered by Fr. Edward Jacker, a pastor of St. Ignace.

Once more Indians will paddle their way up Lake Michigan in birch bark canoes, and land on the shores of St. Ignace. Every effort will be made by St. Ignace and Mackinaw County to reproduce the historical scene of 250 years ago. Today, however, thousands are expected to line the shore as the flotilla arrives, while 250 years ago, two priests, Frs. Nource and Pierson, greeted the Indians on their arrival and bore it to the resting place under the altar.

The chapel was destroyed by fire in 1706, and it was not until 171 years later that the grave was discovered. Then a monument was erected by St. Ignace to the memory of Fr. Marquette, directly over the altar where the body was buried, and every year hundreds of tourists and others stop to pay their respects to the memory of the missionary.

Fr. Marquette was born in Laon, France, June 1, 1637, and it was in 1666 that he arrived in New France as a missionary priest. In Quebec he made preparations for his life among the savages, spending two years learning the languages and the life of the Indians. In 1668 Fr. Marquette left Montreal for Sault Sainte Marie, but later went to La Pointe Mission on Lake Superior. Two years later this mission was given up because of the inability of the Huron tribe to defe[illegible] itself against the Sioux. Fr. Marquette joined the Hurons in their fight to Mackinaw, and at St. Ignace he built his mission.

It was Marquette's exploration of the Mississippi that hastened his death.

EVERY MEMBER OF FAMILY BORN ON NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Every member of the Charles Converse family, of South Haven, was born on a National holiday.

The father was born on Lincoln's birthday, and his four children were born successively on Christmas Day, New Year's Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day.

Mrs. Peter Murray, of Normal, Ill., the eldest daughter, was born on Christmas Day, 1887.

Mrs. Ollie Beck, of Fort Atkinson, Wis., followed on New Year's Day, 1889.

Mrs. Foster Dillman, of South Haven, on Thanksgiving Day, 1893.

The baby of the family, Mrs. Iva McVeigh, of Chicago, arrived on Christmas Day, 1895. Mrs. Dillman's son, Robert, was born on St. Valentine's day.

The father resides in Florida.

Mathematicians have figured that the chance of any member of a family of four being born on a holiday is only one in 36. The chance of all, including the father and grandchild, being born on holidays, is only one in 50,000,000.

DEAN DAY IS NAMED TO ASSIST DR. LITTLE

Dean Edmund E. Day, of the school of business administration, was appointed dean of administration of the University of Michigan. His new duties will be to assist Dr. Clarence Cook Little, the president, in carrying out changes in the educational program of the university, which the regents contemplate.

Dean Day was granted a leave of absence for the academic year of 1927-28, to do research work for the Anna Spellman Rockefeller Foundation. An acting dean of the school of business administration will be appointed later. Dean Day will assume his new duties in the fall of 1928.

NATURE LAYS CITIES' SITES

It is the [illegible] geographical conditions, in the [illegible] which determine, far in advance of civilized human settlement, the locations of the permanent cities of the world, and which dictate which shall become of primary, secondary or minor importance. They even control to a considerable degree the allotment of the land into private ownership, because common necessity is more influential than private ambition or greed.

The shore lines of Lake Superior, Huron and Michigan have a water frontage of nearly, if not quite, 2,000 miles, with a tributary hinterland of many thousands of square miles of territory which is one of the richest in the world in its natural resources. Those resources become commercial products which seek a market by the cheapest and most convenient transportation facilities, and all this commerce or exchange of human necessities has its most convenient and available highway through the straits between Lake Huron and Lake Erie. Detroit owes its first establishment to the fact that here the river had its narrowest reach with moderately high bluffs on either side, making it the strategic point for erecting defenses.

For more than 120 years after the first founding of Detroit there was no common highway of practical utility reaching into the interior. The one common transportation facility for all the people was the water of the river and lakes and every tributary stream capable of floating a canoe. Because of this limitation, prudence decreed that no great landholder should be permitted to monopolize a very large water frontage to his own private use. As a consequence the entire water frontage was divided into narrow strips from one to three arpents in width.

The variable French arpent was finally standardized by the United States Government at 192.24 feet for the purpose of adapting the old French land measurements to English measure. Therefore the frontage of the smaller farms was less than 200 feet and that of the larger ones less than 600. For a long time nobody cared how far these "private claims," as they were termed, extended back into the country. The owners claimed that they were without interior limits, but the government finally limited them to

When one examines a survey map of this region as it was held in private ownership 120 years ago, he discovers [illegible] tiny square of a little more than half a mile in area designated as the city of Detroit, and along the water front on either side of that, extending from the River St. Clair to the River Maumee, a nal

Maumee, an almost endless series of these narrow ribbon farms. Wherever a tributary stream, like the Ecorse, River Rouge, Huron and Clinton entered the Detroit River or the lakes, the frontage of the ribbon farms was faced upon these streams and the final adjustment of these claims by the Government and their mapping by surveyors proved a task of almost baffling complexity.

U. OF M. GIRLS AT SUMMER CAMP HAVE NO FEAR OF MICE

Femininity carries with it the connotation of timidity, but at the summer biological camp of the University of Michigan the women students show that they are unlike many of their sex who jump upon a chair if a mouse appears in the room, or who grow hysterical if a snake is seen. More women than men attended the camp last summer, and they are said by their instructors to be just as fearless in pursuing their biological studies as are their male companions.

Many students at the University are planning to spend their vacation months at one of the investigational camps conducted by the summer session of the institution. A capacity enrollment of 75 has already been made for the Biological Station situated on the shores of Douglas Lake, which is about equidistant from Cheboygan, Mackinaw City and Petoskey.

This station, which gives the students actual contact with the out-of-doors, a phase of biology that is neglected by many universities, is performing a three-fold service. Many persons who will be teachers in the educational institutions throughout the world are receiving training, investigators are being molded, and a large number of students are being trained to work in boys' and girls' camps as counsellors on nature subjects.

BOY RISKS LIFE TO SAVE PLAYMATE FROM RIVER

The heroism of his chum probably saved the life of Boleslaw Blazynek, 11 years old, of Detroit, when he came into contact with a live wire near the mouth of the Rouge River.

Boleslaw and Joseph Tlalka, 12, were playing on a sand pile near the bank of the river, when Boleslaw touched a charged wire running to a boat near the bank. The shock threw him into the river, where he lay stunned.

Joseph jumped in and pulled his friend to the shore.

TAFFETA GIVES AIR OF YOUTH

Younger women, realizing the charm of taffeta materials, are wearing plaid taffeta dance frocks for spring occasions. Some of these taffeta models are made in quaint period styles with off-the-shoulder necklines held by taffeta shoulder straps which tie in cute little bow-knots on the shoulders. Bodices are rather snug-fitting and skirts are full and flaring. Often tiers or petaled ruffles adorn the skirt portions. Pastel color combinations in either large or small plaids give an evening color note to these taffetas. Even straight-lined taffeta frocks with the deep-cut decolletage, narrow shoulder straps and formal evening silhouette earmarks are worn. There is a crispness about taffeta which makes it decidedly youthful.

The new robes de style—merely another name for a frock outside the general run of dresses—are trimmed only on one side. Some are of black taffeta, with close-fitting supple bodice and bouffant skirts. A big bird or butterfly in gold or colored beads is worked partly on the bodice and partly on the skirt.

Velvet, milan, hair and exotic straws give novelty to the summer season.

Big things are expected of the larger hats, and when one sees such a thing as a leghorn brim with wide high crown of poppy-red velvet, decorated with fluffy chiffon and velvet poppy placed high on the side of the crown, one is forced to pay some attention to the fact that the simple fabric hats have only a part rather than all of the millinery mode's attention!

Boutonnieres range from berries to gardenias! One realizes the importance of a corsage when, for instance, three red velvet gardenias are the single ornament for a white satin evening dress.

Tailored flowers for tailored wear! Snakeskin and leather, printed to resemble snakeskin, are smart. But it is extremely poor taste to wear fluffy boutonniers with taileurs.

Vienna offers some novel belts to give the final touch to the chic ensemble. Some are embroidered to resemble a kind of tapestry work, and have little crocheted boutonnieres in colors matching the embroidery on the belt, to be worn on the lapel. Beige leather belts with plastic bouquets of suede flowers are very smart, as are the patched belts on which geometrical motifs are applied in bits of suede, kid or gilded leather.

Tiny women who desire to acquire dignity should avoid the Peter Pan collars, boleros, the chic jacquettes and youthful lines in general. And just as much must they avoid regal lines—large flowing sleeves, elaborate girdles and such things appropriate only to the larger woman of regal bearing. There is a happy medium, you know, and it consists of tailored simplicity in everything.

Naturally, the lines that make one seem taller are those that give an effect of slenderness. So the short, plump woman has only to avoid all horizontal lines and effect those that go only from head to foot. But the tiny and slight woman should beware of too many slenderizing lines! Likewise she should avoid all black in her ensemble—unless her personal coloring is unusually vivid.

In prints and designs of any kind, small woman should beware of large designs that have the disconcerting effect which was called "camouflage" during the war. A large hat, a huge fur collar, lines or trimming out of proportion to the size of the person makes the person ridiculous and dwarfs the personality by comparison.

Even the person not interested in or familiar with color knows that black has the effect of causing the object it covers to seem smaller, and white the effect of expanding it. Even though black and white are not colors! White is the luminous combination of all colors, black the absence of all colors—or the other way round, we never can remember.

Certain other colors and shades of colors do the same. Generally speaking, the darker colors make a person seem smaller, the lighter colors, larger. Therefore a small woman should avoid all black or all of any dark color in her costume, if possible. Even the slightest touch of white or pink will relieve the somberness and the smothering effect. Especially this season is this lightening of black or navy in a costume smart. Of course, if the small woman is an unusually vivid brunette, or a golden and decided blonde, indeed if she is a decided and vivid type of any kind, an all-black costume is often effective.

Small women, then, who wish to achieve individuality and dignity in their clothing, will seek the simple, tailored lines; will avoid the so-called "youthful" effects; will take care in selecting hats, furs, designs, trimmings and accessories that are small enough not to seem to make them top-heavy. Will select rather light colors; will avoid all lines going from left to right, which would tend to make them seem shorter and stouter.

Six Feet Of "Bow-Wow"

How would you like to have this "pup" pushing the chairs and tables out of place 'round your home?

Some size to him, isn't there? He only measures six feet, seven inches when standing on his rear ankles. His name is "Duke Baklanoff" and he's a prize-winning Russian wolf-hound. At the Chicago Dog Show where he was exhibited, he won the admiration of pretty Miss Loretta Smith, with whom he is pictured above.

SIX MICHIGAN MEN ARE NAMED FOR ANNAPOLIS

Fashion's Latest—The "Pierrot" Sleeve

Keeping up with women's styles nowadays requires a keen sense of alertness. It seems what's the "latest" today is fashion history tomorrow, so fast do the feminine frock designers work.

We present a picture of Marietta Millner—film player—in a dress that introduces the "Pierrot" sleeve which is frankly a creation full of graceful white chiffon ruffles. The frock itself is of black satin with cricket belt in tango colors.

Its designers term it "Correct for Summer."

SHAKE EVIL OF LUMBER TOWN

If Manistee, once rated among the roughest of the sawmill towns along Lake Michigan, appears particularly sanctimonious and law-abiding now, the present day observer attributing this new attitude to the passing of the lumber industry with its carousing river gangs, its drinking and its vice, must not forget also to give credit to the score of churches and the clergymen who labored valiantly in their pulpits and even went forth into the lumber camps to spread their message of the gospel. For Manistee has more churches, and more ministers of the gospel in proportion to its population, than any other city in Michigan.

Counting the Salvation Army and the Christian Science Society, there are 19 religious organizations within the city limits, and the pastors of some of them maintain country charges. But there are also several more church buildings, no longer used for services, where once the "sky pilots" of an earlier and rougher day quoted scripture in loud tones and long, and exhorted sinners to turn from their wicked ways. In some cases there was consolidation. In others certain dedominations, like the Unitarians, for instance, all died or moved from the city and the buildings are now empty reminders of another day.

The first church edifice erected in Manistee was built by Father Marquette in 1672 on a sandy promontory overlooking the inner harbor, where the waters of the Big and the Little Manistee rivers converge to flow into Lake Michigan. Jesuit missionaries visited the place periodically, but the chapel had been gone for many years when the Roman Catholics put up a house of worship in 1861. The Methodists had formed a church society and held services as early as 1859, but didn't begin their church until a few years later. The population then was 500. The Congregationalists built a wooden church in 1862, which stood for 28 years.

The oldest church building still standing in Manistee is Our Saviour's Danish Lutheran Church, built in 1869 as a Scandinavian Lutheran Church. Its first pastor was a Norwegian. The congregation was poor and consequently it took more than a year to build the structure. Services were held in it just a few months when the great fire in 1871 threatened to wipe it away.

All about Manistee were great forests of pine and hemlock. On October 8, 1871, great fires swept up and down western Michigan, adding to the smoke of the Chicago fire. Holland, Muskegon, and other cities suffered heavy losses. The Magill and Canfield mill, across Manistee Harbor, was the first to burn that Sunday morning.

OHIO CORN QUARANTINE IS ASKED BY MICHIGAN

In a telegram to Dr. C. L. Marlett, chairman of the Federal Horticultural Board at Washington, Herbert E. Powell, State Commissioner of Agriculture, asked the establishment of a corn borer quarantine against the State of Ohio, for the protection of Michigan farmers.

Mr. Powell's telegram follows:

"In view of the fact that Michigan farmers have co-operated whole-heartedly in complying with the clean-up rules and regulations for the control of the European corn borer, and the State of Ohio has exempted large areas from the provisions of the clean-up, and late developments indicate Federal and state forces will not be supported in enforcing clean-up in heavily infested areas adjoining Michigan, and as great quantities of corn will in all probability be moved from this highly infested area into the cleaned-up areas of Michigan, we insist upon being protected, and ask you to establish a quarantine against the State of Ohio so that Michigan farmers may be protected from corn products from this heavily infested area."

10 HAWKS BATTLE MENOMINEE FARMER WHO FLEES FOR LIFE

Bested by the attack of ten chicken hawks, Glen Campbell, 40 years old, of Faithom, Mich., required the services of a physician after the brids had sent him scurrying out of the woods almost blinded from blood which flowed from his wounds.

Campbell's scalp was ripped open and a long gash across his forehead slit through his eyebrow. His hands and arms were deeply scratched and his shirt torn.

Campbell had gone to the pasture after his cows at twilight. Not finding the cattle at their accustomed place awaiting him near the gate, he went farther into the woods. The attack came so suddenly, he declared, he did not know what struck him and he was so confused he could not ward off his assailants from the air. They knocked his hat from his head and battered him about until he turned and fled.

DRIVES AUTO 900 MILES DIES FROM EXHAUSTION

Howard M. Keyes, 41 years old, died suddenly at Baltimore after driving an automobile about 900 miles in 48 hours in an effort to reach the bedside of his father who is critically ill. His death was attributed to physical exhaustion.

Keyes, who lived in Wauchula, Fla., received news of his father's illness and immediately set out for Baltimore. Seven hours after his arrival he was found unconscious, and died shortly afterwards.

Acid Stomach
"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"
Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

STATE REALTY MEN TO HEAR HERBERT HOOVER

When several hundred realty men gather at Jackson late in September to attend the annual convention of the Michigan Real Estate Association, they will be permitted to hear Herbert C. The meeting is scheduled to be held at the new Hotel Hayes some time after September 17.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Atheism Rampant in Public Schools

Such is the title of an article in World's Work for June, by Homer Croy, an author of long experience. A secondary title is, "How Propaganda Works on the Youthful Mind." This article had been preceded by one in the May number of the same magazine, entitled, "Atheism Beckons to Our Youth," with the sub-title, "How Unbelief Is Being Spread in Schools and Colleges."

The articles are a revelation to those not familiar with the facts. The writer undertakes to show how studied efforts are being made by a small group of atheists to undermine the religious faith of youth starting with those who have no faith to begin with.

The promoter of this propaganda is "The American Association for Advancement of Atheism, Inc.," which was incorporated in New York State in 1925—said to be the first organized body in the world outside of Russia to spread atheism Its sub-title is, "A Militant Foe of the Church and Clergy." Charles Smith is its president and Freeman Hopwood its secretary. An auxiliary organization among the students themselves is the "Junior Atheist League," which functions in high schools and colleges. These organizations are aided also by the "American Civil Liberties Union."

Though only eighteen months old, the "Four A's as it calls itself for short, has branches all over the United States. Mr. Croy names 23 universities and colleges where this movement is established. They include Cornell University, the University of Chicago, Rochester University (Baptist) (where the first of these college atheistic student bodies was organized), the College of the City of Detroit (part of the public school system), Denver University, University of California and others.

Perhaps the worst phase of this propaganda is the extent it is carried on in high schools. Mr. Croy tells how in two Brooklyn (N. Y,) high schools (where daily Bible readings in assembly are required), students arose and started out when such reading was begun. Stopped by the principles, they said: "We don't believe in the Bible and don't want it stuffed down our throats;" "We are members of the Society of the Godless" "The Bible is out of date; there is no heaven and no hell, so why worry; that's what we learn in the Society of the Godless." The school authorities found that the "Society of Godless" had 125 members in New York city and holds regular meetings where the Bible is scoffed at.

It further appears that the students, when organized, are encouraged to pick their own names, which they do. In Los Angles they call themselves "The Devil's Angel's"; in Rochester, "The Damned Souls"; in Philadelpha, "God's Black Sheep"; in University of Wisconsin, "The Circle ,of the Godless"; in North Dakota University, "The Legion of the Damned."

All this is shocking enough. Mr. Croy goes on to say that among the tenets and slogans of the "Four A's" and the "Junior Atheist League" are these: "There is no God." "Religion is worship of the supernatural and should be abolished." "The church is a dangerous institution." "All churches should be taxed." "Chaplains abolished." "Bootlegging of religion and Bible in public schools stopped." "No religious festival or fast recognized by state." "Bible no longer used to administer oaths." "Sunday as a religious Sabbath no longer enforced." "The motto, 'In God we trust,' to be taken from our coins." And so on.

"The beauty of it is", says Secretary Hopwood, "that we have so many atheists in the college faculties of America. They can't say much about it, or they would be thrown out; but they encourage the students all they can."

Mr. Croy's revelations will probably be new to most of us, especially the extent and definiteness with which this atheist propaganda is being spread in the schools of America. Of course when Secretary Hopwood tells us, "In 300 years there won't be a church in America," we are reminded of Robert Ingersoll's prophecy which was so refuted by our Chaplain McCabe when he wired the great atheist, "We are building two a day." Only, Ingersoll made it ten years, and this man 300. We could smile at the ravings of the atheists, if it were not so serious a matter that a little group of them are so perniciously active in trying to destroy the religious faith of youth. Readers should turn again to Dr. Luther A Weigle's articles in last week's Advocate, page 3, and read it carefully. It is high time something were done to correct the mistake made in ruling the Bible and religion out of the public schools.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

The Big Banquet of Col. Lindbergh

On Tuesday evening last week listeners over the air had pleasure of hearing broadcasted by the National Broadcastng Association over the famous "blue Network" the speaking and music tendered at the Banquet in New York City at Hotel Commodore ball room in honor of Colonel Lindbergh and we must remark the array of notables concerned in the affair was quite picturesque. At the speakers table were seated Mayor Walker of New York, who acted as toastmaster at his right Colonel Lindbergh; at his left Charles Evans Hughes Ex-Secretary of State, Governor Al Smith of New York and Dr. John Finley President of New York University. Mayor Walker stated that never before in the history of Hotel Commodore had such a crowd besieged its portals, and three thousand diners were in the ball room and the enthusiasm turned the assembly into a crazy shouting mob who went wild when Lindbergh made his rather tardy appearance. The enormous crowds all the way from Battery Park uptown made it well-nigh impossible for the guests to get into the building and over an hour was required to get through. Finally with a tremendous roar it was announced that "Lindy" had arrived and the program at once opened by music from the New York Fireman's band, striking up "Star Spangled Banner". When the cheering finally died away Mayor Walker announced the tables would be removed so that everybody could be made as comfortable as possible. He then adroitly introduced Dr. Finley who stated he was so sorry the world did not know he was born in the same town as Lindberg. He made a beautiful allegorical speech presenting the youthful aviator with a medal from the City of New York. Following Finley the most famous guest of the evening Charles Evans Hughes Ex-Secretary of State in war times and Judge of the Supreme Court was introduced giving one of his characteristic splendid bursts or oratory complimenting Lindbergh and calling upon the young people of this country to model their careers after so enterprising a youth. Mayor Walker introduced Governor Al Smith of New York whose speech not so polished contained the germs of wonderful thought. He said he had witnessed about all the political demonstrations in the city since 1884 when the unfortunate Cleveland Administration went into effect and never had he seen such a wildness of enthusiasm and such suffocating crowds as upon the occasion of Colonel Lindbergh's return. He said he made a few notes of the high spots and naming them he cited the satisfaction on the faces of the throng in Central Park as they welcomed back "Lindy" to his native shores and he incidentally found the family had ancestry in the same locality as himself and he was proud of it. He did not think the feat would ever be eclipsed and for one so young it was proverbial. He confessed politics was his goal but he felt honored to lay them aside for so important an occasion and he never expected to duplicate it. So much for Al Smith and whether wet or dry he sure is a spell-binder. Mayor introduced Colonel Lindbergh and was obliged to wait five minutes before he could restore order sufficient to be heard. Lindbergh spoke on the possibitities of aviation and what he hoped would come to pass very soon in America which he regretted to say was not to the forefront only in mail carrying. He expects to see passenger service on a large scale as in Europe directly and also he finds the U. S. Naval air force one of the finest bodies of men in the world.

We are frank to confess that for a country bred lad only 21 years of age Lindbergh displays a large supply of that property known as "pep" and nerve, and he needs it we are certain. His supply of good nature has been seriously imposed upon during the past few days although the dash of nonsense which has been allowed to run riot by the crazy lunkheads who would make a mountain out of a molehill is about petered out we trust and we believe the after shock of the whole business will leave this nation asleep to rid itself of the debauch and while so doing "Lindy" maybe able to get a chance to rest and go back to the ordinary humdrum of life for which he must long terribly by this time, and if he could voice his sentiment he would undoubtedly vote the whole bunch a gang of "Rotters"

The Early Bird Gets the Worm

Many of our readers have heard of the "singing earth worms" which are found in some parts of the country. Well, here is a different version of the corn borer story which we are positive every farmer in Adams township will be heavily interested in. A humble son of toil down near Podunk recently made his small son a cute little rattle-box from a dried gourd about the size of a croquet ball. Last fall just as his corn was tasseling out his boy was playing up and down the corn rows with his rattle All at once the lad heard a terrific hissing sound as if the air was full of honey bees, and was surprised to find the tops of the corn stalks literally alive with corn borers, every one with his head up and keeping time with the rattle. Every time the boy shook his rattle the worms vibrated with it. This gave the farmer an original idea. He thinks about September 1st or likely as not the last of August the extremely keen frosty nights will put a kibosh on the worms, and he plans to send his boy out just after sundown to pass up and down each fifth row shaking his rattle Of course the worms will all come out on parade and before morning they will be frozen so stiff and fall to the ground with such force as to break them in two. This will prevent them reviving as soon as the sun comes out. We are sorry to give away this process until the farmer gets it patented, which he expects to do soon and will offer it to the U. S Department of Agriculture for 99 thousand, two hundred dollars to be paid for in matured Government Bonds as he objects to taking off the information by communicating with most of the county agents in Michigan If the Government doubts this story they can send an inspector at once as that is the only way to settle the Corn Borer anyhow.

A new Aerial passenger line has been established between Benton Harbor and Chicago and will make regular trips also will carry light freight to cities within an hour's time from Bentor Harbor. The new aerial rout between Detroit and Grand Rapids has been in operation ten months, has covered 62,000 miles and carried 1500 passengers without an accident. The late achievement of Captain Lindbergh of flying to Paris without a stop, does not seem so remarkable after all and inside of five years air lines will function in all parts of this country. The Detroit-Grand Rapids line has made seventeen times as much mileage as Lindbergh made in his trip and apparently as safely as the Twentieth Century Limited train.

GOOD SHEPHERD NUNS PURCHASE NEW SITE

Sixty-Eight Acres Near Northville to Be Future Home

Tribute to the Rt. Rev. Joseph G. Pinten, D. D., the new Bishop of the Grand Rapids diocese of the Roman Catholic church, was paid by 1,000 persons, Protestants and Catholics, at a public reception held recently in the Grand Rapids armory.

Mayor Elvan F. Swarthout officially welcomed the prelate. Martin H. Carmody, deputy supreme knight of the Knights of Columbus, presided. Other addresses were made by Edmund W. Booth and Lee M. Hutchins.

Responding to the greeting, Bishop Pinten expressed his faith in the innate sense of justice of the American people. "Storms may arise," he said, "but they are only storms." The genuine American will not tolerate strife-begotten hatred. It has no place in America.

"All power comes from God. I think the reason the church demands that her children look up to civil authority is not generally recognized outside of the church. It is that all power, civil as well as ecclesiastical, comes from God. Only when laws are notoriously unjust and contravene the moral law, may we refuse to obey the civil authority. The Catholic Church has always been one of the strongest upholders of the Constitution and compels her children to obey it on penalty of sin."

PRIZES OFFERED FOR BEST VOICES

National Radio Audition Open to Young Singers in This Country.

America's future generation of vocal stars will be disclosed to the world this Fall as another of the wonders due to radio. Every young man or woman with the gift of song, whether from country, town or city, will have an equal chance.

A nation-wide quest for the best young singers and the opening of the door of opportunity to them has been undertaken by the Atwater Kent Foundation, an institution established for scientific and educational purposes by A. Atwater Kent, the Philadelphia radio manufacturer and sponsor of the Sunday night grand opera hour, broadcast over a network of nineteen stations.

The Foundation has announced plans for a "National Radio Audition," to find by competition the best undiscovered voices in the United States. Prizes aggregating $17,500, with tuition for a musical education in certain cases, are offered as follows:

A. Atwater Kent,
President of Atwater Kent Foundation, which opens door of opportunity to undiscovered vocalists.

The two winners of first place in the National Audition—a man and a woman—will each receive a gold decoration, $5,000 in cash and two years' tuition in a leading conservatory.

Winners of second prizes will each receive $3,000 in cash and one year's tuition.

Winners of third prizes will each receive $1,000 and one year's tuition.

Winners of fourth prizes will each receive $500.

PONTIAC GETS NEW HOSPITAL

Modern Fireproof Structure Has Four Operating Rooms and 100 Beds

Pontiac—St. Joseph's Mercy Hospital, Pontiac's newest civic pride, was dedicated here recently by the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit. The building has four floors and 100 beds. The architecture is of the Gregorian style and the structure is of brick and stone fireproof construction throughout.

The hospital has four operating rooms including the main operating auditorium, which is built with a balcony, from which medical students and surgeons may witness unusual operations. Another feature is that the building does not contain wards. This does not mean, however, that patients who are unable to pay for a private room will be denied admission.

St. Joseph's is the most recent Catholic hospital to be opened in the Detroit diocese. Within the past five or six years, Catholic hospitals have been opened at Lansing (St. Lawrence), Battle Creek (Leila Montgomery), Detroit (St. Joseph's), and Mt. Clemens (St. Joseph's). Plans have been announced for the erection of a large hospital under the direction of the Sisters of St. Joseph in Kalamazoo.

With the exception of the Battle Creek institution, which was the gift of Mrs. Leila Post Montgomery, fund campaigns were conducted for these hospitals and Catholics and non-Catholics joined in promoting these projects in a true spirit of charity and civic devotion.

St. Joseph's Hospital at Pontiac is conducted by the Sisters of Mercy, with headquarters in Dubuque, Iowa.

Dont' Trust the Rats!

There is an element of "Liberalism" in America to-day which is [illegible] near the danger line and which it is not safe to trifle with in the least. Therefore when a would be politician comes to you representing he is a "liberalist" and asking you to come into the fold and vote a ticket which will help you and him to get somewhere, just hand him a whole souled Red Blooded laugh and send him on his way with an urgent push per No. 10 boot backed up by plenty of Pep, right in the bosom of his galluses. Don't forget all such rascals are more or less tail-end contraptions of Sovietism radiating from vice ridden Russia. The Reds have overran China, they have gained a foot hold in England they have monkeyed around in France, and now essay to generate fourteen kinds of hell in America which we hope they will fail to do. There is a far cry that warns us many of our highest and best Universities are fast getting won over to such treason We hope this is not true. We do hope the rank and file of our younger educated generation are men and women of enough decency to ignore this filthy doctrine. But we have our doubts—in fact it is currently reported that many of the instructors in these Colleges are men who have somehow drifted away from the staid old religion of morality and decency to the risque which denotes and permeates Socialism. The usual cartoon of Sovietism depicts a small expanse of face swamped by a great knot of whiskers, and we could add another important feature to the whiskers. We would appropriately make them into dens and breeding places for the worst form of human vermin it is possible to conceive—men and women absolutely without morals, without conscience, without anything that belongs to civilization and label it "Liberalism."

Doc. Loomis On The Griddle

Detroit police seem to delight in soaking Doctor Loomis of Detroit who is accussed of murdering his wife in their apartments February 22nd. Owing to some delinquincies in his early statements concerning his whereabouts on the night of the murder, the officials are not exactly satisfied of his innocence. It is noticeable that many of his statements are crooked, as well they might be, after the terrible shock of the affair. By means of a certain woman friend of the doctor, the police have been put on the track and as it is necessary they should convict someone they are working Loomis' overtime. Dr. Loomis is taking the stand in his own defense, attired himself in the blood-stained suit worn on the night in question, and pretended to go through the same motions as he did at the time but blood had been found on the inside of his coat sleeves and still other conditions do not augur well for him. He has never been able to explain everything satisfactorily and likely never will. But for the leaking of a woman's mouth it is probable the police would never have been able to get a case on Loomis. Friends in Brooklyn Michigan and the Editor of the Brooklyn paper unite strongly in defending Loomis's honor whom they claim was considered a square-toed gentleman in every sense of the word, his home having been there at one time.

The jury in the case evidently thought that all the blackleggery aimed at the doctor by the police did not suffice to clinch the case hence the acquittal, and as a matter of course he had to come down to Brooklyn to visit friends and for relaxation. He will continue to practice in Detroit despite the unpleasant notoriety.

The Condition of City Sentiment

Is growing gradually more risque or intemperate We don't mean by tha the folks who dwell in cities are lost souls and society outcasts, but inquiry will disclose something alarming in a metamorphosis of sentiment and relaxation of morals The city of East Lansing, home of Michigan's leading college, recently took a vote on the Sunday movie question and to show how much they thought of it, gave a much larger ballot than any regular election. This does not seem possible but it is a fact. 718 voted and it is said considerable enthusiasm was manifested. On the one side college students were overwhelmingly in favor of the movies, but were not allowed to vote while the faculty supposed to be anti, could not agree and split on the issue, possibly from reasons back of the scenes. The results indicate too clearly how sentiment has gone aft agley among young folks and some thing of a Gehenna will develop in these communities erelong. When it arrives there'll be more crime in the land; more desecration of the Sabbath; more Sunday dancing; more Sunday drinking; and our whole sense of propriety will decay In the neighboring city of Hillsdale the same situation came up and was threshed out the same way. A large percentage of residents, adherants of churches or sympathizers, did not want Sunday movies, They said their town was decent and should be kept so. Another class stepped forward to remark there was absolutely no grounds for prohibiting movies, the town needed them; other towns had found them beneficial to civie life, exhilerating to the laboring class, and moreover they did not propose to decorate the business section with crepe on the seventh day. The church folks did not repudiate; the movies remained, in spite of the christian college faculty on the hill Nobody can affirm or deny the town is better or worse. Church attendance has not increased. The results in the surrounding country are what?

Nothing that you could call uplifting or demoralizing. A few of the country people who otherwise might visit some near-by resort now attend afternoon matinees, but do they gain or lose? We leave it for the reader to judge.

Men, Can You Afford to Overlook it?

To the farmers of Southern Michigan whose places are being rapidly denuded of timber, we have this to say, and we can prove it true. Every farm which has been stripped of timber has gone down in value year by year. Its moisture has gone deeper into the soil, its plant chemicals are washed out and much of the humus which is essential to good corn and wheat has disappeared. Old gullies have formed in the flat fields, and the hills no longer respond to the acceleration of well-rotted barnyard fertilizer. Now, the question is, what is coming to this farm inside of the next forty years? When your grand-children are trying to raise thirty-bushel wheat and one-half bushel to the shock corn to pay a tax which without a doubt will be doubled and possibly thribbled, what about it? In fact you, yourself have admitted a long and painful struggle to make both ends meet and show a profit. Now here is an absolutely true story of what a single farmer man in Georgia did and what he gained by it. God's acre surely is not found in Georgia and most of the farming conditions are much poorer than here yet this keen practical fellow made a pot-shot and this is how he did it:

"Thirty-five years ago a farmer in central Georgia set out little pine trees on 10 acres of eroding hillside land. In a short time the soil was protected, and the trees have grown to a beautiful forest of straight clear-stemmed trunks 35 to 60 feet in height. Were this stand to be cut now it would yield about 40 cords of wood or 15,000 board feet of lumber per acre."

Now it remains to be seen how much longer you farmers are going to put off setting out the most important plants your farm home ever produced—timber. Better get busy and take care of that hilly barron field on the back forty which never has yielded a thing but pasture and mighty little of that. You know it is so obsessed with steep hills a critter often falls over and slides down if it tries to feed there.

Report of the Sherriff's Office, Week Ending June 18th, 1927

Monday, June 13th, a serious auto accident occurred on U. S. 112, at the Moscow Plains church. A Maxwell driven by Wm. McDaniels collided with a Buick driven by C. H. Douglass of Indianapolis Mrs. Sam Markus, of Indianapolis who was riding in the Buick, was fatally injured, and her husband and son were seriously hurt. Keith Luke of Jonesville who was riding with McDaniels suffered a fractured skull, but will recover. McDaniels, who claims his residence is Jackson, was arrested by Deputies who arrived on the scene shortly after the accident occurred. A quantity of moonshine was removed from the car driven by McDaniels and on Tuesday he was brought before Justice Fitzsimmons and charged with driving while drunk. He plead guilty and was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 and costs and serve 30 days in jail. As soon as the other injured parties recover a Coroner's inquest will be held and a charge of manslaughter may be placed against McDaniels.

On Monday afternoon Tim Straub of Hillsdale was brought before Justice Fitzsimmons and fined $10 and costs and sentenced to 10 days in jail for being drunk on the streets of Hillsdale.

Tuesday, Edward Tremaine ex-Hillsdale bootlegger was sentenced to a recommended term of 8 months in Ionia and a fine of $100 and costs of $75. This for violating the Prohibition Law.

Franklin Norris and Harry Murphy, 2 young men of Hillsdale were fined $2.50 each by Justice Aldrich on Wednesday afternoon for creating a disturbance by fighting in the streets of Hillsdale.

A Fordor Ford Sedan, 1924 model, Mich. license 531-136, belonging to James Freeman of Pittsford, was stolen from that place on Thursday evening. One of the noticeable features was the brand new paint job on the car. If you see it, notify the Sherriff's office at Hillsdale, giving the details.

Talk about your high people Michigan has never raised one who was really big enough to be classed with the big fellows. Out on the plains of Texas and Kansas you can find some tall ones which are something like the famous Kansas corn. For instance there is one Jacob Erlach of El Paso, Texas who is eight feet six inches and when you add to this a tall kossack cap eighteen inches or two feet high, he certainly tops them all and looks like a giant. In Kansas they boast of a senator who is 6 feet 7 inches and they thought he was a very unusual man. However he resembles a "kid" beside the other fellow of El Paso.

The chemist tinkers who would mix whisky with gasoline and attempt to manipulate a gas buggy, are still with us. The direful fatality on U. S.-112 last week near the Plains church, is a reminder of what we are coming to right shortly, unless old John Barleycorn is rounded up. The instigator of the accident, one McDaniel, was under the influence of liquor, in fact a container of the liquid was in his car. Public sentiment is fast crystalizing on the subject of drunken driving, and at this rate it wont be long until the outraged ethics of society will take these murderers to the nearest telephone pole and string them up—whether half-shot or entirely soused! Somebody says this is "tough language for a conservative editor." We admit it, but when you have been driven to the highway limits by a soused driver a couple of times the world wouldn't have to ask you.

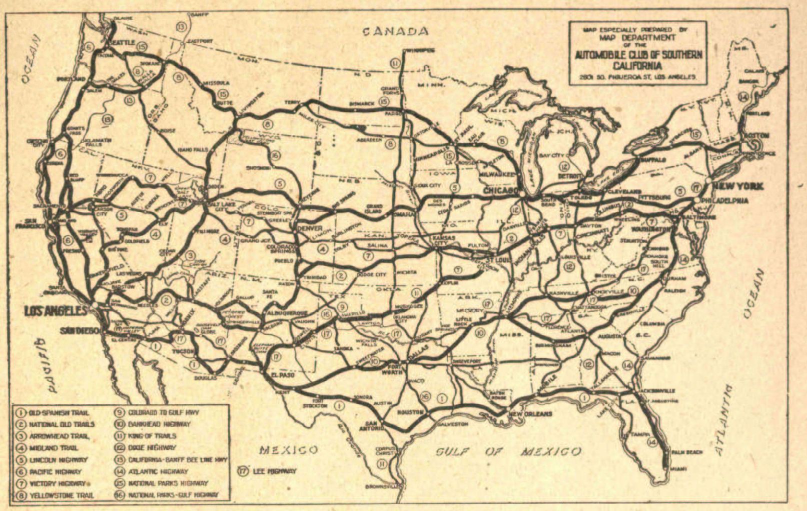
Thousands of Motorists Throng Roads To National Beauty Spots of West



The wide world beckons and the motorist is answering the vacation call. New roads, new conveniences and new services have made the whole United States almost as close as the wheel of one's car. Thousands and scores of thousands motorists all over the land are responding to the travel lure. They are going from each place and in all directions.

New roads in the far West this year and improved old roads have made practically every national beauty spot pleasantly accessible and there is already an indication that the great national parks will make records for visitors this year never before approached. But no matter how many come the parks will not be crowded. To the man in the East, park mean a green spot in a city. To the Westerner it means a great preserve of natural beauty, in many instances containing thousands of square miles. And it is equipped to take care of visitors. The visitors may either camp or may stop at mountain lodges as fine as any.

Some of the points that are now included on a complete all summer motor trip to the Pacific Coast alternating as between North and South on the go and return journey are:

Glacier National Park, Yellowstone National Park, the Columbia River Highway, the Snoqualmie Falls and Pass, Rainier National Park, the Mount Hood Loop, Crater Lake National Park and then the famous series in California—Mount Shasta, the Mount Lassen Volcanic National Park showing the only active volcano in the United States, the Redwood Highway, Muir Woods, Yosemite National Park with its matchless waterfalls and rock formation, the Sequoia National Park with its General Sherman Tree, thirty-six and one-half feet in diameter and with five thousand trees greater than ten feet in diameter in an area of two miles square, Los Angeles, Hollywood and Old Mexico. Then on the Sothern route, Zion National Park, Brice Canyon, the Kaibab National Forest, the Petrified Forest, the Grand Canyon and the residences of the pre-historic cliff dwellers, and Indian pueblos where the native American still lives much as he did before Cortez came to the shores of North America.

If any of our readers wish to make a motor journey to the Pacific Coast that touches Southern California on either the going or return journey, by special arrangement, the Automobile Club of Southern California will act as their guide and servant without charge. Write or telegraph the club, mentioning this paper, at its headquarters, Twenty-sixth and Figueroa streets, Los Angeles. Say from what point you will start, give the time of start and the time you hope to be back home again. Mention the several important places on the route that you want to visit. The Club will then send you complete detail route maps, selecting the go and return routes so that the journey will be pleasantest from a weather standpoint. Say whether you are going to camp out, camp in motor camps or stay in hotels. If specific information is wanted, make the reqest definitely in the communication. On arrival in Southern California the Automobile Club will make the visitor a guest member without charge. These courtesies are extended in return for the courtesies invariably shown to California motorists when traveling in the other parts of the United States. All of our readers intending the journey should avail themselves of the offer. It will make their journey decidedly more pleasant and workmanlike than if they pioneer.

THE BEST PINEAPPLES

THE best pineapples in the world are the Smooth Cayenne variety which were originally grown in English hothouses as a rich man's luxury. In 1893 a plant-lover named Captain John Kidwell began experimenting with pineapples outside of Honolulu. He obtained some of the Smooth Cayenne variety from Jamaica, and, as a result of his experiments this is now the only variety grown in Hawaii, and is used by all the canning companies in the Islands.

The Captain tried canning pineapples in a small way, but the real development of the pineapple industry which now exports nearly two hundred million cans a year, did not start till a young Harvard graduate, James D. Dole, came to Hawaii in 1900 and built a small cannery. From this small beginning grew the Hawaiian Pineapple Company's cannery—the greatest fruit cannery in the world, and pineapples are now the second canned fruit in the world in point of quantity, being exceeded only by California peaches.

This is the brief story of how it has become possible for everyone to have this luscious fruit for a breakfast dish, and at other meals in many different combinations. It can be eaten separately or combined with meats, grains, or other fruits. The following recipes illustrate this.

Rice-Pineapple Cup: Cook rice in salted water until tender. Cool and add sugar enough to make it quite sweet. Mix with this drained, crushed pineapple, and just before serving fold in whipped cream. Serve in sherbet glasses. This makes a very nice company dessert.

Epicure Salad: Arrange on plates shredded lettuce or lettuce leaves, and on them place an outer ring of sliced pear, an inner one of thinly-sliced orange, and a center of canned pineapple, either crushed or sliced. Top the mound or ring of pineapple with whipped cream or with cream cheese. Scatter halved, seeded white grapes over the dish. If cheese is used instead of cream, mayonnaise or French dressing should be used.

Supper Salad: Mix diced lamb or veal with chopped celery and peas, and bind with an oil mayonnaise. Place a mound of this on a foundation of lettuce and crushed pineapple. This is an excellent salad to use as a main course at supper or luncheon.

Curry with Pineapple: Cut chicken, veal, or lamb into pieces about an inch in size. Blend two tablespoons butter and one of flour in a double boiler, and add salt and pepper to taste, one and a half tablespoons curry-powder, and gradually one cup chicken or meat stock. Simmer till sauce is smooth; add meat and cook five minutes longer. Surround the curry on a platter with rings of Hawaiian pineapple and mounds of boiled rice, placed alternately.

SCIENCE ENDS ICEBERG PERIL

Through the magic touch of science, the towering iceberg, for centuries an object of dread and wonder to those who sail the Northern waters, is to atone for its sin by playing a helpful part in experiments to safeguard navigation.

Long have these broken ends of glaciers, which descend into the North Atlantic steamship lanes from Greenland's dreary ice cap, menaced men and vessels as they floated in scintillating beauty over the traveled seas. One of them it was that sank the giant liner Titanic, largest vessel then afloat, drowning more than 1,500 of her passengers and causing a $15,000,000 property loss.

Innumerable efforts have been made to subdue these terrors of the sea. The most notable and promising of success were the recent experiments by Dr. Howard T. Barnes, of McGill University, who succeeded in causing a number of the bergs to destroy themselves by planting thermit charges in their icy walls. How a chemical reaction engendered by this process caused the bergs to explode, burling multi-colored flames and sparks hundreds of feet into the air, has been described by the scientist and recorded with photographs of transcendent beauty.

It was in the course of such experiments that Dr. Barnes evolved the idea of using icebergs or their parent glaciers to aid research now under way with the object of safeguarding all North Atlantic navigation. With this object in view he is accompanying the Greenland Expedition of the University of Michigan, under Dr. William H. Hobbs, into the Northern glacial anticyclone center above the great Greenland ice cap.

Briefly stated, one object of the expedition is to study the origin of high winds and violent storms which sweep down over the Atlantic, and to learn their nature so well that wireless warnings can be broadcast from Greenland in time to warn all mariners of approaching bad weather.

Properly to study such wind directions and velocities as must be known, meterologists of the expedition will find it necessary to send up hundreds of small balloons filled with hydrogen gas, whose conduct will be noted. But hydrogen gas is difficult to obtain in the bleak, icy waste that is Northern Greenland. In his experiments with icebergs, Dr. Barnes learned that the proper use of thermit converts the ice into its component elements, oxygen and hydrogen. He plans to obtain and store this hydrogen and turn it over as needed to the meteorologists. For that purpose he has perfected furnace and crucible which, when used with the thermit, will take from any glacier or iceberg the gas necessary to complete the experiments. Thus will the menace of the North supply the very element which scientists hope to use to accomplish its ultimate defeat.

STATEWIDE POTATO TOUR IS SET FOR AUG. 9 TO 13

The first effort to get all potato growing and marketing interests together for a state-wide potato tour was made at Michigan State College when a committee representing all the various interests met to plan the tour which has been scheduled for Aug. 9 to 13.

The organizations represented at the meeting included the Michigan State College, the State Department of Agriculture, the Michigan Potato Growers' Exchange, of Cadillac, the Michigan Crop Improvement Association, and numerous independent growers.

It is understood the itinerary of the tour will include Greenville, Cadillac, Traverse City, Petoskey, and Cheboygan. At Cheboygan the group will split, part going to the Upper Peninsula and part to the eastern side of the state.

INDIAN MOLDS PRESENT LIFE

The history of human life in our State goes far back into the dim past. Here and there we do, however, find clues which give us a slight comprehension of these older inhabitants. Scattered over Michigan are circular mounds, and earthen enclosures, which were not built by historic Indians. In these mounds we find burials, and associated with them implements of stone and of copper, and fragments of pottery vessels, all somewhat different from similar objects used by the Indians our forefathers found here. Occasionally these burials show that cremation was practiced. There is little doubt but what these former inhabitants were the ancestors of certain tribes of Indians living in this region recently, but we cannot say which tribe, any more than we can give a detailed story of their life.

But when we come to more recent times, let us say the Seventeenth Century, when the European was just learning to appreciate this wonderland of the Great Lakes, we have more definite knowledge. Michigan was occupied then by various tribes, most of which spoke some dialect of the Algonquin tongue. In the southern peninsula roamed the Potawatomi and the Sauk and Fox. In the northern peninsula, living on the shores of the inland lakes, were the Menomini, sometimes called the "Wild Rice People" because this grain formed their staple food. Some time before the coming of the white man, the Ottawa and Chippewa had gradually migrated into the northern peninsula, and the region about Mackinac Island, from the country to the north and west, near the Lake of the Woods.

During the fifteenth century the expanding Iroquois League had driven some of the Peoria and Miami out of what is today Indiana and Ohio into southern Michigan, to share the country of the Potowatomi. Then, in the eighteenth century, the colonists seeking more and more land in the Carolinas and Tennessee, forced the Shawnee to leave their traditional homes and migrate into southern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, from which region they influenced Michigan Indian history.

The Algonquins were not the only Indians in our State. The Hurons, or Wyandots, an Iroquois tribe at war with the famous League, had been forced into eastern Michigan. At the close of the eighteenth century, then, we find Michigan a land of several Indian tribes, most of whom were only temporarily settled in the State. Conflicts with the French on the one hand and the English and the American colonists on the other, had caused them to come together in the vain attempt to save their lands from the relentless onward march of the stronger civilization. Some of their great leaders, such as Tecumseh, who was a Shawnee, and Pontiac, who was an Ottawa, have left their mark on the white man's history.

The Michigan, which these Indians knew, was a very different Michigan from that which we know today. Practically all of the land was heavily forested, with many streams and an abundance of game. Only in the southwestern part was there a bit of grassland. The Indian lived comfortably in this forest country, for he had developed a civilization which suited his daily experiences. Today this forest has been cut off, and has been replaced with great expanses of farm land, with many square miles of burnt over stump land, a veritable desert, with large cities, mills and factories. Yet in spite of this great change in the land, which once was their forefathers', there are still living in our State about 7,600 Indians, who are trying as best they can to accommodate themselves to the strange ways of the white men who now have control of their former territory.

The Michigan Indians may today have only an infinitesimal power in the State, yet the white man shares with them in a very real way the heritage which is theirs. The hunter and camper in our State resorts gains a knowledge of woodcraft learned directly from the Indian. The graceful canoes which are used on our streams are direct descendants of the bark-covered boat of our Indians. On our tables is food which the Indians taught our forefathers how to grow. Such staples as corn and squash were eaten by Indians of Michigan long before a white man saw the Great Lakes, as were other foods which we now enjoy.

As we travel over the State in automobiles over well-paved roads, we are literally following in the footsteps of our Indian predecessors. For nearly all the great through highways, the "trunk lines," follow the trails the Indians made centuries ago through Michigan forests.

When the sun shines lay aside a little of your enthusiasm for a rainy day.

Ex-Kaiser Still Amusing Himself Chopping Wood

Wilhelm Hohenzollern, former ruler of Germany, now cooling his feet in Holland whence he fled at the close of the world war, hates to be photographed unless he's all dolled up in uniform and looks like a masquerade ball prize winner. However, he relented recently and gave the photographer permission to take the above picture of him chopping wood on his estate at Doorn.

He says he finds much pleasure wielding the axe, though it is said he is fast depleting the tree supply in the neighborhood. The Dutch better take the axe away from him and give him a broom for a change.

PARKS' LURE IS INCREASED

Mess halls, field kitchens and sanitary conveniences will be installed immediately in seven state parks for the use of organizations desiring to hold group camps, P. J. Hoffmaster, state director of parks, announced.

The equipment is being erected primarily for Boy Scout organizations, but other associations or clubs may use the buildings for weeks at a time by applying to the conservation department. The state administrative board voted $12,000 for the work.

The mess halls and kitchens will be installed this year in the Cedar Hills parks, near Jackson; Dodge No. 9, near Rockwood; Dodge No. 10, near Highland; Dodge No. 2, on Walled Lake; the Interlochen State Park; Orchard Beach State Park and Bay City State Park. Other parks will be improved in a like manner during the next few years.

Hoffmaster also announced that playground equipment is being installed in a number of parks to attract children. It is his theory that if the state can attract children to the lakes and woods, adults will follow automatically. The parks in which swings, slides and like equipment are being erected are Fort Wilkins State Park, Bay City State Park; Rochester State Park, Burt Lake State Park, Dodge No. 2 at Walled Lake, Grand Haven State Park, Island Lake State Park; Traverse City State Park; Wilson State Park at Harrison, Brimley State Park, and Dodge No. 8, near Utica.

MICHIGAN SPUDS LIKELY TO BE HARVEST OF GOLD

Early planters of Michigan potatoes, which survived the stormy month of May, give promise of netting their growers a golden harvest this year, in the opinion of leaders in the potato industry.

Rains have retarded plant growth about 30 days, and much of the seed in the early plantings is reported to have rotted in the fields. Rains were general over northern potato states.

The crop in southern states also has been damaged by the floods. This situation is expected to influence midsummer supplies and prices.

Michigan farmers are planting a larger acreage to late potatoes. There is a seed shortage in western and northern Michigan. Some growers predict old potatoes will be selling at $3 a bushel at loading points before the close of the shipping season.

Michigan's 1927 new crop will start moving to market August 1 to 15, compared with July 5 to 15 in previous seasons.

Uses "Mercy Bullets" On Big Game

Capt. Barnett W. Harris, pictured above, is using "mercy bullets" on his present trip through the wilds of Africa in search of live big game, specimens for a zoo at Riverside, Ill. The "mercy bullet" is of the captain's own invention and does away with unnecessary cruelty and slaughter in the trapping of wild beasts. It is a bullet that combines the principle of a hypodermic syringe with usual action. It contains a chamber filled with an anesthetic and can be fired from a shotgun or rifle. When the bullet strikes an animal, the needle penetrates the flesh, releases the hypodermic into the system, and renders the animal unconscious in a short time. Should the animal prove undesirable, it can be released and in an hour or two it will revive without any ill effects.

KAZOO PITCHER DRAWS EYES OF BIG LEAGUERS

Although he still has another season to play at Kalamazoo College, Richard (Pooley) Watson, of Kalkaska, pitching star of the M. I. A. A., already has drawn attention among big league scouts.

Watson's big achievement to date is his feat of winning the 1927 M. I. A. A. championship. On the morning of Memorial Day, Kalamazoo College was third in M. I. A. A. standings with only an outside chance to capture the title. That day Alma College played at Kalamazoo.

Watson pitched and won both games. He held Alma to three hits and no runs in the first game, and in the second allowed four scattered safeties. His hitting clinched the second contest and materially assisted in the first. Five days later he turned back Hope College in the field day semi-final. The next day, in the final game, he held Albion to six hits and collected three for himself.

Watson has the physique of which big league hurlers are made. He stands six feet high and weighs 190 pounds. Besides developing into a great pitcher, Watson is a letter man in three other major sports—football, track and basketball.

COLLEGE SHOWS FARMERS HOW TO CONSTRUCT TANKS

Demonstrations of septic tank building will be conducted by representatives of the agricultural engineering department of Michigan State College in 13 counties of the state, starting June 14 and ending September 21.

Michigan farmers can build a septic tank which will adequately dispose of all household sewage at a cost of $50, according to the estimate of the agricultural engineering department. Septic tanks which were built according to specifications of the department have been under observation for 15 years, and are reported to have given complete satisfaction.

Counties to be visited and dates of the demonstrations are: St. Clair County, July 5 and 6; Macomb County, July 7 and 8; Jackson County, July 12 to 15; Ingham County, July 18 and 19; Newago County, July 21 and 22; Mecosta County, July 26 to 29; Emmet County, Sept. 1 and 2; Charlevoix County, Sept. 6 to 9; Manistee County, Sept. 12; Oceana County, Sept. 14 to 16; Kent County, Sept. 19 to 21.

YOU DON'T OWN LIQUOR AFTER IT'S SWALLOWED

The State Supreme Court ruled that the possession of liquor—if it is in one's stomach—does not constitute a violation of the liquor laws.

George Leslie, an Oceana County farmer, was arrested by officers on a charge of possessing liquor after he was seen in the act of drinking. The trial judge directed a verdict of guilty, saying that the presence of liquor in Leslie's stomach constituted possession.

The Supreme Court ordered the case back to Oceana County for retrial.

Shin of beef makes a good beef a la mode. Cut it up the same as for a stew, brown the pieces in hot fat, then add water, cook in pot same as for pot roast and serve with gravy. By browning the meat it retains its juices, and this adds greatly to the flavor of the dish.

PUBLIC VIEWS ROYAL CELLAR

The "Newe Wyne Seller," as it is called in old documents relatin[illegible] it, has been thrown open to the public. The "Seller" was built for King Henry VIII in 1535, at Hampton court palace, and is now a vast apartment 60 by 30 feet.

In the days of the early Georges it was cut up into nine separate cellars, some of which were used by the office of works and the lord chamberlain's department, and others by favored residents.

Some years later the work of clearing the original cellar was begun and revealed some of the original platforms of brick on which the beer barrels stood, and even the oak "stillages" which supported them.

As revealed with its pillars, its platforms and its lowered gangways, the "Seller" resembles a miniature railroad depot. Just outside, 35 years ago, several ancient and curiously-shaped bottles of great age were found containing a liquid which proved to be "canary"—an ancient wine much enjoyed by the small party privileged to drink it.

Mr. Ernest Law, an authority on Hampton court palace, one of the oldest in the London area, and now a showplace, says that in Tudor times, when the court resided at Hampton court, the drink bill at modern equivalents would come to about $250,000 a year.

Next to the wine cellar is the "King's Drykynge House," which was the "canteen" or saloon of the palace, where court officials, who had a right to a certain amount of free drinks, took their flagons, pitchers or black jacks to be filled. This is not at present cleared, but it is hoped that it may be.

Speaking of the palace, itself, Law says that 69,000 people have visited Henry VIII's kitchen since 1925; 400,000 have seen Cardinal Wolsey's private rooms since 1923, and a million since 1918 have visited the haunted gallery.

GRADUATES POKE FUN AT TEACHERS, SCHOOL

"The State Board of Agriculture, may God forgive them for their sins."

This is one of the epitaphs with which the graduating class at Michigan State College said farewell to their departing professors, deans and college professors. Upon the campus, appeared a mock "graveyard" with tiny tombstones bearing ironical comments upon the instructors. The idea was novel this year, never having been tried out before.

Although the statements are distinctly derogatory to the staff, no faculty member has moved to disturb the tombstones.

MEMORIAL TO HONOR PIONEER MEMORIAL

The Petoskey Presbyterian Church soon is to dedicate a special bronze memorial tablet in memory of the late Rev. John Redpath, pioneer Presbyterian missionary in northern Michigan. The tablet, the gift of the church from Robert Redpath, of New York, a son of the late missionary, already has been accepted officially by the church.

DRESS MAKING ART IS TAUGHT

As the Domestic Science graduate of Michigan State College steps out into the world to take her place in business or in the home, she can tell you something more than the number of eggs that go into a sunshine cake or at just what temperature the bread should be baked.

And while all of cookery is an important part of the curriculum, not less in consequence are the other arts of home-making, and in these the graduate goes forth no less efficient than in her culinary knowledge.

For the Michigan State College girl can take a piece of material, a tape line, a dress form and a pair of shears—and concoct a most delightful frock in the latest fashion, all without aid of pattern, except the style which she intends to follow.

She also knows her materials. She knows how to shop and get full value for her money. She can tailor a coat to the Queen's taste, and as for hats—she can give them a turn to suit her fancy, and is not one bit dependent upon the whims of the milliner in the matter of headgear. For all of these things are included in her training.

The sewing laboratories of Michigan State College are an interesting place to spend an hour or two. Here the average home-maker can learn much about the efficiency of the coming generation. She will find that while the 1927 girl may enjoy jazz music, and do considerable independent thinking, she has a far better background for home-making than the girls of crinoline days, for she can tackle her problems intelligently, and whistle while she whittles the budget by making her own garments, because there will be no waste of energy or materials in failures.

In this busy bee-hive of young designers, you can inquire what a frock costs, and receive a very satisfactory answer, and while many of the students make their entire wardrobes of hats, coats and frocks, and all at a great saving, instructors will tell you that economy is not the be-all and end-all of the clothing courses.

The prime objects are to learn design and selection, and without practice in construction or applying principles in costume selection, the course would fail. In the freshman year every girl has a course in design, applying the principles in costume selection, another in clothing construction, and one in textiles. If they major in clothing, they may then select three more construction courses—one in historic costumes, one in advanced design, and one in children's clothing.

TROUT UNSOUGHT IN STATE'S EARLY DAYS WHEN FISH PLENTIFUL

Trout were unknown, but perch, pike, pickerel, bass and the mighty sturgeon were plentiful back in 1861, when G. Will Ball first arrived in Midland.

"The Chippewa Indians used to spear the sturgeon," said Mr. Ball, "and it was quite a trick to do this in a light boat. They would strike the large fish, sometimes five or six feet long, with their spear and let the fish go until he was tired out. Then would paddle up, take hold of the spear and tilt the boat to one side and in a rolling motion bring the fish into the boat. To do this and not go into the water was a difficult feat. I finally got so that I could do this with an Indian spear with two prongs lashed on a stick.

"It was no trouble to catch a string of fish in those days. The lumber jacks used to kill sturgeon with their pike poles occasionally during the spring runs. I had never heard of trout until 1867, when the land lookers first brought word that the streams to the north were filled with small fish.

"In 1868 I was visiting relatives in the Traverse bay region when I had my first trout fishing. We went over to Pine river, now Charlevoix. We went up the Jordan river, crossed to the south arm and went up stream. Plenty of speckled trout were cought on that trip. They were found along the banks and under brush and logs, while the grayling were plentiful in the deep holes with a sandy bottom.

"The grayling was a beautiful fish. With a large wavy fin and ranging from 12 to 14 inches, they were a fine game fish. On this trip up to Jordan we got all the trout we could use and brought back a large catch."

"Mr. Ball has caught thousands of trout and fished all the most important streams in the lower peninsula.

MEDAL IS GIVEN BOY WHO RISKED LIFE TO SAVE CHILD

A silver medal, a reward for saving the life of a small boy, has been presented to Frederick Pikkaart, 12 years old, a member of the McKinley School safety patrol, Kalamazoo. Pikkaart snatched a child from under a truck at the risk of his own life.

FEEDING BABY COON KEEPS RESIDENTS OF ALMONT GUESSING

The town of Almont is puzzling out an important question—how to raise a young coon?

Lee Johnson, 19-year-old mechanic, discovered a coon so young its eyes were unopened, lying beneath an oak tree about a mile from Almont. He presumed that the little animal had somehow fallen from the hole of its parents in the tree and brought it home, determined to raise it himself. Johnson offered the young coon scraped vegetables, corn, milk, meat and what not, but it steadily refused to eat. Various outdoor experts offered dietary suggestions, but they proved as futile as Johnson's experiments.

Then he took the coon back to its natal tree, depositing it on the ground near the roots and hoping that the mother would somehow convey it back to its original home. The coon cried lustily for its parent when Johnson left.

But next day when Johnson returned to the tree he found the coon, more dead than alive, still on the ground. He took it home a second time and is endeavoring to feed it milk flavored with sugar, a "sure fire" diet offered by a local trapper.

50-YEAR OLD BOAT, 3-MASTED SCHOONER STILL PLIES LAKE

Forty years ago the Muskegon harbor was crowded with sailing ships of all types and sizes; today there is but one such vessel making regular trips into this port, the "Our Son" of Milwaukee.

A three-masted schooner-barge, the "Our Son" is said to be one of the few vessels of her type still plying Lake Michigan. For the past six seasons she has been in the service of a paper mill located near the channel into Muskegon Lake, bringing in from eight to ten cargoes of wood pulp from the upper peninsula and points on the Canadian shore.

Built in 1875 at Black River, O., the "Our Son" has a gross tonnage of 720 and a net tonnage of 684. She carries from 575 to 600 cords of wood pulp on each trip from up the lake. Her foremast, which stands 130 feet above the deck, carries a raffer, a type of sail which is seldom seen even on the few remaining sailing ships in service on the Great Lakes.

According to Captain Fred Nelson, master of the "Our Son," there are but two other sailing vessels of a similar type now operating on Lake Michigan. They are the "Lucy Simpson," a three-master, also of Milwaukee, and the "City of Grand Haven," a two-master.

TOMBSTONE GOLF ON SPORTS PROGRAM FOR CHICKEN RAISERS

Farmers' "tombstone" golf tournament will be one of the entertainment features in store for 2,000 or more poultrymen who gather in Grand Rapids July 19 to 22 for the convention of the International Baby Chick Association.

The tournament is being arranged by the Michigan Poultry Improvement Association, host to the visitors, and it will be played on the 18-hole course of the Cascade Country Club. Golf balls and sticks will be furnished by a leading manufacturer of athletic goods in an effort to break down farmer prejudice against the game, which so many city men have taken up "for exercise."

Contestants will carry stakes bearing their names and addresses, and before they start playing they will be required to estimate the number of strokes they will require to make the course. When these numbers have been struck off, they are to "die" at that point and drive their "tombstone" stake at the point where the balls come to rest.

SPRUCE HENS BELIEVED AGAIN GAINING FOOTHOLD

Spruce hens, once plentiful in Michigan, are believed by department of conservation officials to be regaining a foothold, especially in the lower peninsula.

The spruce hen, a species of grouse, has been extinct for a number of years in the state below the straits, and, as a result, they have been rigidly protected by game laws. Only a few have been found in the deep swamps of the northern peninsula.

Wardens on northern forest reserves reported seeing several of the hens on high land. The birds appeared to be well fed and young.

Because of its lack of sporting instincts, the spruce hen is not regarded as a desirable game bird. Old hunters recall how it was easier to kill the hen with a club than with a gun. The meat is described as tasty, except in the winter, when it becomes pungent.

30 BILLIONS OF STARS "FOUND"

Modern astronomy is the interpretation of the messages of light, and modern astronomers, within the last 25 years, have deciphered these messages to obtain astounding facts on the total number of stars, their distances and sizes, their ages and composition, movement and relation of life. That is the gist of a lecture read at the meeting of the American Philosophical Society by Dr. C. G. Abbot, acting secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and director of its astrophysical observatory.

The new astronomy estimates the number of stars at 30,000,000,000, according to Dr. Abbot. The first step in attaining this estimate is the elimination of the idea that the number of stars is infinite. This is accomplished by the argument that if the stars were infinite in number, the whole vault of the heavens would glow as brightly as the sun.

The next step is to divide the stars into magnitudes of brightness. Then selected areas over the heavens are photographed by processes which record stars a million times fainter than the naked eye can see. The number of stars brighter than specified magnitudes lying in many sample regions of the sky are counted. It is found from these counts that a definite relationship exists between the ratio of increase of the numbers of stars and their magnitudes, and that this ratio of increase tapers off toward zero as the stars grow fainter.

Dr. Abbot summarizes several remarkable recent methods of sounding the depths of space. It was about the year 1840 before the first star distances were measured, and at the beginning of this century less than 100 were known. In the last 25 years nearly 2,000 star distances have been measured by observing the angular displacements of the stars during six months' period.

PETOSKEY GIRL IS NAMED HEAD OF LEAGUE AT YPSI

Miss Reva Jarman, of Petoskey, has been elected president of the Women's League at the State Normal College of Ypsilanti, the highest honor the women of the college can bestow on a fellow student. The Women's League is an organization of all the women students on the campus, and plays a prominent part in college affairs, handling many problems which arise within the ranks of the student body, and also serves as a medium for exchange of ideas between students and faculty.

Miss Jarman was elected over two other candidates.

Miss Evelyn Elliott, of Mt. Clemens, was chosen vice-president of the Women's League; Miss Olga Harem, of Flint, secretary; and Vera Banister, of Springport, treasurer. The ten cabinet members chosen are: Gwendolyn Clancy, of Leslie; Louisa Hoagland, of Britton; Mildred Ritter, of Toledo, O.; Lillian Walker, of Jackson; Beatrice Munger, of Clinton; Frances McClellan, of Warsaw, Ind.; Audrey Pray, of Ypsilanti; Dorothy Wiles, of Bay City; Gladys Bayler, of Ypsilanti; and Gertrude Sinclair, of Port Huron.

GOES TO COURT TO KEEP $25,000 HE GOT FOR $50

Charging the State of Michigan is a poor loser, E. L. Golden, president of the American Woodenware Co., has filed answer to the State's proceedings in Circuit Court at Manistee to set aside a deed given the company to its factory building.

The State sold the property, which is on the bank of the Manistee river, for $50. Subsequently it discovered the state appraiser inadvertently reported it as a nominal value, although its actual worth is approximately $25,000, Golden said.

The American Woodenware Co. owned the factory until about a year ago, when it reverted to the state for non-payment of taxes.

1928 AUTO TAGS TO BE GREEN WITH LETTERS OF WHITE

White lettering on a green background will form the distinguishing color of Michigan automobile license plates for 1928, according to an announcement from the secretary of state's office.

Contract for 1,256,000 of the new plates has been awarded to the Jackson prison industries.

Several minor changes are announced in make-up of the plates. The word "Michigan" will be carried above the number on passenger car licenses instead of below as has been the custom. Instead of designating 1,000,000 as a diamond cipher, the number on future plates will be written in full.

Truck plates will start at the million figure. On passenger cars it is planned to distribute the larger numbers to the rural districts so as to eliminate any confusion of discerning numbers in traffic.

PURCHASE OF FORT ASKED IN PROTEST TO SAVE OLD MOUNDS

Purchase of Fort Wayne by the city, the county, or the state, and preservation of the historic place as a public park, is advocated by the national defense committee of the Detroit Board of Commerce.

The secretary of war will soon put the property on sale. In a letter to Secretary Dwight Davis, Lieutenant-Colonel Walter C. Cole, Chairman of the defense committee, protested against the granting of permission to the University of Michigan for excavation of the Indian mounds located on the fort site, and revealed the plans for preserving the landmark as a park.

PLANS PROBE OF BIG ESTATE

Atty.-Gen. W. W. Potter announced he would leave soon for Germany to investigate the validity of claims of alleged heirs of George Klump, Detroit recluse, who died in 1916 leaving 37 acres of land in Greenfield Township, Wayne County, valued at $250,000.

This property finally reverted to the State and was placed in the hands of the State Board of Escheats after Alex J. Groesbeck, then attorney-general, went into Circuit Court and proved to the satisfaction of the court that an alleged will written by Klump on the back of a promissory note, leaving his property to a "friend" in Detroit, was a forgery. This was known as the "paper bag" will case.

An attempt was made later by the State Board of Escheats to sell the property, but this was balked by Charles J. Deland, then secretary of state, and a member of the board, who charged that Thomas O. Johnson, former state superintendent of public instruction, and Frank D. McKay, state treasurer, the other members of the board, had not advertised for bids in a proper manner. A second sale of the property, advertised for July 13, 1916, was halted an hour before bids were opened, when an injunction was served on the board members by the Federal Court at Detroit.

The injunction was based on a recovery suit filed in that court by 10 purported cousins of Klump living in Germany, and an eleventh alleged cousin, George Klump, Jr., living in Ohio.

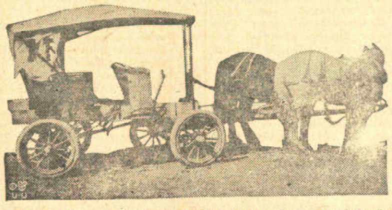
Motor Died Of Old Age--So "Lizzie" Is Now Family Coach



The "Nth" degree of economy was recorded when an industrious farmer of Dufur, Ore., "converted" his old flivver into a buggy. He removed the engine, the heart of which was no longer beating, and took off the hood. Then he attached an ordinary wagon-tongue to the front end of the "used-to-was" car, patched up and inflated the old tires, brushed it up a bit and—presto!—the he had a smooth, easy-riding family coach!

$80,000 IS LEFT TO WOMAN WHO SPENT YEARS IN POVERTY

After years of poverty, Mrs. Rose Lespes, 55 years old, of Flint, was notified that she had fallen heir to $80,000, left by her former husband, Isaac Rubenstein, who died recently in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Lespes, according to her neighbors, has made it her custom to work half of each week at general housework, obtaining enough money to support herself, and having the remainder of her time free to do nursing in poor families. She made no charge for her nursing service, it is said.

The police of Flint were asked by Los Angeles authorities to locate her, and when a policeman found her at home and told her of her fortune, Mrs. Lespes is quoted as having said:

"If this is true I can do real things for poor families now."

Mrs. Lespes divorced Rubenstein 18 years ago and remarried. Her second husband is dead. Rubenstein, in his will, left all his money to Mrs. Lespes.

DYNAMITE CAP HURTS BOY, $25,000 IS SOUGHT

A damage suit naming Hjalmar G. Nelson, Muskegon contractor, as defendant, and asking $25,000, has been filed with the county clerk by Stella Gushow, acting as next friend to Edward Gushow, a minor. In the suit the plaintiff contends that the contractor, while constructing a road near Bay City last summer, was negligent in permitting explosives to be left where children could reach them. It is alleged that the Gushow boy sustained permanent injuries when a dynamite cap, obtained from the construction camp, exploded in his fingers.

LANDMARK AT PONTIAC IS BOUGHT FOR $100,000

For more than half a centry a landmark of Pontiac, the Julia Taft residence, on North Saginaw street, has been sold to a Detroit firm for more than $100,000. Mrs. Julia Taft, widow of Judge Taft, has resided in the home for the last 45 years. She has lived in Pontiac approximately 60 years, and this year celebrated her hundredth birthday anniversary.

PEACHES HIT BY EARLY ICE

So-called winter resistant varieties of peaches have suffered almost as much from the cold as other varieties known to be susceptible to injury by freezing, according to reports from all sections of Western Michigan's fruit belt, forecasting the smallest peach crop since 1918.

Injury to the crop is traceable to the sudden drops in temperature Dec. 13 and Jan. 6.

The South Haven variety suffered the least winter injury, but many plantings of this peach were badly damaged in orchards inland from Lake Michigan. Elbertas, the leading commercial variety, are known to be susceptible to winter injury, and all inland orchards of this sort will produce little or no fruit, growers report.

The Marquette peach, a variety discovered by Michigan State College pomologists at Marquette, proved to be no more hardy than the Elberta.

Reports from the fruit belt indicate the peach crop will come chiefly from orchards on the west side of Berrien, Van Buren, Allegan, Oceana and Mason counties. Early estimates place the prospective production around 350,000 bushels, compared with 1,600,000 bushels last year.

Letter From Jennie Bennett Terrian

At the annual North Adams High School Alumni banquet the following letter was read and many of the members called back pleasant memories of the days when the writer was perceptreess of our High School:

THE PAST AND TO-DAY

"My dear Mr. President, My dear Pupils, Old and New Friends:

When I left you thirty four years ago this June my heart was sad. I was leaving you not knowing when I might return, yet hope lived within me. I viewed it as a smiling rainbow and have followed it thru' the many years, hoping we might meet again.

"I'm looking backward now in time. I'm facing you in the old school room. I see your faces and imagine I hear your voices. Its the sound of life and laughter and the sound is sweet to me. You have made your grades and Commencement is over. You have gone out into old, cold world—the business world, and how has it served you? What have you done? What joys and sorrows have met you on its rugged pathway? Undoubtedly you have found, as well as I, a few thorns hidden among the gloriously tinted roses that have and still d blossom all along this pathway.

To you this pathway is only half way reached; to me it is nearly at the end, for I have declined into the vale of years, nevertheless whereso ever the age point lies we find life a strange avenue of various colored trees and flowers. At this, the Commencement or youthful age it's lightsome and buoyant for which we are very glad. It's the gift of God and is divine. Yes, 'tis the story of love and trouble, of trouble and love that travel together the world through.

So let us ask ourselves these questions: Did we catch the transient hours and did we improve them as past us they flow? Why? Because life is only a short summer and we just a little flower ceased to bloom to fade and to die. This being true now let's stand up and walk steadfastly through it; failing not for sorow, faltering not for sin; but onward—upward till the coveted goal we win,

How glad I am to know you have decided to re-organize this Alumni and I do hope you will never let it die again. Our last banquet was at the hotel; I think Mr. Gates was the proprietor, anyhow we had two feasts fit for the Gods. One for the stomach's sake; the other for the brain. My stomach is the one that responds more quickly. Yes, I fully realize that good digestion waits on the appetite, and health on both.

I most surely would be delighted to sit around this banquet table with you to-night; to enjoy all the feasts to renew our comradeship: to see your children and to hear dear old Hammond, the faithful and loyal, speak his speech and see the many happy expressions that would flit across his face. It would give me a thrill for my life and a joy untellable.

I would like to ask each one of you these questions: What are you doing? What ambitions have you aspired to? Or if you found Ambition an idol on whose wings great minds were carried to the extreme. If I could do so, I think I could hear these answers, Yes. Ambition snapped us all up; we are farmers, lawyers, merchants, salesmen, doctors, fathers, mothers, homemakers and builders of honest men and women. I know fully well I would hear these replies and they would be music to my ear. Even though we have been apart all these years, the stars tell me you have been true and faithful and have climbed the ladder SUCCESS. Of course you will not have reached the topmost rung until you hear the last call—Come up Higher.

Now shall I tell you why I can't be with you tonight much to my sorrow and disappointment? Silence gives consent, so here goes. I am associated with a business college It is in session the year round and my vacation period is in the latter part of August.

A number of higher accountancy students are in the last stages of the work—while I am not of very much value to them, yet, I'd feel guilty if I deserted them even for just one week at this time of their work. The work is technical and they must have assistance even though the quality is poor. Then, too, the Law and Personal Efficiency classes will be ready for their final tests and they are mine as well. This is the usual yearly occurrence so you can see why vacation is so late in the season. I am planning to start on my short trip east and south during the vacation period August 14 to September 3.

I will be in Reading, my old home town, Saturday night, August 14th Here is my wish plan. I wish we might all meet on the old school house grounds for a picnic supper Monday, August 15th. I could reach you there by the middle of the afternoon You heard I said picnic supper, didn't you?"

Fred L. Westcott and wife and daughter, Edith, and Martin Wescott and family were in Berrian county one day last week on a business trip.

The Densmore Family reunion was held at the home of Jesse Dewey on Wednesday with 65 members of the family present. At noon a picnic dinner was served on the lawn after which a business meeting was held. Relatives were present from Toledo, Ohio; Elkhart Ind, Tecumseh, Mich., and Romulus. Reunion next year will be at the home of S. P. Densmore in Elkhart on the fourth Wednesday in June.

PREPARING FOR SUMMER MILK

This big truck hauls the milk of several farms. Right—Milk must arrive at the plant in good condition.

It is now the time when the dairy cow, the foster mother of mankind, is to be given a chance under natural conditions. New information which has recently been discovered at some of the state agricultural colleges indicates that green feed and sunlight combined make it possible for a cow to build up her system by storing minerals and other body reserves, provided she receives a sufficient supply of good feed.

A heavy milking cow, however, will need feed in addition to pasture if the milk flow is to be maintained. Milking heavily with pasture as the sole source of feed causes the cow to lose weight. This loss of weight should be watched and extra feed given to prevent the cow from becoming thin, which will result in reduced milk production later.

With the coming of the summer season, new and interesting problems present themselves which concern the care of milk. The first warm nights are apt to cause milk to sour unless summer care is practiced. It is important to take precautions which will keep down the number of bacteria and prevent their growth. To do this milk must be produced under clean conditions, be kept in thoroughly cleaned utensils, and be cooled as soon as possible after it comes from the cow.

Summer is one of the easiest seasons in which to produce clean milk. There will be times, however, when a considerable amount of mud and dirt will collect on the udder and flanks of cows, and if a portion of this material drops into the milk it will injure its keeping quality. The dirt which collects on the flanks and udder should be removed before milking time by wiping with a damp cloth. If the hair on the udder and underline is clipped short the cleaning can be done effectively and quickly. Incidentally, the practice of clipping the cow all over before turning to pasture not only makes it easier to keep her clean, but it relieves the itchy condition that develops during the stabling months.

Much of the milk produced in the country is hauled long distances in large trucks. In summer if the cans of milk are not protected from the sun before leaving the farm, and again enroute, it will be difficult to keep the milk sweet until it is used. Every time a day's milk is returned to the farm, for whatever reason, there is a distinct financial loss. Only by producing a sanitary milk and then taking care of it can satisfactory results be obtained to all concerned.

The Bath School House Episode

We hear a number of different opinions as to the destruction of the Bath school house but the fact remains that a man with an exceedingly ugly disposition accomplished the deed and as to his sanity—well, the coroners jury and the State Police exonerated him from that charge point blank Circulars have been broadcasted through the state accusing the Catholic church of the crime, which did to death 85 adults and children at Bath, but upon what authority we do not know. State Troopers who were early on the scene failed to mention this Of course we know Kehoe and his wife were devout Catholics, and his family were of the same breed but there the matter ends. Many school houses in Michigan have been destroyed and most of us conjecture what is the hoodoo, but so far as we know nobody has been able to fix the blame. In some cases fire-bugs have confessed the deeds but nothing concerning Catholicism could be linked with it Therefore, it is politely suggested that something suspected but never known, does not exist, except in imagination. Personally, we believe any Protestant church allowing this propaganda within its walls, is taking a long chance under any circumstance, and we should require a signed statement from the author

Fruit Tonics For Spring

A GENERATION ago spring was the time to dig sassafras root for tea and gather herbs with medicinal properties. Today we add fruits with medicinal properties to our diet.

Pineapple recipes for spring tonics have come into prominence with the somewhat recent discovery that canned pineapple—which is the only ripe pineapple in our markets—is a potent aid to digestion, so much so, that it is employed as a component part of certain pre-digested foods, and that the juice is a curative in cases of throat troubles. Its valuable vitamin content and energizing natural sugar make it a particularly important food for the spring season when body tissues need renewing.

Pineapple Ginger Cup is an invigorating spring drink. Extract juice from sour oranges after one dozen cloves have been stuck into them for one hour. Use twenty-four lumps sugar or their equivalent in granulated sugar; squeeze juice from three lemons and add to sugar. Add one-half teaspoon cinnamon, one-third teaspoon grated nutmeg and let stand two hours. At the time of serving, add one quart ginger ale, one cup Hawaiian pineapple juice and enough water to make strength desired. Pour over cracked ice.

An apple a day discourages doctor visits, and Baked Apples with Pineapple minimize druggist bills as well. Pare and core apples. Fill centers with crushed Hawaiian pineapple to which has been added a little butter melted and some sultana raisins. Put apples in a pan with a little water flavored with a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Bake until tender. Baste frequently, remove from oven, sprinkle with granulated sugar mixed with a little cinnamon.

Hawaiian Pineapple Salad furnishes the needed fruits and leafy vegetable in the most delightful form. Use one medium can sliced Hawaiian pineapple, one-half grapefruit sliced, one tart apple cut in small cubes. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves with a sweet dressing made from one cup juice from maraschino cherries. Garnish with some of the cherries.

Miss Beatty, a returned missionary from China, gave a very good descriptive talk at the Methodist church Sunday morning. Among other things she mentioned the exceedingly limited railroad facilities of so large a territory as these Chinese provinces and she said many prosperous cities were one hundred miles from the nearest railroad. The whole of ancient China contains as much railroad mileage as Michigan only. The women work hard and the nation is made up of small tradesmen who do practically all work by hand, although many of the arts and sciences were known in China before the Christian Era. Streets are narrow in cities and congested: travel is conducted by sedan chairs carried on the shoulders of coolies who do considerable of the lugging incidental to transporting freight. Roads are too narrow for an automobile and farms average five acres each. Houses are rarely over one story high.

HISTORY TOLD IN COURT FILES

Tucked away in dark cubbyholes of the file room in the basement of the Wayne County Building are antiquated volumes whose dust-covered pages tell of happenings that even the oldest living Detroiters have probably forgotten long ago.

On a high shelf so far removed from an electric light that it was impossible to distinguish any of the titles of the conglomerate mass of volumes, one, with a heavy coating of grime was drawn forth, the dirt wiped away and the title revealed: "Justice Court Docket of Henry Chase, Nov. 13, 1854, to March 24, 1855."

In a bold slanting hand were written in this book the proceedings in 1,248 cases heard by Chase during a period of five months.

The cases which Chase heard during the last months of 1854 and the first two months of the following year were to the clerk who entered them merely a dry record of day-to-day litigation, but to the present generation they are interesting for their word pictures of 73 years ago, when Detroit was a little, slow-moving city.

Rents in 1854 had little in common with those of 1927, as is borne out by an entry for Oct. 27, 1854. This was the case of Mary C. A. Smart and David Smart and Elon Farnsworth, executors of John R. Williams, deceased, vs. William Fisher.

"Case called," reads the record. "Plaintiffs appear and declare against Williams for rent and occupation of the premises at 114 Lafayette street east from October, 1854, to October, 1855, at $40 per year, credit of $5. Judgment rendered for plaintiffs against the defendant for $35."

Nor were the wages for servants excessive then. Here is the case of Miss Anna Whalen vs. Isaac Solby, on November 2.

"Case called and parties appear. Plaintiff asks damages of $7.50 for five weeks' labor. Upon the filing of proofs a judgment rendered for the plaintiff for $7.35."

The unruly action of horses and dogs provided a basis for much of the litigation of that period, and on every other page or so are entries similar to the following:

"Nov. 6—Frederick Buhl and Richard Jelly vs. William Weyburn. Plaintiffs declare against Weyburn as the owner of an unruly horse, knowing him to be such and causing by means of such horse the destruction of a certain awning of the value of $25. Evidence filed and judgment rendered against the plaintiffs for cost of suit."

Nov. 8, 1854: "Arthur Quinn vs. Daniel Dymond. Plaintiff declares against the defendant for an unlawful action committed by the defendant's dog upon the son of the plaintiff, Dec. 24, 1854, and asks damages of $100. Discontinued by the plaintiff and satisfaction acknowledged."

A few days later the docket shows that a Miss Susan Fawcett appeared in court to seek damages of $100 sustained by dogs belonging to one Diedrich Gagnier, "asaulting, biting and injuring the defendant while traveling upon the public highway."

On April 20 Miss Fawcett discontinued her suit, reparation apparently having been made.

The next entry shows conclusively that some of the young women who lived in the '50s did other things than sit and knit by the fireside.

"Jan. 10—The people vs. the Misses Harriet Sly, Sarah Curtis, Margaret Penman, Julia Condon and Jenny McCoy, for riotous conduct in Hamtramck. Defendants in court. It is not considered that there is enough to hold the defendants for riot. They are discharged."

PASTOR OF 5 CHURCHES TO BE RETIRED ON PENSION

Rev. Ole Amble, pastor of five Danish Lutheran churches in Montcalm county for the last 53 years, will receive a pension from the people of these churches for the rest of his life when he retires from active work this summer.

The veteran pastor, who is beloved by the people of Montcalm county of all creeds and races, will reach the age of 80 years on July 8. He wishes to make way for a younger man and the church men are making plans to obtain a new pastor.

EX-DETROITER TAKES GIRLS' WELFARE POST

Appointment of Mrs. Hazlett Huey Nesbitt, former Detroit woman, to be executive secretary of the Girls' Protective League, has been ratified, and Mrs. Nesbitt has taken up her work at Pontiac. She was formerly connected with the juvenile court and Children's Aid Society of Detroit. The new secretary is a sister of Miss Leah Huey, of Detroit, former head of the woman's division of the Pontiac police department.

EX-MINING CAMP TO HOLD HOME COMING IN LONE TINY CHURCH

The twenty-first annual homecoming of residents of Central, a former mining location north of Calumet in the wilds of Keweenaw, will be held during the last week of July, according to plans completed this week at a meeting of officials in Calumet. The homecoming is centered about the little Methodist church at Central and each year hundreds of persons, who lived in the little mining camp, more than 30 years ago, return for a day.

The tiny church has been entirely rebuilt and restored to its original condition. The grounds about the place have been reconditioned, contrasting sharply with the now delapidated homes of a race of British miners, who came to the Keweenaw district when copper mining was in its infancy.

E. C. Mitchell, of Hancock, is chairman of the committee in charge of the homecoming this year. Arrangements are being made to secure a speaker of national prominence for the occasion.

The committee appointed to complete the plans are: Music, E. C. Mitchell, of Calumet, and Al Nicholls, of Osceola; speaker, E. J. Hall, Calumet, and A. P. Eva, Laurium; reception, Wilfred Hollman, Houghton; J. G. Bennetts, Calumet, and Henry Cox, Laurium; services, Thomas Uren, Mohawk.

MANY SEEKING TO ENROLL AS COACHES AT SUMMER TERM

More than 200 requests for information concerning Michigan's Summer session for athletic coaching have been received at Ann Arbor. Inquiries from as far south as Chile, South America, to Vancouver, British Columbia on the north, and from Maine on the east to California on the west give indication of the interest shown by potential coaches in Michigan's physical education training school.

Last year, the total number of students enrolled in the coaching school stood well over the hundred mark, and in view of the large number of information requests received this year, an enrollment of more than 125 is expected. Just as last year, the bulk of applications or requests for information have been received from the Middle-West and South, while prospective students from the East and far West, as well as from Canada and South America constitute a goodly portion of the expected enrollment.

TAHQUAMENON IS OPENED TO WORLD BY NEW BOAT LINE

Many upper peninsula people are looking forward to the opportunity of visiting Tahquamenon falls near Newberry this summer.

Heretofore it has been almost impossible to get to the falls, which are one of the north country's greatest scenic assets.

The Newberry Lions club, however, co-operating with the people of Newberry and the McMillan township board, is preparing to put a comfortable passenger boat on the Tahquamenon river run from Newberry during the tourist season, making a daily round trip at small cost.

The falls have a sheer drop of about 40 feet and are 200 feet in width, with a great volume of water. The 25-mile journey down the winding river through a primeval country is very interesting. Deer are a common sight along the banks and beaver dams are plentiful.

The Tahquamenon river is mentioned again and again in Longfellow's "Hiawatha," both as the hunting base of the hero and as having been made navigable from end to end by Hiawatha and Kwasind.

WEST STATE REALTORS FORM ORGANIZATION

The west Michigan realty board was organized at a meeting at Cadillac, embracing real estate agents of Wexford, Manistee and Benzie counties. J. B. Wagner, of Cadillac, was elected president; Bert R. Hendel, Manistee, vice-president; Clyde U. Smith, Beulah, secretary; Hans A. Wendel, Onekama, treasurer; and L. B. Donnelly, Cadillac, and Henry C. Chadwick, Frankfort, directors.

NEW MUSEUM AT ANN ARBOR

Upon the corner of Washtenaw and North University avenues, in Ann Arbor, is a steel, concrete and stone skeleton of a new university building. In its present form it creates no different impression in the mind of the observer than hundreds of other every-day building scenes that greet us on every hand.

Yet when this structure is completed, when the last rug is laid, when the moving vans are forgotten and it is in readiness to open its doors. Michigan will have come into possession of the most unique, complete up-to-date and modern structure of its kind in all America.

This building, named "The University of Michigan Museums," will stand without an equal among the college museums of the world and will open its doors in June, 1928.

Quite true, it may not rank in completeness as a public show place with the Smithsonian Institute of Washington, the Field Museum of Chicago or the American Museum of Natural History of New York, yet from an academic standpoint it will be far ahead of any institution of a similar nature possessed by any other American college.

The bulding will be fully equipped for studies in zoology, anthropology, botany and palaeontology. The zoological department will contain equipment for experimental breeding of animals and birds and the study of growth, pathology and economic zoology. Provision is made for graduate students and for the expert work to be done for the State Department of Conservation and other co-operating institutions.

At present there are four independent museums at Michigan: Zoology, geology, anthropology and botany. Zoology is headed by Dr. Alexander G. Ruthven; geology by Dr. E. C. Case; anthropology by Carl E. Guthe and botany by C. H. Kauffman. These are all independently organized and administered and when the new building is completed they will be presided over by Dr. Ruthven, with the title of "Director of Museums."

When it comes to silent partners, many a hen-pecked husband fills the bill.

If some men would work more and hope less they would get along better.

NIGHT SPRAYING AS BEST IN INSECT WAR TO BE DEMONSTRATED

The merit of night spraying of fruit trees will be demonstrated this month on the orchard tour of the Michigan State Horticultural Society in Southwestern Michigan. For the first time since the horticultural tours were started more than a decade ago, a night meeting has been scheduled this year for the purpose of demonstrating this new practice.

The demonstration will take place the first night out of Grand Rapids in the orchards on H. O. Roth's farm near Fennville. Dates for the tour have been set by Secretary H. D. Hootman, of East Lansing, as July 26 to 28, starting from the Graham horticultural experiment station near Grand Rapids.

The night spray will be applied by Prof. H. A. Cardinell, Michigan State College extension pomologist, who has been advocating the new practice since results obtained in experiments on the Huron Fruit Farms near Ann Arbor last summer proved that night applications were both economical and practical. He will use dust sprays in the demonstration.

To spray at night, Prof. Cardinell equips the spray tank with spotlights capable of illuminating one tree or more at a time. He reports the insecticides can be applied more rapidly at night as there usually is little or no wind to interfere with the work. Night spraying, he explains, makes it possible for growers to make applications more timely and to produce cleaner fruit.

The horticulturists will spend most of their first day at the Graham horticultural experiment station inspecting various projects of Michigan State College.

The South Haven experiment station and the pollination experiments on nearby farms will be inspected the second day en route to Berrien County, where the third and last day of the tour will be spent.

MICHIGAN ORDERS ARE GIVEN ARMY OFFICERS

First Lieutenant Henry I. Szymanski, U. S. A., has been ordered from the Philippines to the Second Infantry at Fort Wayne, Mich. Second Lieutenant George Oetinger, Jr., army ordnance reserve, of Iron Mountain, Mich., was ordered to the Rock Island, Ill., arsenal for a period of training.

AUTOS BARRED FROM CAMPUS

Student automobiles at the University of Michigan were banned unconditionally by the Board of Regents.

The following resolution was adopted unanimously:

"No student in attendance at the university from and after the beginning of the first semester this comig fall shall operate any motor vehicle. In exceptional and extraordinary cases in the discretion of the dean of students this rule may be relaxed."

Tentative plans for the government of automobiles permitted in exceptional cases call for their registration with the dean of students, the payment of a fee, the issuance of a license tag and supervision by a special officer. A committee formed of the president of the student council, the dean of students or his representative and five others to be appointed by the council head, will sit on applications for permit. No permit is to be granted unless the applicant proves that he is the lessee of a garage in which to house his automobile.

The regents' action is interpreted as a frank admission that the restrictive measures operative for the first time this year were failures and could not be enforced adequately. The wholesale ban has been impending for some time, a hint as to its probability having been given two months ago by Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the university.

DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER HAS PERFECT SCHOOL PAPER

Miss Mary Jackson, daughter of Dr. John B. Jackson, of Kalamazoo, president of the Michigan Medical Association, has the honor of being the only high school student ever to have turned in a perfect paper in the state academic high school contests held annually at Mt. Pleasant Normal. She has just achieved this record for a second time.

LIQUOR IS POURED OUT THAT JAIL MAY BE RAZED

Several hundred gallons of confiscated whisky and wine and 7,000 bottles of beer were poured into the sewer drains in the yard of the Wayne county jail, as the first move toward vacating one wing of the jail, to be razed to make room for a modern structure.

LAPPER COUNTY IS FAVORED SPOT OF NATURE LOVERS

Lapeer county, with its fine game cover, its dense woods and swamps, remains a naturalist's paradise despite the encroachments of civilization.

Possessed of more wooded area than probably any other county in lower Michigan, Lapeer still contains a small quota of ruffed grouse, plenty of pheasants and quail and such rare species of predatory birds as the great horned owl, which is fast disappearing in other sections of the state.

Three blue heron rookeries may be found in the county and each contains a fair sized population of adult birds. A few miles from Lapeer some 30 or 40 herons nest annually in three ancient elms situated in the center of a deep woods. Two other heronries are but a short distance away in swampy territory.

In addition to the great horned owl, which is guaranteed an easy living by the plentitude of rabbits and small fur bearers, the eared owl, short-eared owl and screech owl, commonly inhabit the wooded areas. Every representative Michigan hawk is found in the county, particularly the red-shouldered and red-tailed hawks, which are very common.

Shadrach W. Vincent, of Lapeer, has obtained many fine photographic studies of hawks, owls and other predatory birds, often climbing 30 or 40 feet and braving the ire of the parent birds to obtain close-ups of their broods.

Freezing weather often brings disaster to the owl's brood, Vincent reports. The "chicken owl," as the big marauder is termed by farmers, hatches its eggs during February and begins the task of incubation in often the bitterest of weather. Cold and sleet sometimes kills the young owls when they are partially fledged. After the sleet storm of May 9, 1923, Vincent found two young great horned owls, both dead, about 50 feet from their nest. They had been carried bodily from their home by the wind and deposited on the ground to die from exposure.

Sometimes the great horned owls raise their brood in nests occupied the season before by red-tailed or red-shouldered hawks. On visiting an owl brood in a hawk's nest the young naturalist discovered one of the young was slowly choking to death from a piece of decaying meat lodged in its throat. Vincent removed the bone.

Twins--And Lots Of 'Em!

Out in a certain west coast city, they have what is known as the "Breakfast Club," the purpose of which is to "confuse mankind." Its members are all twins who, like the well known "Mike and Ike"—look alike. No wonder then that our photographer came back dizzy after snapping the above group study of the membership roll.

9 PASTORS SERVE IN CHURCH'S 75 YEARS

Organized 75 years ago, the Greenville Congregational church has celebrated its Diamond anniversary. The church first came into being June 5, 1852, in the village school house with an initial membership of 11. Since that date the church has increased steadily in size until today it has more than 400 members and is known as one of the strongest Congregational groups in the state.

In 1856 the first church building was dedicated. It was of wood and stone and was built on the site of the present building in 1880. Additions and improvements have been made from time to time since that date and the present valuation of the building and grounds is set at approximately $100,000.

During the 75 years of its existence but nine pastors have served the church. The longest pastorate was that of Rev. James L. Patton, from 1866 to 1890.

VOILE DAINTY FOR FROCKS

Voile is one of the cotton fabrics which has come into special prominence this season. It has been made in a great many charming plain colors, and also in interesting designs, introduced by printing or embroidery.

In texture voile is thin and semi-transparent. A good quality will retain its body and not become fuzzy. The yarns are tightly twisted and any fluff is singed off the yarns before the cloth is woven. Experience in sewing is necessary, however, more than with some of the closely woven cotton fabrics, because even though the material seems firm when it is purchased, it may pull, ravel, or stretch if not carefully handled. This tendency can be overcome by basting, and the practiced seamstress should have no special difficulty. The effects obtainable with voile are well worth this extra care, and often compare well with these produced in much more expensive fabrics.

Now uncertainty has given away to certainty and Milady knows just what will be smart—what will be necessary, and what she is going to have for her summer wardrobe!

The reason some women always look elegant, always charmingly gowned and up to the minute in style, regardless of their income, is simply this—they are cognizant of their individual needs, and aware of everything that is in their wardrobe. Thus no single thing is purchased that does not have a place.

You must know your own type, which you ascertain through your coloring then you must know what colors are particularly suited to your personal combination of coloring, and what colors, being unflattering, you should avoid. —

Then you must know which line suits your particular figure and which, being unflattering, you should avoid.

There is no particular art in knowing these things—for they are very simple facts which, once mastered, are yours forever. Knowing them, you know just what to look for in selecting your clothes, and, knowing for what to look you always find it in an obliging mode that has learned to cater to our awakened intelligence which no longer takes the dictates of Fashion unquestioningly!

The two-piece jumper frock is the pre-eminent sports fashion. It differs slightly from that of last season, however, in that the loose blouse is a bit shorter and the plisse skirt has been superseded by a box or side-pleated one.

Crepe de chine has by no means seen its day, but it has yielded first place to the new and light, soft woolens, such as kasha, jersey and cashmeres. And then, many of the smart sport frocks have skirt of pleated crepe de chine and a soft woolen blouse or sweater.

But there are enough smart one-piece dresses to satisfy those to whom jumpers are unbecoming. Remember, if your hips are at all inclined to be broad, any line going from left to right but serves to accentuate this ungracefully.

To cream butter and sugar easily, use a wooden potato masher. Try it when you make your next cake.

To keep glassware bright, wipe as soon as removed from the hot suds. Tumblers used for milk should first be rinsed in cold water.

ENGINE'S WHISTLE KNOCKED OFF SO TRAIN IS STALLED

The Pere Marquette engine which pulls the mixed train that occasionally runs between Almont and Port Huron recently met with a peculiar mishap. The engine had gone on to a siding that led to a gravel pit when a wire that was stretched across the track caught the whistle of the train and pulled it off, allowing the steam to escape. Before the hole could be plugged the boiler was cold and it took about two hours to generate sufficient pressure to allow the train to continue on its way.

CRADLE OF LOUIS XIV IS BELIEVED DISCOVERED

What is believed to be the cradle occupied by Louis XIV. as a baby, was discovered in the Caledonian market by Herbert F. Ellis while he was on a periodical tour of London's east end.

The gilt cradle is in the form of a shell designed as a chariot on wheels, is padded with silk and has elaborate carvings underneath. It was bought for a small sum and experts have already valued it at $5,000.

The cradle was brought to England by Madame Tussaud, owner of the famous wax works exhibition recently destroyed by fire, who purchased it during the French revolution.

GROUSE HUNTNG BAN DECIDED UPON BY STATE

An order will be published soon closing the season on grouse, Leigh J. Young, director of the Department of Conservation, said. The order was authorized at the June meeting of the Conservation Commission, but withheld until a canvass of the state could be taken.

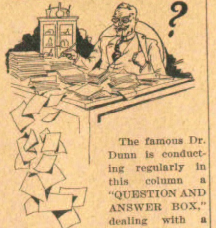
DO YOU KNOW ?



The famous Dr. Dunn is conducting regularly in this column a "QUESTION AND ANSWER BOX," dealing with a large number of subjects of general interest to the readers of this paper. You are invited to send in your questions to Dr. Dunn, care of this paper, and they will be given prompt consideration; and where deemed of general interest, will be answered through this column so far as space permits.

Dr. Dunn has for a long time been a member of the executive staff of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company of Detroit, and has become famous through his weekly broakcasting over WGHP. The doctor has had wide professional, commercial and sociological experience, and while the absolute accuracy of the answers to all questions is not guaranteed, the most authentic sources of information will be the basis of all replies.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

Why is it that the more luxuries that are made for mankind to spend money on, apparently the more money there is in existence to expend for these luxuries?

A. Inasmuch as large numbers of men and women are employed at good wages in the manufacture of "luxuries," and because considerable skill is required in producing articles of quality, the very wages accruing from their manufacture make it possible for ordinary working people to purchase many of these so-called luxuries.

The intensiveness of mass production manufacturing in this country makes possible the sale of "luxuries" at so low a price that the working people who help in their production are able to purchase them in considerable quantities. Motor cars are a notable example of the luxuries of yesterday that are now within the reach of nearly everybody's income.

Then, too, the very production of luxuries from the raw resources of the country increases the national wealth divisible between the inhabitants of the United States, and places more money in circulation. Naturally, the more money in circulation the greater the buying power of the individual. And the mass production of luxuries certainly places a great deal more money in circulation than would otherwise be the case.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

Is there any danger connected with a radio set?

A. The neglect of a few important details may make it a menace to your home. Many of the hazards may seem unlikely, but no chances should be taken with any electrical equipment even if the voltage is comparatively low. One of the fire dangers connected with the present use of radio equipment is the inclination of radio enthusiasts to experiment with lighting circuits and high voltage systems. Care must be taken with even a six-volt storage battery, as the current is sufficient to start a fire if the terminals or the wires leading from them become crossed. There have been several cases of fire starting in this manner.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

What is meant by "Radio Tours"?

A. Radio Tours are a series of "Little Journeys for Michigan Motorists" broadcast weekly over WGHP, Detroit, by the Director of Tours of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company. To date there have been broadcast some ten "Little Journeys" and the entire series consists of twenty, which are being broadcast every Friday night at 7 o'clock sharp.

These "Little Journeys" are in the nature of a public service given free to the motoring public, and are supplemented by individual tour logs obtainable at the Touring Bureau of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company, 3154 Cass Avenue, Detroit, either by telephoning Cadillac 9761 or writing or applying in person.

The "Little Journeys" are laid out in various parts of historic Michigan, and offer a wide variety of Saturday or Sunday holiday trips, as they are mostly under 150 miles round trip, starting out from Detroit and returning thereto. So far a number of the "Little Journeys" have taken in a number of the less frequented routes as well as the historic points of interest pertaining to the older settlement. Plenty of tourist parks and camping spots are noted; and where a longer trip such as to Indianapolis and return, or even into Canada, is desired the Touring Bureau is glad to furnish special logs.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

Why are people killed by home electrical appliances?

A. Electricity is one of the safest methods of producing light, heat and power when the appliances for its use are properly installed and handled with reasonable care. Nevertheless, fires and serious accidents to persons, sometimes causing death, continue to occur. Most of the accidents occur because persons are ignorant of the proper way of using electricity or because they are thoughtless or careless.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn:

How many people were injured at railway crossings during the past year?

A. Last year 2,492 persons were killed and 6,991 men, women and children were injured in accidents at railroad crossings; and in addition to the large number of deaths, the totally incapacitated amounted to tens of hundreds.

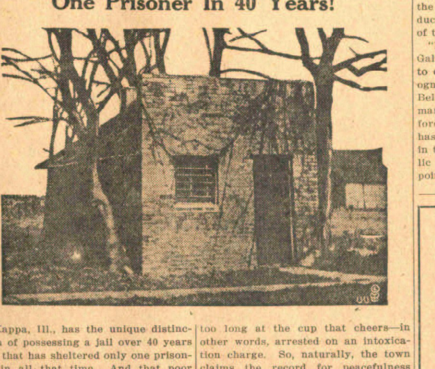
Lucky Shot Wins Him Servant For Life

It happened in the African wilds. A maddened rhinoceros was charging Yusef Saleh, the dusky fellow pictured at the right above, and would have killed him but for a lucky "last-second" shot from the gun of Peter Koch de Gooreynd, Belgian sportsman and diplomat (shown at the left).

Believing that a "man's life belongs to him who saves it," Saleh has sworn to serve de Gooreynd for the rest of his life!!

One Prisoner In 40 Years!



Kappa, Ill., has the unique distinction of possessing a jail over 40 years old that has sheltered only one prisoner in all that time. And that poor fellow was "jugged" for dallying a bit too long at the cup that cheers—in other words, arrested on an intoxication charge. So, naturally, the town claims the record for peacefulness and law-abiding citizens.

CHALLENGE TO WEATHER MEN

Exceptional weather conditions this summer, which seem to bear out, in part at least, the prediction of Herbert Janvrin Browne, independent weather forecaster, four years ago, that 1927 would see a repetition of the destructive weathers of 1816, again have focused attention on the controversy between Mr. Browne and officials of the United States Weather Bureau.

Mr. Browne for several years past has been attacking the weather bureau for what he claimed to be its antiquated and unscientific methods of forecast. At the same time he has asserted that by his own ability, by the use of ocean temperatures and observations by the Smithsonian Institution observatories as to variation in heat of the sun, he can make long distance weather forecasts. The weather bureau, on its side, has stuck to the method of making weather forecasts exclusively from a study of atmospheric conditions on the North American Continent and its surrounding oceans, and has branded Mr. Browne's outgivings as all guesswork.

Mr. Browne reviews current weather conditions in relation to his own and the Government weather bureau's forecasts and challenges the latter organization and its officials, who control the American Meteorological Society, to defend their failure to develop long-range weather forecasts.

"Since 1904 the United States Weather Bureau has been receiving thousands of 'current reports' made by commercial and Naval vessels. These reports carry two daily observations of ocean surface temperatures for commercial vessels on their voyages, while Naval vessels take them every two hours. Numerous other records of atmospheric temperatures, wind directions and other valuable material accompany these reports. They cover all the oceans. In addition the weather bureau has received for a number of years surface temperatures taken daily at every lighthouse station on the American Coast. The bureau has huge masses of similar data derived from foreign sources.

"With all this material available no discoverable results have been obtained by the weather bureau in deducing the elements of long-range weather forecasting. Only since my own long-range weather forecasts, based on ocean surface temperatures, began in 1924 to attract world-wide attention, has the weather bureau shown any signs of awakening. Even the last three years have been productive of nothing of value on the part of the weather bureau.

"It took the great disaster of the Galveston flood, in September, 1900, to compel the weather bureau to recognize that the meteorologists of Belen Observatory, Havana, had for many years been making accurate forecasts of West India hurricanes. It has taken the present great disaster in the Mississippi Valley to focus public attention on the fact that I had pointed out its strong probability four years ago, before the House Committee on Agriculture, on Feb. 6, 1923. I definitely forecast its coming this spring in an address before the annual convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association at Rochester, N. Y., June 22, 1926. I had forecast May 27, 1926, the heavy rains of August, September and October in the corn belt and the valley which laid the foundation for this flood and I had forecast Jan. 1, 1927, the spring precipitation which caused its culmination. The record of all these forecasts is available.

"More broadly familiar to the general public is the forecast made in 1923 and repeated on many occasions since, that the current year would witness a return of the adverse conditions of 1816, historically known as 'the year without a summer.' These forecasts invariably have carried the explanation that this term is a misnomer, that the spring and summer of 1816 had episodes of record-breaking heat as well as record-breaking snowstorms, killing frosts and freezing temperatures, and that they also were characterized by extreme droughts. It is still a moot question whether the droughts did not do as much harm as the low temperatures. The convenience of the historical title for that year has led to widespread publication of statements that I had forecast a 'summerless year,' a 'heatless summer,' or a 'cold winter,' obscuring the fact that I consistently have pointed out that 1927 would have waves of extreme cold and there would be wide areas of drought."

A new custom may be inaugurated at Michigan State college with the formation of an advisory body, to be known as the Federated Group of Alumni clubs and to represent each of the alumni organizations, the class secretaries' council, the executive committee of the association, and the state board.

During the last few months, the college alumni association has been active in organizing local clubs in this and other states. The plan is to call on the campus, a college congress, representing the various organizations, to arrange for the proposed federated group.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

RASPBERRIES ARE BOON TO BEE MEN IN LAPEER

Lapeer county bee men report unusual activity among honey bees. About the only blooms they can secure honey from at this time of year is the raspberry, and it is said that raspberry patches everywhere are loaded down with the little workers. Ordinarily bees secure much honey from apple blossoms, but this year there were but few of these, and even the little sweet to be secured from that source was curtailed by the cold, wet weather, apiarists say.

What Do You Actually See?

Because of the constant agitation of our Connecticut "wet" press, the writer resolved to repeat to himself the above question in order to determine, for himself at least, the actual facts. What effects of prohibition do we actually see, not hear, or even read?

In 1910 I came with a thousand others from the shores of Europe to discover a new future in the New World. To my amazement, I found poverty and want right in the great city of New York, and my astonishment was increased when, walking through Battery Park, near the harbor, I saw men staggering under the influence of liquor. Again and again I was accosted by some bloat face for a dime. The smell of the saloons on nearby streets penetrated the air, and everywhere sleeping drunks and "bums" gave evidence of the awful effects of the open saloon. Here, in the midst of well-dressed people, were countless rows of men lined up against the walls or seated upon the benches, whose faces were puffed up, whose eyes stared at the passerby with the stare of an inveterate drunkard, whose clothing was the shabbiest; victims of America's alcohol traffic and profit-at-any price business.

When I arrived in a certain Southern city, almost the same story repeated itself. Here, too, were professional drunkards who lined the wharf and the shadowy places along the water front. Within a stone's throw of the finest Protestant churches was the red-light district, approved by city authorities, sanctioned, apparently, by the church, and frequented by all sorts of people. Here the rum traffic gloried in its spread of misery and the wrecking of human lives. The open saloon greeted the immigrant everywhere—it was easy to enter—but never easy to come out. Liquor was sold all hours of the day and night, including Sunday. I came in contact with a family whose custom it was to send their little twelve-year-old daughter into a nearby saloon with a tin can to fetch the family beer. More than once I accompanied the girl and felt horrified and helpless when I saw that child push her slender body through the riff-raff leaning against the bar. And just as often as the beer drinking began it ended in a family quarrel. Thus there followed in the wake of "innocent beer" broken homes and hearts.

A friend, formerly of Boston, tells me that when he lived in Boston fifteen years ago, no respectable citizen dared to venture beyond a certain deadline near the water front. In Hartford, Connecticut, a certain street had a saloon for every five steps. New London, in the same state, had seven rum shops within one minute's walk of one another. I recall vividly how each Saturday night, as I was returning from work, I passed staggering men and those awful "heaps of humanity" lying in the gutter. The two things that impressed my mind were the awfulness of America's booze business and approved houses of prostitution. They always walked hand in hand. And I could not help wondering how you, citizens of these United States, could and would permit this life-wrecking flow of liquor; but you did. And now you have forgotten its shame and its sorrows its incurable drunkards, its heart-broken mothers, and the children who wondered why nobody cared!

But, behold! A few weeks ago I visited New York and the same old stamping grounds. I walked its streets at night; I strolled thru, the Bronx and the Bowery late in the evening and tried to see, with as much open-mindedness as I could, what I could actually see. I made it my business to eat in the best and the worst places. I sauntered through Battery Park, and I walked through Broadway's display of white lights. And what did I see? Battery Park with its "bums" and human wreckage is gone forever. The park is there, and its famous aquarium, but the beer vapor has gone—not a single beggar accosted me, and I saw not a single sleeping drunkard any where. In one celebrated restaurant I saw three young men serve liquor out of a flask—and that was all. It was Saturday night, and great throngs were out on Broadway. Whatever else I may have seen, this I could not deny, that all through my wanderings I met but one drunkard in the very self same places where I had seen a hundred in a single night. And if cafe life seems "wicked" my dear folk, it is a thousand fold better than it was just ten years ago. In one of the popular "lunch wagons" in the Bronx I heard a man say that he had been drunk for a week but he was almost sober that night. His appearance was that of a man who is an incurable drunkard. I purposely sought out the places where I had seen much wickedness a few years ago, and I could not but thank God—the change was astounding.

Mrs. Myrtle Crabtree and J. H. Hoover, late of the State of Ohio, were arrested about 5:30 Sunday morning, June 19th. in the Lakeview District schoolhouse in Amboy Township. Complaints of the residents of the vicinity that some one had been ringing the school bell during the night brought officers to the scene. Hoover seemed to be suffering from a delusion that he was being pursued by "seven car loads of "red men" and explained that he had rung the bell for "assistance to hold them off". The couple were brought back to jail and lodged for a few days, during which time a bath and some eats made quite a difference in their appearance and actions. The lady was released in custody of her brother, while Hoover, who claimed various parts of Ohio as his residence, was started back to the Buckeye State.

Floyd Keller and Arthur Sorrel of Hammond, Ind. were arrested Sunday in Allen, enroute to Detroit, for driving 2 cars on 1 set of license plates. Their "faux pas" was that the plates did not belong to either of the cars. They were brought before Justice Fitzsimmons on Monday and charged with "switching" license tags, to which they plead guilty and drew a fine of $10 and costs each, or 10 days in jail, Floyd and Arthur have been guests of the County during the past week and will continue in those capacities for a day or two yet.

On Monday Otto Ziegler, one of Hillsdale's alleged liquor vendors was released on $1500 cash bail.

Ed Tremaine, formerly a well known figure in the Hillsdale Co. liquor world was taken to Ionia on Tuesday to begin serving his time. Bye-bye, Edward.

The Ford Sedan belonging to James Freeman, of Pittsford, which was stolen on June 16th, was recovered on the 21st by members of the Sheriff's Department. The car was minus tires and tools and one or two other parts, but was otherwise O. K. The Office is working on the case and expects to lay the responsible parties by the heels in short order.

Geo. R. McVay, of Jackson, known in police parlance as an "alimony hound", was arrested in Jackson on June 21st for being in arrears in his alimony payments. He straightened up his affairs to the satisfaction of the Circuit Court and was released Saturday forenoon.

Arthur Gezelman and Mrs. Gertrude Bumpus, of Hillsdale were arrested Friday and turned over to the U. S. authorities for prosecution on a Mann Act charge.

Jay Grubbs, late of Hillsdale, and Montpelier, Ohio, was arrested Saturday night for drunkenness and disorderly conduct on the streets of Hillsdale.

During the past week, officers have been spending considerable time on U. S. 112, at Jonesville, enforcing observation of the Village traffic ordinances, especially in regard to the new stop lights. A number of motorists have been stopped and warned and "bawled out" according to the good old police methods. A few others, more flagrant violators, have been escorted to the Justice of the Peace, where they left some of the coin of the realm behind them. This latter way seems to be the most effective and there will be plenty more of it until people learn that the speed limit in a village is 20 miles per hour that it is safest to keep to the right, and that a red light means Stop.

Plowing Done Now Halts Army Worms

Precautionary measures taken by Michigan farmers now will save serious losses from the inroads of a threatened invasion by the army worm, according to a statement given out by the entomology department at M. S. C.

Farmers can find whether or not the army worm is present on their farms by examining the oats on low spots in their oat fields. The army worm is a cut worm and prefers to have its food wilted before eating it. The worm cuts the leaves from the oat plants during the night and hides under clods or rubbish in the daytime.

If the oats show that army worms are present, the area where the damage is being done should be plowed immediately to keep the worms from maturing and spreading to a larger area.

Although the loss of the leaves from the oats may not appear serious at first, it should be remembered that later the worm will eat the entire top of the oat plant. Unless the worms are brought under control the entire field of oats may be lost, according to the college specialists.

A state of preparedness now will stop the worm before its myriads are ready to start on their devasting march through Michigan crops. When the march is once begun, control measures are difficult and expensive and crops in fields invaded by the army worm on the march disappear as if by magic.

The army worm is only one-half inch in length now, and any increase in size which it makes is made at the expense of crop yields.

Farm Women Plans Summer Institute

Farm women of Michigan will gather at M. S. C. July 27 to August 1 for the second annual Farm Woman's Institute, to study the problems of the rural home.

The questions to be studied during the conference include home improvement, child training, citizenship, nutrition, and the farm income. Mrs. Dora H. Stockman, member of the State Board of Agriculture and a leader in Grange activities of the state, will be general chairman of the program.

Speakers of state wide and national reputation will address the various meetings. Discussions will be lead by outstanding farm women of the state and members of the staff of the home economics department at M. S. C.

The Farm Woman's Institute will be held this year during Country Life Week, scheduled for July 31 to August 6 at East Lansing Seventeen other organizations interested in the problems of agriculture and rural life will meet during this occasion, which is expected to bring together the largest and most representative group of its kind ever assembled.

The American Country Life Association, holding its tenth annual meeting, and the American Farm Economics Association will be two of the prominent groups which will gather during the week, together with the International Country Life Association and many other organizations of national and international scope.

Again the Board of Health calls your attention to the deadly tetanus germ which manifests itself in a wound which has at this time of year absorbed dirt or foreign matter and is particularly virulent in 4th of July cases. The same story is being told us this year as last, viz: No more fireworks or explosives to be sold for July 4th after this season, but the heart goes out to dealers who are loaded with tha stuff and we wonder if they'll be fully stocked up next season. As a matter of fact the business ought to have been abolished three years ago. The Legislature tried to put this law in action, but through some loophole the thing did not mature and cannon crackers and other devil-may-care noise producers are with us still, so it is safe to assume that this season will show a fair average of "didn't know it was loaded" accidents. Be prepared with your bandages and disinfectants such as per oxide of hydrogen, lysol and carbolic acid. If you have children it is impossible to keep them from getting mixed with fire-crackers as any dealer will sell them—so prepare for the worst. Added to the terrible mortality of premature explosions is the awful havoc percipitated by gun powder in various forms—the anvil, the small cannon and the loaded gun or pistol, all of which are bound to take their toll. It is to be hoped the State of Michigan will take steps before another 4th of July rolls around, to stop the crazy business.

When the pumpkins began to turn yellow, plans were laid for a great community exhibit. Besides the poultry display, farm produce exhibits from the surrounding country were entered. Altogether it made an impressive exhibit, bringing home the lesson to Point Marion people that there were great undeveloped opportunities within their own dooryards which they had overlooked.

The annual exhibit will be continued in the future by the bank. A horse show is sponsored, better seed corn and seed potatoes are made available to the farmers for planting and the bank will continue to build agriculture in the community as a sound basis on which to work. "It will probably be some time before we shall see larger fruits of our endeavors," the banker says, "but we are looking ahead ten to fifteen years."

THE NEW MENACE

Hitch-hiking its way towards the nation's corncrib, the European corn borer is threatening to destroy crops to the value of billions of dollars and chase skyward the cost of production. If it worms its way into the Wabash and Mississippi Valleys, it can readily float downstream, spread out and become more difficult to control. Proper cooperation of all concerned will, no doubt, enable us to continue to grow corn profitably.—Agricultural Bulletin, American Bankers Association.

SAYS SCHOOLS ARE ATHEISTIC

University President Denounces Spread of "Four A's" in Secular Schools

Atheism is being promoted in an organized way in the colleges, universities and even in the high schools of the United States, the Rev. John P. McNichols, S. J., president of the University of Detroit, told members of the fourth degree Knights of Columbus, assembled in Convention at Detroit, recently.

Quoting frequently from articles by Homer Croy, published recently in "The World's Work", the speaker showed that a deliberate attempt to spread atheistic doctrines under the guise of "modern" philosophy among students of educational institutions all over the country is being made by the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism. Among the institutions where units of this association exist is the College of the City of Detroit, a municipal institution, he charged.

Further excerpts from Mr. Croy's articles were quoted by the speaker to show how the officers of the association boast of the number of professors in American colleges who are linked with the atheistic movement under cover and how these teachers are gaining in boldness and confidence and consequently are widening the scope of their activities.

Cites Loeb-Leopold Case

Father McNichols held his listeners in close attention while he reviewed the dangers of the atheistic movement today, citing such instance of its effects as the Leob-Leopold case in Chicago, which, he said, was the outcome of materialistic teachings at the University of Michigan.

"Such men as Dr. Clarence Cook Little and Professor Wenley, both of the University of Michigan, are teaching under what is called 'academic liberty'. But in their cases liberty has turned into license," the speaker declared.

Catholic parents who fail to send their children to Catholic universities or colleges are risking their children's faith, he continued, in giving a short historical resume of the University of Detroit.

New Buildings Ready

"We have the new buildings under way and this fall we will carry out to Livernois and the Six-Mile Road two departments, arts and sciences and commerce and finance, leaving the law school for the present on Jefferson avenue," he said.

Father McNichols emphatically denied that the University of Detroit contemplated discontinuing its Law School. Not only will the Law School continue but it is thought that in the near future the University will be able to announce the openings of departments of medicine, dentistry, and a school of education.

No God—No Country

"There can be no country where there is no God," Father McNichols said. "We obey the laws of the nation because we recognize that God is behind and beyond those laws. Russia is an example of a country trying to get along without a God. The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, of which I have just told you, has for its purpose the removal of chaplains from army and naval units, elimination of the Bible in oaths, repeal of the Sunday observation laws and removal from coins of the motto, 'In God We Trust'."

The speaker reiterated that the most effective antidote against the rising tide of atheism is the sending of Catholic boys and girls to Catholic schools where they will profit by good example and by teachings which, he said, "are not filled with falsehood and rot."

MEMORIAL SHAFT NEARS COMPLETION

The Memorial Shaft to Mary Immaculate, raised on the campus of the new Marygrove College of the Sisters Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, through contributions from men all over the United States who were students in schools taught by the Sisters, as a testimonial of grateful appreciation to their early teachers, is rapidly nearing completion.

The shaft, 50 feet in height, will rise midway between the liberal arts building and the principal campus entrance. It will be of solid stone on a raised platform the corners of which will support large urns. Surmounting the shaft will be a super life-size statute of Mary Immaculate, wrought in Carrara marble.

Abolish War—Never

"Man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn" is the old saying and it has come down to us with a significant meaning. The human disposition is not all that could be desired, for men will differ and in the intenseness of their differences they become violent and repudiate each other. The League of Nations as proposed by President Wilson was a wonderful compact calculated to abolish war for all time from this sphere but how little the Nations took it up when the final test came Down at Washington to-day they are talking about abolishing armaments and reducing the number of battleships, but do you hear anything about reducing the aeroplanes of war? You do not. The reduction of battleships is merely junking something which is obsolete and cannot be used. Henceforth wars will be fought largely with aeroplanes, poison gas and undersea boats. Black as night looms Sovietism and Socialism in Russia, and this young giant of the eastern world is going to produce a terrible struggle before many years. Already in England they tell us, the party is firmly entrenched, and while it is conceded that Russia cannot handle her own situation and never has since the advent of the Reds, yet she is constantly reaching out to other lands, getting recruits to the most infamous doctrine the world ever knew. The Red regime in vice-ridden Russia is nothing more or less than the expulsion of christian decency and the installing of something which is against all the higher ideals of civilization—and the crisis has not yet arrived. This is anarchy under another caption but its deeds are a hundred times more brutal than anarchy ever planned. They tell us (we hope not blatantly) that some of our most popular colleges in this country are taking up the Soviet principles and exploiting them, in some cases secretly, for no apparent reason but to down Christian decency and to render the Bible impotent and unreliable. There is a magazine published in Washington D. C, called "Religious Liberty" making its appearance quarterly, which denounces all attempts to enforce christian principles such as the Sabbath desecration acts, baseball seclusion, horse races, pleasure junkets etc., claiming all such blue laws are domineering and impudent, but we have never yet been able to trace the editorial policy of this little periodical to the real christian people which it claims as its instigators. It talks scripture and religious obeyance but from a far different standpoint than the Christian Advocate or any paper we know of. It would not be surprising if the magazine "Liberty" was really an off-spring of Agnosticism.

Most of our higher authorities are admitting that the reduction of armament braggadocio means nothing peaceful—just a side joke to divert the attention of our citizens from the main issue. Just a few months ago the yellow journalists began to cry "war" and play up the scare heads in their papers for Central America, claiming that Secretary Kellogg's interference in Nicaragua was a harbinger of trouble, but we have found that so far as these little principalities of Central America or of Mexico are concerned we need not alarm ourselves; they are too small and too weak to stand up before United States with affrontery, and they never will unless by hook or crook some powerful government like Japan or Russia should assume a protectorate and make the issue their own, The Japanese war bogey is about exhausted in this country, and with the settlement of the Pacific Coast trouble with Japan we hear little of it. Some claim the trouble is setted far from satisfactory to Japan but there is one very sure thing—Japan is not looking this way for supremacy—she is too busy watching Russia and China. Poor old china with her untold millions of the uneducated and down-trodden is suffering probably the most severe punishment at present.

When they talk of abolishing war—they are building the flimsiest air castles because with our ships in every port of the known world, our citizens—active beligerant, grasping, well supplied with American dollars, are pushing their way into every foreign land where the backward traditions are holding sway and wherever trade can be exploited and we simply must protect our own. Instances of this recently cropped out in China during the internal wars where Americans were present and engaged in legitimate pursuits, and we could not turn them over to the rabble. The ignorant middle class of China have for centuries hated the "Foreign Devils" and are hating them to-day and their own government seems unable to manage the situation hence our interference. We shall not be forced to war by our own cupidity, but we shall be obliged to mix or desert our own good citizens in an hour of need. At the present time and under the present ideals of the Nations of the Globe "League of Nations" or "Disarmament" is as impossible as a trip to the moon.

Letter From Mrs. Jennie Bennett Terrian

Last week we started a letter from Mrs. Terrian which was read at the annual Banquet held here for the High School Alumni. This week we are finishing the letter in full:

THE PAST AND TO-DAY

"I'm always hungry even if I am an old lady and a homely one at that. I think I'd better place a placard on my chest so that you will know I'm actually the original Jennie Brown, Bennett and now Terrien. These sixty-two years have played havoc with my physiognomy—so be prepared to receive a shock.

I would be delighted to stay over night with someone of you. I have always had a standing invitation to do so by your worthy president, my good big boy, James Post. Perhaps he does not live there now. If this plan coincides with your plans and we do have the supper, you make all the arrangements. Tell me what to do when I reach there and let me know the details of the plan. My address is 1701 East Fourth steet Sterling, Illinois. or at Brown's Business College.

I'll have to leave there early Tuesday morning as I'm scheduled to leave Detroit by boat for Buffalo and must visit Jackson this same day to look after some business interests there.

No you will not have to meet me at the train as I come in my own car. Will I be alone? No; My niece, Mrs. Meredith, always accompanies me on my trips as you know Mr. Terrien is dead and I'm all alone in the world.

Now Mr. Hammond, can't you arrange your work so as to take a part in that supper and help answer some of the questions I'm nearly bursting to ask? Remember August 16. I knew you would say Yes. I thank you and we will all expect you.

Of course you all remember Bert Morehouse. Excuse me I should have said Dr. Morehouse for that is the way he is styled here in Sterling. I think perhaps he will make arrangements to come. Bert is very kind to me and we have many nice visits going over the good old times at North Adams. Bert corresponds with Harry Barnes so I often hear of him through Bert. Harry travels for a stove and furnace company. I think this is a very fine position for Harry because he always made it warm for everybody around his seat in school. Just the same I like him and he is one of the boys of whom I'm very proud.

Bert often tells me I punished him for telling the truth. He still says it was Harry who threw the paper-wad though. I don't believe this punishment is the cause of his hair turning gray. He maintains very ardently that it has affected his viewpoint of veracity. How do you think I should be punished in the world to come for this condition?

To you who have just graduated I extend my heartiest congratulations.

Let me suggest one word of advice. Hitch your ideals to a star. Then climb step by step the rocky path until you reach the desired viewpoint. Yes, you can do it; it's all in your determination. It's just your own true self.

I thank you all for this invitation to be with you. I shall be there in spirit if not in person. I'm so glad to be remembered.

I'll say good night as does Shakespeare

Good night! good night! Parting is such sweet sorrow; That I'll say good night until tomorrow.

God bless and keep you my dear children all.

Good Night.

New Traffic Rules

The following traffic rules were studied out by one of our subscribers and sent to us for publication, It must be this man drives a car, otherwise he oould not hit the nail on the head:

1.—Never signal when about to turn; let the man behind you use his imagination. Remember the twelve millionth Ford is now in the ditch.

2.—After parking and you wish to back out, never look behind. Let the other guy think for you. Just run back and see how good he is at dodging.

3—It is well, when coming out of an alley to step on the gas. Never mind the traffic: come out boldly with a rush. If others object. give them the icy stare.

4—Always sound your horn loudly and insistantly when there is a tie-up in traffic. If the fellow ahead refused to run into a street car and keeps you waiting three minutes, tell him just what you think of him.

5—If the speed limit is 20 miles, slow down to 32; courtesy means safety.

6—Never pay any attention to stop signs, especially at the junction of crowded thoroughfares, He who hesitates demeaneth himself before the traffic cop and makes the undertaker listless.

7—When entering a quiet zone always open your cut-out and loudly blow your horn. If others resent it, pay no attention to them Its your horn.

8—Whenever you see a safety zone drive boldly through it: pedestrians should stay on the sidewalk. Be independent.

9—Never dim your lights; if the fellow can't see to pass you, let him wait until you get by. What do you care if he does go in the ditch with his wife and family?

10—Never pass another car until you see one coming from the opposite direction. Then you will have just enough time to crowd past and get a good laugh on both drivers when they have to slow up for you. This is always good and perfectly safe.

11—Never stop to allow people to get on and off street cars. This is a foolish waste of time. Hit the women and children first.

12—Remember the golden rule. Always get someone else before they get you. It is better to have hit and smashed than never to have hit at all.

13—Drive like split on all occasions. Never mind, you may get killed; if you should, the undertaker needs the business.

Blackbirds Best Singers

In a singing contest between birds the blackbird would win, says Prof. C. J. Patten of the Royal Institution of London in the Popular Science Magazine. Of all feathered songsters the blackbird keeps the best time and rhythm and his song has the best tune. A thrush, however, could beat him in endurance, some thrushes being able to sing 16 hours a day.

PINEAPPLE PIE IS REALLY EXCELLENT

A FLAKY pie-crust, so light that it melts in the mouth, filled with fruits and topped with a fluffy meringue, is as good for children as for grown-ups. If these fruits are combined with pineapple, the pie affords not only the tart taste that is so well liked in pies, but also properties which act as a digestive. The enzyme bromelin, contained in pineapple, aids in the digestion of other foods.

Many new and delightful recipes have been devised for pineapple pies, both plain and in combination with other fruits. The following recipes have been tested and found as economical and simple to make as they are pleasing to taste:

Criss-Cross Apple and Pineapple Pie: Heat one cup crushed Hawaiian pineapple and add to one cup of tart apples, pared, cored, cut in eighths and cooked until tender, or one cup of canned applesauce may be used instead. Mix three-fourths cup sugar or slightly less if using the canned applesauce, one-eighth teaspoon salt and two tablespoons flour. Add the hot pineapple and bring to the boiling point, stirring constantly, and add one teaspoon butter. Cool slightly, add one beaten egg and two tablespoons lemon juice. Pour into pastry-lined pie pan and arrange strips of pastry across the top. Put into a hot oven and after ten minutes reduce heat and bake about thirty minutes longer.

Banana Pineapple Pie: Mix one-half cup each hot water and syrup drained from crushed Hawaiian pineapple and bring to the boiling point. Add one-half cup sugar, stirring constantly and remove from the fire. Add one teaspoon butter, three-fourths cup well-drained, crushed Hawaiian pineapple, two beaten egg yolks and two medium-sized bananas (sliced thin.) Pour into pastry-lined pie pan. Bake until pastry is well browned. Remove from oven, cool slightly and cover with a meringue made from two stiffly-beaten egg whites and two tablespoons powdered sugar. Return to oven and brown meringue slightly.

Pineapple Cocoanut Meringue Pie: Heat one and one-half cups milk. Mix four tablespoons flour, one-eighth teaspoon salt, one-half cup sugar, add the hot milk and cook in double boiler about twenty minutes or until mixture is thick and flour thoroughly cooked. Stir into two beaten egg yolks, return to double boiler and cook until mixture thickens. Cool, add one cup well-drained, crushed Hawaiian pineapple, one-half cup shredded cocoanut and one-half teaspoon vanilla and pour into baked pie crust. Add two tablespoons powdered sugar to two stiffly-beaten egg whites and spread on top. Sprinkle with cocoanut and brown quickly in hot oven.

PINEAPPLE IN ITS NATIVE HEATH

WHEN you visit Hawaii and have your first glimpse of a pineapple plantation in full growth—when you see endless miles of magic carpet spread out through Hawaiian valleys and over hills, with nothing else in sight; when you stand at any angle and see military rows of spear-like leaves, evenly spaced and embedded with golden fruit, the rows curving perhaps to conform to the contour of the land, but always with that same mathematical spacing—you will think pineapple plantations have grown in Hawaii since Hawaii began.

They seem as much a part of native Hawaii as do the great volcanic mountains which encircle the island, as old perhaps as Haleakala, which Maui, the Polynesian demigod, is said to have climbed, and from its peak lassoed the sun and made it stand still.

On the contrary, however, pineapple plantations are one of the newest things in Hawaii, and, for that matter, the newest big plantations in the world. They are less than 25 years old.

The plantation land which today boasts the most beautiful and highly developed farms in the world, was a few years back, wasteland—poor grazing land for cattle. Wild pineapples used to grow there, but they were a very inferior quality and eaten only by the natives.

How then, in so short a time did the growing of pineapples become one of the big industries of the world? The answer lies in the goodness of the Hawaiian pineapple, canned.

In European countries, slips of wild pineapple brought by early Spaniards to South America were grown in hot houses and provided a rare luxury to delight the jaded taste of kings. Everyone would like to eat what kings eat—and the demand for pineapple was established.

An English nurseryman, Captain John Kidwell, went over to Hawaii to experiment with the pineapple on its native heath, determined to supply this demand. He found that Hawaiian sunshine was better than hot-house glass for bringing out the rare juices of the fruit, since pineapple belongs to the family of air plants, and literally lives on this sunshine.

When he found that these luscious, fully ripe pineapples could be exported by canning, reaching the consumer with more flavor and food value than the fresh pineapples which must be picked green, his problem was solved.

Today, the automobile trip to Wahiawa, the chief center of Oahu's pineapple plantations unfolds remarkable pictures of the home of the "pine." Leaving Honolulu the roadways wind down deep gulches and up again, and finally out of sugar-cane into pineapple. On each side of the wide expanse of table-lands rise jagged mountain ranges which form a background for magnificent fields of pineapple extending up the slopes and seeming to hang there like gorgeous patterns on an unending tapestry.

Growers, many of them native Hawaiians, take delight in explaining the cultivation of the pineapple: how it is planted from slips in soil which has been disked, and later floated to the level of the surface. Fields are mulched with an asphalt-treated paper so spread as to provide spaces necessary for harvesting. Plants are set in double rows through holes punched in the paper. This mulching reduces weeding costs and increases the yield of fruit.

In twelve to fifteen months after planting, purple blossoms appear and six months later the fruit is matured and ready to be canned. The picked pineapple makes its journey from the field to the can the same day, or within 36 hours. No other fruit is handled more quickly.

At the factory the pineapple is fed to sizing and trimming machines and the peel comes away as two halves of a cylinder, leaving the fruit ready to be trimmed of any defects. This is done by women who wear rubber gloves for two reasons: first, for sanitary purposes, as these canneries are the last word in sanitary methods; and second, because pineapple has a highly digestive ferment, bromelin, which attacks the skin.

Syruping is done by machine, and the pineapple is then subjected to a treatment not common to most fruits, that of mechanically vacuumizing the can in order to draw every bit of air out of the tissues. The cans are then passed through cookers and cooler, and are ready to be shipped.

Aboard the big steamships which leave the langorous waters of the tropics for the choppy northern seas, are thousands of cans of pineapple which bring with them the richness and flavor that has made their native heath one of the garden spots of the world.

"CASES" SEEN IN FAMED WORKS

And now the doctor looks at art. Every man, woman or child, depending on his or her experience and critical equipment, who enters the Detroit Institute of Arts and strolls through the galleries and past the magnificent examples of artistic creation, old and new, sees the paintings, sculpture and examples of craftsmanship through different eyes.

But let the doctor look at art. As the doctor looks at life and sees humanity as a great group that is in need of curative or preventive medical measures, so he looks at art. Despite his knowledge and experience of art, he is first a critic pathologically and his initial reaction is to diagnose the cases—and the cases are the subjects of the paintings and sculpture.

From the primitives to the moderns, the artist seems to have had through the ages a penchant for depicting in paint on canvas persons who show—to the trained eye—evidences of the need of medical attention.

One of the largest and most conspicuous paintings is the famous canvas by Peter Paul Rubens showing "Abigail Meeting David with Presents."

"Look at Abigail," said Dr. Don W. Gudakunst, of the Department of Health. "It is plain that she is a goiter patient and in need of treatment."

Cornelius De Vos' "Portrait of a Woman" next enters the doctor's office.

"This woman is nephritic," said Dr. Gudakunst, "and it is doubtful if she lived long after this portrait was painted. It is plain that she is exemplary of a high meat diet and probably ate too few fresh vegetables."

Metsys' "Virgin and Child," according to Dr. Gudakunst, was posed by a baby model, who, if the artist faithfully depicted what he saw, was suffering from rickets, which is displayed by the enlarged joints and peculiarly shaped head.

"The good roast beef of England" stands out in the next picture considered by the doctor. The rosy plumpness and self-satisfaction of Sir Henry Guildford, as painted by Hans Holbein the Younger, stand smugly out on the canvas.

"Sir Henry suffered from high blood pressure," said Dr. Gudakunst. "It is plain that high living and high eating gave him that expression which is commonly seen in the faces of men today who disregard temperate habits of eating and drinking. Probably if the artist had painted a full length portrait and had depicted his subject faithfully, the canvas would show a bandaged foot caused by gout."

The magnificent "Marchesa Spinola," by Van Dyck, one of the treasures of the Art Institute, is more than a masterly depiction of an ancient aristocrat to Dr. Gudakunst.

"This patient—or subject," said the doctor, "despite her aristocratic bearing and expensive clothing, is obviously of low mentality, and there is a lack of character depicted in the woman's face although the artist has made a splendid canvas of this woman."

GIRL ONLY MEMBER OF HER GRADUATING CLASS

Probably the only "one student" commencement in Oakland county this year was that at Leonard.

Miss Anna Louise Hickmott, the Leonard high school senior class, its valedictorian, prophet, historian and every other functionary of a graduating class, had her commencement exercises in the Leonard Methodist Church.

IOWA EDUCATOR ASKS MICHIGAN SCIENTISTS' AID

Professor Eugene W. Skinner, head of the department of physics of Olivet college, has been honored by Dr. George W. Stewart, of Iowa university, member of the National Research council, and fellow of American Association of Advanced Science, with an invitation to join him in research work during the summer. The research deals with the diffraction of X-rays in liquids, with special reference to the normal alcohols, and which was the subject discussed by Dr. Stewart before a meeting of scientists of Michigan colleges that convened at Olivet recently. Dr. Stewart is considered one of the foremost physicists of the country, and holds many high honors in science organizations. He is a noted authority on acoustics, and one of the products of his research is the sound filter.

SILVER CUP AWARDED GRAND RAPIDS CORPS

Cadet Captain Harold Loomis, commander of the South high school Reserve Officers Training corps, Grand Rapids, is the possessor of a silver loving cup awarded his unit by Colonel John G. Emery, former national commander of the American Legion. The South high company was adjudged, at a competition of the school units here, as the best drilled and snappiest company in Grand Rapids.

BUILD PAVED HIGHWAY TO CONTINENTAL'S FIELD

Muskegon county is constructing a paved highway to the aviation field owned and operated by the Continental Motors Corporation. The field is located at the edge of the city and was opened last summer. There has been no improved highway to the field.

The Continental Field is used by the corporation in the operation of its three-engine Fokker plane between Muskegon and Detroit. It is expected that the Continental will open its field to all fliers when the highway is built.

MILLION TREK TO GETZ ZOO

Ottawa county boasts two favorite week-end motoring objectives, the Oval State park, which draws more motorists than any such state park in western Michigan, and Lakewood farm on the beach between Holland and Grand Haven.

The 300-acre summer home of George F. Getz with its zoo and gardens and lake beach, is a feature that draws thousands of visitors every summer. Last year 880,000 persons visited the Getz farm, including 30,000 who attended the big barbecue for Governor Fred W. Green. The governor is one of four men who have summer cottages on the big farm.

The farm was opened in 1910, and the Getz children were much interested in the starting of a farm with real animals. This led to gathering some few animals and later to some unusual ones the children wanted as pets. The collection soon grew to the proportions of a real menagerie. During the war many of the animals were given to Lincoln park in Chicago. Recently, however, Getz has yielded to his hobby without stint, with the result that his zoo now far outstrips any other in Michigan, except Belle Isle, Detroit. Last year, tigers, leopards, a young elephant, a boa constrictor, and other smaller animals were added. This year, "Chief," the largest buffalo bull in captivity, has been brought from Chicago.

Most of the animals on the Getz farm are from Ceylon, India, and South America, with a few from West Africa.

TANNERIES WORKING TO END RIVER POLLUTION

Fourteen Michigan tanneries are operating an experimental station at Holland, Mich., on experiments to reduce their polluting wastes.

They have succeeded in reducing the amount to 41 per cent. In arriving at results they employed a full time chemist who took samples every half hour with composite samples every hour.

The technical staff states that it will be a matter of but a few months when it will be able to lay down a definite means of eliminating waste from any tannery so that it will be safe to discharge into the streams without injury to aquatic life.

CHEBOYGAN IS GIVEN 40 ACRES FOR PARK

Cheboygan's list of recreation spots has been increased by a 40-acre tract on Mackinaw avenue, through a grant made by the legislature at its last session. The tract will be known as the Fred R. Ming park, in honor of State Senator Ming, who sponsored the act providing for the grant. The work of beautifying the park will start at once.

LENAWEE PAIR MAKE MARK

Those familiar characters, Box and Cox, who recognized each other as brothers because of the strawberry mark, have nothing on Eli and Guy Bush, now residing in Los Angeles, but who were born in Lenawee County, Michigan, April 6, 1883. They have always been the two Dromios to their relatives and friends, and even to this day they are not sure but that Guy is really Eli and Eli is Guy.

You see, it was this way. They are identical twins. They were difficult to unscramble when they were babies, school boys, and later students at the University of Michigan, where Eli took an engineering degree in 1906 and Guy took the literary degree the same year. Guy later took his law degrees and then went to California, and is now judge of the Municipal Court in Los Angeles.

"The fact that Eli and I look so alike, so much so that we are constantly being mistaken for each other, led us to inquire around in Los Angeles, and finally to organize the Twin Club," he said. "We have a membership of 12 sets of identical twins. I am president and Eli is vice-president. We have occasional meetings and frequently have been invited to be honor guests at club functions, when the result has been bewildering even to us members, because we can't tell to which of the other pair of twins we are talking.

"My brother and I dress alike, and we have found it to be an economical proceeding. We order two suits of clothes and four pairs of trousers at a time; in all our other wearing apparel we buy in the same proportions, with the result that we can successfully dicker for low prices. Eli is now practicing law in Los Angeles, and while we were both appearing in litigation the court invariably would ask, 'Which Bush are you?'

"One morning when I was hearing a number of cases of drunkenness Eli came in to ask me something, and I called him up and gave him a seat beside me. Just then an offender with a marked 'hang-over' was arraigned. He looked at us for a minute, then sadly shook his head. 'Still drunk,' he muttered. He thought he was seeing double.

"Two of our club members, Joe and Charles Crail, carry deception to such a degree that they call up each morning and decide upon what they are going to wear. The result is that when one encounters them he can't tell one from the other. Joe is a member of Congress and Charles is a Superior Court judge."

SPORTSMEN'S VOTE TO DECIDE RULING ON KILLING OF DEER

Michigan sportsmen alone are to decide whether deer hunting will be restricted to bucks with antlers, whether the closed season on grey and black squirrels will be continued with the addition of fox squirrels and whether the rabbit seasons should open earlier and close earlier.

These changes are advocated by James Oliver Curwood, novelist and member of the state conservation commission.

Curwood proposed the changes, but they were rejected because his colleagues felt that too free use of the discretionary power act might cause trouble. Instead they consented to conduct an investigation.

Questionnaires are now being sent to game wardens and sportsmen's organizations throughout the state for distribution. The sportsmen are to fill the blanks giving their ideas on the proposals and return them to the conservation department. If a majority favor all or any of the law changes, the commission will take action.

Curwood wants the buck law changed because he said short-horns cannot be distinguished from does at 100 yards or less. By restricting hunters to bucks with antlers, many does will be saved, he asserted.

The present open season on rabbits extends from October 25 to January 31 in the lower peninsula and from October 1 to February 1 in the upper.

Curwood wants it changed to from October 25 to December 25 in the lower peninsula and from October 1 to December 1 in the upper. He said this will keep hunters out of the woods in winter, when rabbits are not of much food value, who shoot deer under the pretense of looking for jacks and snowshoes.

DRIVER ESCAPES FROM DEATH UNDER ENGINE

What is believed to be a miraculous escape from death, according to eye witnesses, was experienced by C. E. Durkin, of Detroit, a Briggs Manufacturing Company employee, when his automobile was struck by a Grand Trunk locomotive in the yards of the Chevrolet Motor Car Company. Durkin told police that he had just started to back out of a parking lot nearby, when his car stalled on the tracks. The engine struck it and it rolled over and was completely demolished. Save for a few scratches about the hands and forehead, Durkin was uninjured.

FIRST U. S. IRON SHIP DOOMED

With the navy department's decision to sell the former U. S. S. Michigan, there is about to pass one of the most famous ships of war in American maritime history. The Michigan's record surpasses, in historical significance at least, that of most ships which have flown the Stars and Stripes.

The Michigan, known as the Wolverine in recent years, is the oldest man-of-war of the navy. Its construction in an Erie, Pa., shipyard in 1844 was a momentous occasion, for it marked the successful launching of the first iron ship of the United States navy. The entire hull was forged, rolled and temporarily assembled in a Pittsburgh mill, then torn down and freighted piecemeal on barges through the Erie canal to Erie, where it was assembled upon skids and finally launched, the first American ironclad on the Great Lakes, and christened by President Tyler.

The launching of the Michigan was an event of national importance, maritime followers being unanimous in their conviction that the iron vessel would immediately sink. To their astonishment, she easily floated 685 tons displacement, opening a new era of warship construction.

The early experiences of this then formidable craft were thrilling indeed. In the fall of 1850 it fell to the lot of the crew and commander to oust King Strang, head of the Mormon colony on Beaver Island, west of Mackinac, in Lake Michigan. The side-wheeler steamed into the harbor late at night, captured the defiant colony leader and prepared to leave, when he was shot by enemies from ambush.

During the Civil War the Michigan was the only armed American vessel on the Great Lakes, and was assigned to patrol duty along the border. It was at this time that the Michigan figured in the famous Philo Parsons episode.

Several times during its life on the Great Lakes the Michigan, or Wolverine, was the subject of controversy between Great Britain and the United States. These disputes, amicably settled, always referred to the armament of the vessel as violating the agreement between the two countries, and brought about the exchange of many diplomatic notes.

Following the Civil War, the ship's armament was reduced to treaty proportions, and in 1923 the vessel was given over to the training of navy recruits.

WARDENS WAR ON FISH DYNAMITERS IN CHIPPEWA RIVER

Game wardens are especially active just now in driving dynamite and other explosives from Chippewa river as a means of taking fish.

William Peavey and Orkley Tebo, Mecosta county men working at Flint, are the first to be charged with the offense and the game wardens intend to punish everybody they find using explosives for that purpose. Tebo and Peavey admitted their guilt.

Chippewa river is one of the popular trout streams and the sportsmen and wardens have been working on the river trying to improve it for fishing.

The game wardens, aroused by reports of dynamiting, have been closing in on the situation.

DETROIT LEADS IN DWELLINGS

Detroit and other Michigan cities, with one or two exceptions, stand out prominently as builders of one-family homes, in contrast with the heavy general trend of the cities of the country towards apartment house living, according to a survey of recent building reports by the bureau of statistics of the United States department of labor.

The result of the survey, covering 257 cities, from the years 1921 to 1926, inclusive, is detailed in the monthly labor review, just issued by the department.

"Probably the three outstanding industrial cities of the group of 14 largest cities," remarks the bureau, "are Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh, yet in Detroit and Pittsburgh a much larger percentage of families were provided for in one-family dwellings in each of the years shown than by the group as a whole."

Not only is this true, but Detroit's percentage of apartments built in 1926 was actually two-tenths of one per cent lower than in 1921. The figure was approximately 35 per cent higher than that of the cities of the country as a whole; it was almost 10 per cent lower than their averages in 1926.

It is even more noteworthy that the average of the Michigan cities in family home building, while far ahead of that of the 257 cities as a whole in both years, was nearly 33 per cent ahead of that average in 1926, compared with a margin of a little over 15 per cent in 1921.

Six of the Michigan cities covered by the survey showed declines in percentage of one-family dwellings, built in 1921, as compared with 1921, and four showed increases. The heaviest increase was in Flint, where the rise was from 62 per cent to 94, and the heaviest decline was in Pontiac, where it was from 97 per cent to 69. Saginaw had the remarkable record of 100 per cent of family home construction in 1926, and 97 per cent in 1921.

The remaining Michigan cities in the survey were Battle Creek, with 92 per cent in 1921 and 89 in 1926; Hamtramck with 54 in 1921 and 57 in 1926; Highland Park with 13 in the former year and only one in the latter; Grand Rapids, with 96 in the former and 94 in the latter, and Lansing, with 94 in the former and 89 in the latter.

Politeness sometimes beats the almighty dollar under the wire.

SMITHS ONCE FEW IN STATE

Although the Smith family has been in the great majority in Detroit for many years—as shown by each annual edition of the city directory—there were only five Smiths listed as residents of the city in 1837, when the first Detroit directory was published.

The Davis family, with 15 members represented, was in the lead in that day and an examination of the first directory reveals that the Smiths tied with seven other families with five each for fourteenth place.

There are approximately 7,205 Smiths listed in the current directory. The Browns are next, with 3,800, the Johnsons third with 3,675; the Andersons fourth with 2,133, and the Jones family sixth with 2,118.

The first Detroit directory is one of the most interesting publications in the Polk library. Although it is too valuable a relic to be kept on the library shelves, many requests to examine the book are made almost daily. The book contains 124 pages, is 3½x7 inches in size, and lists 1,330 names. Its pages, although somewhat yellowed by age, are well preserved.

In addition to the various listings, the book also contained an historical and statistical review of the interests and activities of the community, which was an innovation in directory publishing in that day.

There were 15 members of the Davis family represented in the first directory, 10 representatives of the Williams family, nine Clarks and eight Browns. Nine families, Andrews, Bulls, Cooks, Joneses, Kings, Millers; Moores and Youngs had six representatives listed, while seven families, Cranes, Hales, Ingersolls, Martins, Porters, Smiths, and Thompsons had five each.

Of the five Smiths, one was a portrait painter, one a mason, one a joiner, another a bookkeeper and another a provision dealer.

Antoine Rivard was a "gentleman," and lived at 359 Jefferson avenue; Nicholas Snider was a grave digger, and lived on Clinton street.

An idea of "rapid" travel in those days is revealed in an advertisement of the Western Stage company, which appeared in the book. "Three daily lines of stages leave the office of the Western Stage company—one via Ypsilanti, Tecumseh, Jonesville, White Pigeon, Niles, Michigan City to Chicago, through in four and a half days—one via Plymouth, Ann Arbor, Jacksonburgh, and Marshall to Kalamazoo, through in two days and a half—one via Monroe, Toledo, Perrysburgh to Lower Sandusky, through in two days. Extras furnished on all of the above roads at the shortest notice."

CLOSING QUAIL SEASON PROVES POPULAR MOVE

Upper penisula sportsmen are pleased with the announcement that the partridge season in Michigan will be closed for another year, following a meeting of the conservation commission in Lansing.

James Oliver Curwood, of Owosso, author and a member of the state game commission, proposed the closing of the season for a period of two years. His proposal was not approved, but when reduced to a year limit was accepted by the commission and made legal.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

Let's All Pull Together for a Greater Michigan and Greater Nation

The Sign of The Four

By A. CONAN DOYLE

"Well, I was pretty proud at having this small command given me, since I was a raw recruit, and a game-legged one at that. For two nights I kept the watch with my Punjaubees. They were tall, fierce-looking chaps, Mohammed Singh and Abdullah Khan by name, both old fighting-men who had borne arms against us at Chilianwallah. They could talk English pretty well, but I could get little out of them. They preferred to stand together and jabber all night in their queer Sikh lingo. For myself, I used to stand outside the gateway, looking down on the broad, winding river and on the twinkling lights of the great city. The beating of drums, the rattle of tom-toms, and the yells and howls of the rebels, drunk with opium and with bhang, were enough to remind us all night of our dangerous neighbors across the stream. Every two hours the officers of the night used to come round to all the posts, to make sure that all was well.

"The third night of my watch was dark and dirty, with a small, driving rain. It was dreary work standing in the gateway hour after hour in such weather. I tried again and again to make my Sikhs talk, but without much success. At two in the morning the rounds passed, and broke for a moment the weariness of the night. Finding that my companions would not be led into conversation, I took out my pipe, and laid down my musket to strike a match. In an instant the two Sikhs were upon me. One of them snatched my fire-lock up and leveled it at my head, while the other held a great knife to my throat, and swore between his teeth that he would plunge it into me if I moved.

"My first thought was that these fellows were in league with the rebels, and that this was the beginning of an assault. If our door were in the hands of the Sepoys, the place must fall, and the women and children be treated as they were in Cawnpore. Maybe you gentlemen think that I am just making out a case for myself, but I give you my word that when I thought of that, though I felt the point of the knife at my throat, I opened my mouth with the intention of giving a scream, if it was my last one, which might alarm the main guard. The man who held me seemed to know my thoughts; for, even as I braced myself to it, he whispered, 'Don't make a noise. The fort is safe enough. There are no rebel dogs on this side of the river.' There was the ring of truth in what he said, and I knew that if I raised my voice I was a dead man. I could read it in the fellow's brown eyes. I waited, therefore, in silence, to see what it was they wanted from me.

"'Listen to me, sahib,' said the taller and fiercer of the pair, the one who mthey called Abdullah Khan. 'You must either be with us now or you must be silenced forever. The thing is too great a one for us to hesitate. Either you are heart and soul with us, on your oath on the cross of the Christians, or your body this night shall be thrown into the ditch, and we shall pass over to our brothers in the rebel army. There is no middle way. Which is it to be, death or life? We can only give you three minutes to decide, for the time is passing, and all must be done before the rounds come again.'

"'How can I decide?' said I. 'You have not told me what you want of me. But I tell you now, that if it is anything against the safety of the fort, I will have no truck with it; so you can drive home your knife, and welcome.'

"'It is nothing against the fort,' said he. 'We only ask you to do that which your countrymen come to this land for. We ask you to be rich. If you will be one of us this night, we will swear to you upon the naked knife, and by the threefold oath which no Sikh was ever known to break, that you shall have your fair share of the loot. A quarter of the treasure shall be yours. We can say no fairer.'

"'But what is the treasure, then?' I asked. 'I am as ready to be rich as you, if you will but show me how it can be done.'

"'You swear, then,' said he, 'by the bones of your father, by the honor of your mother, by the cross of your faith, to raise no hand and speak no word against us, either now or afterwards?'

"'I will swear it,' I answered, 'provided that the fort is not endangered.'

"'Then my comrades and I will swear that you shall have a quarter of the treasure, which shall be equally divided among the four of us.'

"'There are but three,' said I.

"'No; Dost Akbar must have his share. We can tell the tale to you while we await them. Do you stand at the gate, Mohammed Singh, and give notice of their coming. The thing stands thus, sahib, and I tell it to you because I know that an oath is binding upon a Feringhee, and that we may trust you. Had you been a lying Hindoo, though you had sworn by all the gods in their false temples, your blood would have been upon the knife and your body in the water. But the Sikh knows the Englishman and the Englishman knows the Sikh. Hearken, then, to what I have to say.

"There is a rajah in the Northern Provinces who has much wealth, though his lands are small. Much has come to him from his father, and more still he has set by himself, for he is of a low nature and hoards his gold rather than spends it. When the troubles broke out he would be friends both with the lion and the tiger—with the Sepoy and with the Company's Raj. Soon, however, it seemed to him that the white men's day was come, for through all the land he could hear of nothing but of their death and their overthrow. Yet, being a careful man, he made such plans that, come what might, half at least of his treasure should be left to him. That which was in gold and silver he kept by him in the vaults of his palace, but the most precious stones and the choicest pearls that he had he put in an iron box, and sent it by a trusty servant who, under the guise of a merchant, should take it to the fort at Agra, there to lie until the land is at peace. Thus, if the rebels won, he would have his money, but if the Company conquered, his jewels would be saved to him. Having thus divided his hoard, he threw himself into the cause of the sepoys, since they were strong upon his borders. By his doing this, mark you, sahib, his property becomes the due of those who have been true to their salt.

"'This pretended merchant, who travels under the name of Achmet, is now in the city of Agra, and desires to gain his way into the fort. He has with him, as traveling companion, my foster-brother, Dost Akbar, who knows his secret. Dost Akbar has promised this night to lead him to a side-postern of the fort, and has chosen this one for his purpose. Here he will come presently, and here he will find Mohammed Singh and myself awaiting him. The place is lonely, and none shall know of his coming. The world shall know of the merchant Achmet no more, but the great treasure of the rajah shall be divided among us. What say you to it, sahib?'

"In Worcestershire the life of a man seems a great and a sacred thing; but it is very different when there is fire and blood all round you and you have been used to meeting death at every turn. Whether Achmet the merchant lived or died was a thing as light as air to me, but at the talk about the treasure my heart turned to it, and I thought of what I might do in the old country with it, and how my folk would stare when they saw their ne'er-do-well coming back with his pockets full of gold moidores. I had, therefore, already made up my mind. Abdullah Khan, however, thinking that I hesitated, pressed the matter more closely.

"'Consider, sahib,' said he, 'that if this man is taken by the commandant he will be hung or shot, and his jewels taken by the government, so that no man will be a rupee the better for them. Now, since we do the taking of him, why should we not do the rest as well? The jewels will be as well with us as in the Company's coffers. There will be enough to make every one of us rich men and great chiefs. No one can know about the matter, for here we are cut off from all men. What could be better for the purpose? Say again, then, sahib, whether you are with us, or if we must look upon you as an enemy.'

"'I am with you, heart and soul,' said I.

"'It is well,' he answered, handing me back my fire-lock. 'You see that we trust you, for your word, like ours, is not to be broken. We have now only to wait for my brother and the merchant.'

"'Does your brother know, then, of what you will do?' I asked.

"'The plan is his. He has devised it. We will go to the gate and share the watch with Mohammed Singh.'

"The rain was still falling steadily, for it was just the beginning of the wet season. Brown, heavy clouds were drifting across the sky, and it was hard to see more than a stone-cast. A deep moat lay in front of our door, but the water was in places nearly dried up, and it could easily be crossed. It was strange to me to be standing there with those two wild Punjaubees, waiting for the man who was coming to his death.

"Suddenly my eye caught the glint of a shaded lantern at the other side of the moat. It vanished among the mound-heaps, and then appeared again, coming slowly in our direction.

"'Here they are!' I exclaimed.

"'You will challenge him, sahib, as usual,' whispered Abdullah. 'Give him no cause for fear. Send us in with him, and we shall do the rest while you stay here on guard. Have the lantern ready to uncover, that we may be sure that it is indeed the man.'

"The light had flickered onward, now stopping and now advancing, until I could see two dark figures upon the other side of the moat. I let them scramble down the sloping bank, splash through the mire, and climb half-way up to the gate, before I challenged them.

"'Who goes there?' said I, in a subdued voice.

"'Friends,' came the answer. I uncovered my lantern and threw a flood of light upon them. The first was an enormous Sikh, with a black beard which swept nearly down to his cummerbund. Outside of a show I have never seen so tall a man. The other was a little, fat, round fellow, with a great yellow turban, and a bundle in his hand, done up in a shawl. He seemed to be all in a quiver with fear, for his hands twitched as if he had the ague, and his head kept turning to left and right with two bright little twinkling eyes, like a mouse when he ventures out from his hole. It gave me the chills to think of killing him, but I thought of the treasure, and my heart set as hard as a flint within me. When he saw my white face he gave a little chirrup of joy and came running up toward me.

"'Your protection, sahib,' he panted; 'your protection for the unhappy merchant Achmet. I have traveled across Rajpootana that I might seek the shelter of the fort at Agra. I have been robbed, beaten and abused because I have been the friend of the Company. It is a blessed night this when I am once more in safety—I and my poor possessions.'

"What have you in the bundle?' I asked.

"'An iron box,' he answered, 'which contains one or two little family matters which are of no value to others, but which I should be sorry to lose. Yet I am not a beggar; and I shall reward you, young sahib, and your governor also, if he will give me the shelter I ask.'

"I could not trust myself to speak longer with the man. The more I looked at his fat, frightened face, the harder did it seem that we should slay him in cold blood. It was best to get it over.

"'Take him to the main guard,' said I. The two Sikhs closed in upon him on each side, and the giant walked behind, while they marched in through the dark gateway. Never was a man so compassed round with death. I remained at the gateway with the lantern.

"I could hear the measured tramp of their footsteps sounding through the lonely corridors. Suddenly it ceased, and I heard voices, and a scuffle, with the sound of blows. A moment later there came, to my horror, a rush of footsteps coming in my direction, with the loud breathing of a running man. I turned my lantern down the long, straight passage, and there was the fat man, running like the wind, with a smear of blood across his face, and close at his heels, bounding like a tiger, the great, black-bearded Sikh, with a knife flashing in his hand. I have never seen a man run so fast as that little merchant. He was gaining on the Sikh, and I could see that if he once passed me and got to the open air he would save himself yet. My heart softened to him, but again the thought of his treasure turned me hard and bitter. I cast my fire-lock between his legs as he raced past, and he rolled over twice like a shot rabbit. Ere he could stagger to his feet the Sikh was upon him and buried his knife twice in his side. The man never uttered moan nor moved muscle, but lay where he had fallen. I think, myself, that he may have broken his neck with the fall. You see, gentlemen, that I am keeping my promise. I am telling you every word of this business just exactly as it happened, whether it is in my favor or not."

He stopped, and held out his manacled hands for the whisky and water which Holmes had brewed for him. For myself, I confess that I had now conceived the utmost horror of the man, not only for this cold-blooded business in which he had been concerned, but even more for the somewhat flippant and careless way in which he narrated it. Whatever punishment was in store for him, I felt that he might expect no sympathy from me. Sherlock Holmes and Jones sat with their hands upon their knees, deeply interested in the story, but with the same disgust written upon their faces. He may have observed it, for there was a touch of defiance in his voice and manner as he proceeded:

"It was all very bad, no doubt," said he. "I should like to know how many fellows in my shoes would have refused a share of this loot when they knew that they would have their throats cut for their pains. Besides, it was my life or his when once he was in the fort. If he had got out, the whole business would have come to light, and I should have been court-martialed and shot as likely as not; for people were not very lenient at a time like that.'

"Go on with your story," said Holmes, shortly.

"Well, we carried him in, Abdullah, Akbar, and I. A fine weight he was, too, for all that he was so short. Mohammed Singh was left to guard the door. We took him to a place which the Sikhs had already prepared. It was some distance off, where a winding passage leads to a great empty hall, the brick walls of which were all crumbling to pieces. The earth floor had sunk in at one place, making a natural grave, so we left Achmet the merchant there, having first covered him over with loose bricks. This done, we all went back to the treasure.

"It lay where he had dropped it when he was first attacked. The box was the same which now lies open upon your table. A key was hung by a silken cord to that carved handle upon the top. We opened it, and the light of the lantern gleamed upon a collection of gems such as I have read of and thought about when I was a little lad at Pershore. It was blinding to look upon them. When we had feasted our eyes, we took them all out and made a list of them. There were one hundred and forty-three diamonds of the first water, including one which has been called, I believe, 'the Great Mogul,' and is said to be the second largest stone in existence. Then there were ninety-seven very fine emeralds, and one hundred and seventy rubies, some of which, however, were small. There were forty carbuncles, two hundred and ten sapphires, sixty-one agates, and a great quantity of beryls, onyxes, cat's-eyes, turquoises and other stones, the very names of which I did not know at that time, though I have become more familiar with them since. Besides this, there were nearly three hundred very fine pearls, twelve of which were set in a gold chaplet. By the way, these last had been taken out of the chest and were not there when I recovered it.

"After we had counted our treasures we put them back into the chest and carried them to the gateway to show them to Mohammed Singh. Then we solemnly renewed our oath to stand by each other and be true to our secret. We agreed to conceal our loot in a safe place until the country should be at peace again, and then to divide it equally among ourselves. There was no use dividing it at present, for if gems of such value were found upon us it would cause suspicion, and there was no privacy in the fort nor any place where we could keep them. We carried the box, therefore, into the same hall where we had buried the body, and there, under certain bricks, in the best preserved wall, we made a hollow and put our treasure. We made careful note of the place, and next day I drew four plans, one for each of us, and put the sign of the four of us at the bottom, for we had sworn that we should each always act for all, so that none might take advantage. That is an oath that I can put my hand to my heart and swear that I have never broken.

"Well, there is no use my telling you, gentlemen, what came of the Indian mutiny. After Wilson took Delhi, and Sir Colin relieved Lucknow, the back of the business was broken. Fresh troops came pouring in, and Nana Sahib made himself scarce over the frontier. A flying column under Colonel Greathead came round to Agra and cleared the Pandies away from it. Peace seemed to be settling upon the country, and we four were beginning to hope that the time was at hand when we might safely go off with our shares of the plunder. In a moment, however, our hopes were shattered, by our being arrested as the murderers of Achmet.

"It came about in this way. When the rajah put his jewels into the hands of Achmet, he did it because he knew that he was a trusty man. They are suspicious folk in the East, however; so what does this rajah do but take a second even more trusty servant and set him to play the spy upon the first? This second man was ordered never to let Achmet out of his sight, and he followed him like his shadow. He went after him that night and saw him pass through the doorway. Of course, he thought he had taken refuge in the fort, and applied for admission there himself next day, but could find no trace of Achmet. This seemed to him so strange that he spoke about it to a sergeant of guides, who brought it to the ears of the commandant. A thorough search was quickly made, and the body was discovered. Thus at the very moment we thought that all was safe, we were all four seized and brought to trial on a charge of murder—three of us because we had held the gate that night, and the fourth because he was known to have been in company of the murdered man. Not a word about the jewels came out at the trial, for the rajah had been deposed and driven out of India; so no one had any particular interest in them. The murder, however, was clearly made out, and it was certain that we must all have been concerned in it. The three Sikhs got penal servitude for life, and I was condemned to death, though my sentence was afterwards commuted into the same as the others.

Anybody Got A "Bed-Stretcher"

Reclining—or, at least, part of him—here is John Aason, the tallest man in the United States. He towers 8 feet, 9¼ inches in height and weighs 530 pounds. Kind of "smallish," isn't he?

And he hasn't a "soft life" of it by any means. Trying to get in and out of taxicabs he has to "duck his head" and, in revolving doors, he has to "double up" and go slow. They say even the manicurists want to "go out to lunch" when they see him coming.

So, as the photo shows, he enjoys his bed most—despite the fact there isn't enough of it to hold up all of him!

PEACE BRINGS WONDER ROAD

Decision to proceed with all speed upon the paving of the so-called River road, between Saginaw and Bay City, with the prospect that at least one side of the boulevarded highway may be completed this fall, brings to an end a controversy that has raged more than 15 years.

An accomplishment almost as remarkable in the opinion of residents of those cities is the bringing together in a spirit of complete co-operation of traditionally hostile civic bodies with the possibility of ending their ancient rivalry.

State Highway Commissioner Frank F. Rogers went over the ground a few days ago to study the feasibility of laying the first slab of concrete this fall. The commissioner indicated that at least some contracts for paving would be let soon.

The River road will be a memorial highway, honoring the soldier dead of the Saginaw valley. At the entrance to each city the American Legion will erect a memorial arch. The plan calls for a boulevard construction, with white way lighting the entire distance. There are to be 25-foot slabs of concrete on each side and a boulevard center. Some shrubbery will be set in to augment the beauty nature has provided. Shoulders to the road have a four to one pitch, so that travel will be entirely safe and free from the dangers of side ditches.

The road follows the river all the way between the two cities, gracefully curving with the stream and is entirely devoid of sharp turns, such as characterize the longer East and West side roads now in use between the two cities. It is to be the main connecting link between the old M-10, or the new designation of U. S.-23. The state owns the right of way and the intervening space down to the water's edge, thus precluding the possible defacing of the landscape.

The state found it necessary to condemn but a small piece of the right of way, the rest of it having been donated.

The road passes through swamp and prairie land. It will be new for its entire length and the bed is made of clay fill and river silt. It is eight and a half miles long and required 740,000 yards of filling. This much of the work is now complete.

The road will cost nearly $1,000,000, or nearly double the first state estimates, but both counties and the federal government will share the burden. Although it was begun in 1923 the extensive nature of the fills has held back operations. The state has now learned that the river silt and clay have settled sufficiently to form an excellent base, and it will be unnecessary to subject the route to a year's seasoning in use, as originally planned.

Bitter rivalry between the two cities was responsible largely for the delay in bringing about the much needed improvement. As early as 1913 the state recognized the need of improved highways and offered help in modernizing either the East side or the West side routes. Then the fight was on. Saginaw favored the West side route, which would bring tourists through the heart of Saginaw and just touching the western outskirts of Bay City. The East side route offered similar advantages to Bay City. The result was a deadlock. So bitter did the controversy become that several phases of it revolving around county appropriations for the work were fought out in the courts. Then came the compromise plan, which at first met with bitter opposition from the more ardent proponents of the alternate routes, even though the Memorial highway now under construction with lop off one-third of the mileage between the cities.

Not only has the River road made important strides towards completion, but plans are under way for the improvement of both of the alternate routes. Thus has peace ushered in a new era of progress.

Pie filling will not run out if the upper crust is rolled under the lower and pressed down. Of course, you must lift the lower crust with a knife, and the upper crust must be a little larger. To have flaky pie crust, spread a little lard on top with a pliable steel knife. Sprinkle with a little nutmeg over the top before putting the pie into the oven. A little milk on top produces a delicate brown.

"DADDY FISH" IS MARVEL AS FIGHTER AT SPAWNING TIME

The fighting instinct of a roach in spawning time is just another marvel of nature.

Carl Cain, Grant, Mich., demonstrated recently, the "watch of the roach," to a number of fishermen on the banks of the Muskegon River, after locating a fish bed on a shallow bar.

A male roach was fanning the water with its anal fins in anger near the bed, anxiously watching the shadows cast by the men. A small stone was thrown on the bed. Instantly, the fish saw the object strike the water and before it rested on the bed, with a dart, it was gulped into the mouth and carried down stream. Again it appeared, and at a point of vantage took up the watch. A larger stone was thrown. The fish was unsuccessful in carrying the stone with its mouth. Next, it got directly over it, and by fanning the water, trundled the stone with fin power away from the bed. The warrior was left after this lesson, doing guard duty, well fit for purpose of protection to his property and life in a water community where law is inoperative among fish.

Roach are not the only fish to guard their beds with such vigilance, but all other species that spawn at this time of the year also do. Fishermen would find them an easy prey, using plugs and other baits, if conservation had no recognition of its habits and enforced no law of protection. A few more weeks and spawning among most fish will have been completed. Anglers will then find them more elusive and not such easy prey.

TELLS OF DAYS WHEN HORSES WERE LUXURY

At the little farm home in Speaker township, where John Reddicliffe came with his parents 65 years ago, and where five years later he brought his bride, Martha Tenniswood, he celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday.

Reddicliffe was born in England, and came with his parents to New York State, then to Canada, from there to Michigan in 1847. After "crossing the lines" they drove to Lexington, then the county seat of Sanilac.

"Those were the days of real sport," he said, speaking of his younger years. "The days when the girls would feed a pig, milk the cows, or do whatever was necessary, so we could hitch the oxen to the wagon and all go to the dancing party, the pearing bee or over to the school house where they had preaching on Sunday evening. Horses were a real luxury when I was a youngster, but as I grew up they became more plentiful. Sleigh-riding in winter and hay-rack parties in summer were among our chief amusements."

TOWN HONORS ITS LAST SURVIVOR OF CIVIL WAR

Allendale, a little community just over the Ottawa county line, recently paid tribute to Hiram B. Knowlton, 83 years old, its sole surviving veteran of the Civil War.

As evidence of the esteem in which Knowlton is held, Allendale dedicated to him a boulder with a bronze plate commemorating his public spirit. The boulder was set up near the town hall, which is next door to Knowlton's home, and hundreds of his friends assembled to participate in the ceremonies.

CHURCH EQUIPPED FOR DEAF TO HEAR SERMON

An electrical acousticon system has been installed in the First Congregational Church at Cadillac for the benefit of persons whose hearing is impaired. The system resembles a combination telephone and radio amplifier and transmits the voice of the pastor and the music of the organ and choir to the hard of hearing who are thus enabled to sit in any part of the church auditorium and without embarrassment or nervous strain hear everything that emanates from the pulpit and choir loft.

LAPEER TEACHER GETS RIGHT TO HANG "SHINGLE"

Miss Loughnane will be remembered as having been chosen to represent the teachers of Michigan at the Sesqui-Centennial at Philadelphia, Pa., last June. She is the only Michigan graduate in the Cumberland University law class.

"RICH MAN--POOR MAN"

THE table was set for the royal banquet. Golden goblets marked the places of noblemen whom Charles II was entertaining. For the royal palate of His Majesty and for the distinguished palates of his guests, on that day in 1661, a rare food was presented. It was called pineapple—a curious but luxurious food, which since the middle of the 16th century had been a hot house food for kings. Its appearance marked a great occasion. Its cost was fabulous.

Cycles move swiftly, and four centuries later another table is set. This time for a workingman's dinner. For the palate of the workingman a familiar food is served—pineapple. It is bigger in size and better in quality than the pineapple served to Charles II. Its cost is less than a quarter.

The history of pineapple between 1661 and 1927 takes on somewhat the form of a travelogue as the pineapple is one of the most cosmopolitan of fruits.

Its earliest appearance has been traced back to the time when South American Indians offered the pineapple to Spanish explorers as something especially luscious. The fruit was too tender to be taken home to Spain on the long sailing voyage. One of the sailors, however, conceived the idea of taking some of the suckers from which the Indians assured them pineapples could be grown.

Arriving in Spain the strange fruit puzzled Spanish gardeners. After experiment, however, they succeeded in raising it under glass. Some of the suckers they took across to Morocco, where the subtropical climate was similar to that of South America. Grown in Morocco, the size of the pineapple increased.

The fame of the fabulous fruit spread. English and French royal personages sighed for a taste of the fruit which was being served on banquet tables in Morocco. By the middle of the 16th century, the royal fruit. A hundred years later we hear of some carefully cultivated pineapples having been sent to Cromwell, and in 1661, after its appearance at the famous banquet of Charles II, there was an enormous demand for the pineapple. It became known as "Monarch of Fruits"—perhaps from its association with kings, or perhaps from its own crown which grows in a tuft on top of the fruit.

French and English gardeners grew the favored fruit in hot houses and sold it at exorbitant prices to the wealthy classes. English plant breeders at the Royal Botanical Gardens in London sought to develop the largest and best flavored varieties. It was there that the Smooth Cayenne, now grown in Hawaii was discovered. The Smooth Cayenne gave the rich Englishman just a little larger fruit for his guineas. It has given the Hawaiian canner the basis for a great industry.

In 1718 the cultivation of pineapple was first successfully established in England in the garden of Sir M. Decker of Richmond, Surrey. The plants were grown in pits heated with bark and watered with tepid water. When Balzac built his home at Les Jardies he planned to get rich by raising pineapples. He felt sure a small investment in pineapples would develop into a splendid income—"without having to turn out a single page of copy" he used to say. But unable to raise the amount for the small investment, Balzac's dream was never realized.

The next we hear of the much-traveled pineapple it is back again in the tropics, after a successful conquest of Europe. The earliest record of pineapple growing in the Hawaiian Islands dates back to 1813 when Don Paulo y Marin, a Spaniard from Mexico, made a planting in Dona Island. It is believed that the fruit was brought to the island by Spanish vessels that had been visiting Mexico. It is said to be native of Brazil Mexico, the West Indies, Asia and Africa.

But weary of globe-trotting, the pineapple evidently found its most congenial soil in the Hawaiian Islands for it is there that the industry has found its greatest development, and it is from the Hawaiian Islands that the choicest fruit is obtained.

When James Drummond Dole, a Harvard graduate who went to Hawaii and became interested in raising pineapple, proved that the Smooth Cayenne could be grown bigger and better in Hawaii than elsewhere, he found on his hands the problem of supplying a world market, which since the days of Charles II's banquet, had been longing for pineapple. The fruit had proved too tender for the Spanish explorers to take home, and it was still too tender to stand shipment when picked ripe. Mr. Dole, solved this problem by having the pineapple picked ripe and put into cans—thus treating the people in all parts of the world to the same sun-ripened fruit which the native Hawaiian enjoys. His remarkable success has caused him to be called "the Pineapple King".

With the advent of ripe pineapple in cans, the average American workingman enjoys far better pineapple than those relished by Charles II. And instead of being served as a luxury pineapple has now become a staple, appearing on the table with any course in the meal.

The popularity of pineapple pie affords an example of the extent to which a food for kings has become a food for millions. A few years ago nobody had ever heard of pineapple pie. Yet today restaurant owners tell us it is second in demand only to apple pie, which for centuries has been an American institution. The same fruit which was carefully carried in on silver trays to royal tables, may now be seen in the most democratic "quick lunch wagon", shoved across the counter some hundred or more times per day in the is expected to begin soon, as the old walls must be torn down and preparations made to establish new foundations. As to the style of the new building we hear many remarks. Some think it will be a little low for its length, others believe it will be rather peculiar in shape but everybody hopes it will be strictly modern and above all strictly fire proof. It must be borne in mind that architect's preliminary drawings are very flexible and have a funny habit of causing structures to look the way they are not. In other words if a designer wanted to make a low building appear high he would draw a close-up view with considerable perspective, while if on the other hand he wanted to dwarf a high building, he would picture it as seen from a distance with no perspective, and little contrast. It is safe to say that after the new school house is finished we shall know how it is going to look, but at present it exists only in the heads of Bellingham & Cobb, the architects who put it on paper.

To Arrange For A Banquet

TO FORMER STUDENTS OF JENNIE BENNETT TERRIAN: –

Most of you who read the letter published in this paper, and written by Mrs. Jennie Bennett Terrian, of Sterling, Illinois, will understand that plans are under way to entertain her when she comes to North Adams which will be on August 15. There are a number of her students in the vicinity of North Adams and no doubt all of them feel the occasion of her first visit here in many years should be honored, therefore it is proposed that a meeting of those of the old crowd who were acquainted with Mrs, Terrian and were in the high room when she taught here, meet at the store of Harold Young on Saturday evening July 9th, at 8:30 to arrange details for a reception and banquet to be given August 15, as we should be able to entertain her in old-time style. James Post former president of the Alumni Association will be more than glad to listen to suggestions and consult with any or all who wish to contribute to the success of this endeavor. Remember the date and be present.

Sad Accident Near Hillsdale

Mrs. Esther Locklin an old resident of this township. was killed under most pitiful circumstances on Tuesday morning about 9:00 when she was struck by a touring car on the Wayne Highway south of Hillsdale. She had been visiting an old friend on this road Mrs. Cary and on the morning in question the two women had opened the mail box near the door yard and Mrs. Locklin thought she would just go across the road to call upon Mrs. Cary's daughter, but in so doing she failed to note the approach of a car north-bound. She apparently collided with the rapidly moving machine near the rear end and was mangled by the top bows which were down. Her arm was broken and a deep gash cut on her head. She died almost instantly after being struck. The driver of the car Mr. Ladd of Marengo Calhoun county was quickly exonerated from all blame by the coroner's jury. Mrs. Locklin was the widow of the late Lovell Locklin and since the death of her husband had resided with her daughter Mrs. Belle Bohn on the old home stead east of the village. She was 75 years of age and is survived by her daughter Mrs. Bohn, two sisters Mrs. Ophelia Ingham of Detroit, Mrs. Elizabeth Buck of Hillsdale, one brother Eli Collins of this place and several grand-children, nieces and nephews She was a member of the North Adams Methodist church and a highly respected christian lady.

Funeral services were held Thursday July 7 at 2:30 p. m. at the late home, Rev. H. E. Wylie officiating and interment was in North Adams cemetery.

SCENIC ROUTE TO MACKINAC

Over the same Indian trails along which his pioneer forbears tolled with ox-span and covered wagon, the Michigan Motorist today rolls swiftly in his car. Gone long since are the dangers and the discomforts of which Walt Whitman sang, but the beauty that is Michigan's remains to delight the eye of the pioneering motorist as it did his buckskin-clad ancestor.

If you are one who thrills at the sight of a map—who loves to run his pencil over desirable trips—but who never knows just where to go on a short three or four-day journey, lend an ear. For this is a trip from Detroit to Mackinac Island, with a return journey down the beautiful West Michigan coast.

Rich in history is our state, but no part holds more historical interest, more natural beauty, than this little island, whose tall, white limestone cliffs loom out of the sparkling indigo waters of the Straits of Mackinac, at the northernmost tip of the lower peninsula.

Michillmackinac—place of the big wounded person—was the name given it by the now extinct tribe of Algonquins who first claimed it as their own. Its heavy hardwood forests, the glens, ravines, caverns and strange-shaped rocks, linked the island with Indian folk lore from earliest times.

In 1670 French fur traders founded the first white settlement on the island and laid the beginnings for one of the most important fur-trading centers on the North American Continent. It was on Mackinac Island, in later years, that the Astor fur fortune was made.

After the French, the English and the Americans fought for control of the island. Today the ancient fort, erected in 1780, still stands as a lure to visitors. It is the second oldest fortification now standing in the United States. Fine golf courses, excellent hotels and the unusual feature that automobiles are entirely prohibited from the island attract thousands of tourists each Summer.

The trip from Detroit to the little community of Mackinaw City may be made by several routes.

All the roads in Michigan have been renumbered this Spring with United States road signs, which replace the old "M" markings. Following the new markings, over US 16 to Lansing, the tourist turns north on US 27, which is followed all the way to Cheboygan. The pavement ended at St. Johns, but fine gravel roads were traversed through Ithaca, Alma, Mount Pleasant, Clare and to the edge of Houghton Lake.

Leaving Houghton, the tourist enters the wilder part of the state's burned-over timberland.

This is the land of the trout streams, the joy of the fisherman. Roscommon, Grayling and Gaylord are passed and a few miles outside of Cheboygan the road turns to the right at Burt Lake. Here a high observation tower has been built, from the top of which the wild beauty of the lake and the surrounding country can be viewed for a slight fee and the exertion of climbing seemingly hundreds of stairs.

Cheboygan and on to Mackinaw City on US 23 where the motor car is left and a puffing ferry chugs across the water to Mackinac Island. The return trip through the beautiful resort country, with its thousands of fruit farms and the frequent glimpses of Lake Michigan, constitute one of the best trips the Lower Peninsula affords.

From Mackinaw City down to Petoskey, through more woodland, US 31 is followed all the way to Grand Haven.

Then down the shores of Grand Traverse Bay to Traverse City, famed alike for its beauty and for its cherries. The road suddenly emerges on the shore of Crystal Lake at Beulah. Few lakes in Michigan compare with Crystal Lake.

Climbing a seemingly endless hill, you reach Benzonia, which attracts attention by a huge sign hung across the road, assuring the tourist that he is "on the top of the world," and so it seems. Here the pavement begins and pavement is found all the rest of the way to Detroit.

GIRL AND KAZOO SENIOR WED 3 YEARS IN SECRET

A new record in long time marriage secrets was set when Miss Lois Day, of Augusta, and Edred Townsend, a senior at Kalamazoo college, announced their marriage which took place more than two years ago. They were married in South Bend, Ind., by Rev. J. Burt Bowman, a former Kalamazoo college student.

121 IS SOME HOT BUT WHAT OF 57 BELOW?

The highest temperature recorded at any United States weather bureau was 121 degrees, at Boise, Ida., in the summer of 1871. The lowest was 57 below zero at Havre, Mont., in 1916.

LITTLE DAMAGE BY BLACK BEARS SEEN AS MEASURE SIGNED

The first 1927 conservation measure to receive the approval of Gov. Green was a measure to provide compensation for damage to property caused by bears.

Until 1925 the native black bear of Michigan was not considered a game animal. It could be hunted, trapped and molested at any time of year. It received the same consideration and degree of protection that was accorded the wolf, coyote, fox and wildcat. The net result of this wide open policy was that our bears were beginning to be missed from their usual haunts and fear was expressed that unless they were given some protection they would eventually disappear from the State. So it was through the efforts of the sportsmen, the deer hunters especially, that the 1925 legislature declared the black bear to be a game animal to be hunted only during the open season for taking deer (confined to 15 days in November).

For two years this protective measure has been in force and, according to all reports, without causing any appreciable increase in our black bear population. Bears are by no means numerous with us and it is doubtful if their numbers would equal those of any other game or predatory animal inhabiting our wild covers. The amount of damage they do to the property or livestock of farmers and settlers is not to be compared with the depredations of coyotes, foxes, weasels, skunks and many lesser rodents, for which no compensation is sought.

DEER ONCE COMMON IN STREETS OF MIDLAND

Seeing a deer plunging headlong down Main street created as much furore in 1872 as a bank robbery would in Midland today.

Such a sight was seen by G. Will Ball, pioneer Midland sportsman. The deer, being chased by a dog, went through the town like a sky-rocket, and before any of the merchants could get out the old muzzle loader he had disappeared into the forks of the Tittabawassee river.

In 1862 Mr. Ball recalls bringing down a big buck out on the sand ridge along Ashmun street, now a thickly populated part of the city. Deer were so plentiful then that a hind quarter could be purchased any time from the Indians for 25c.

Indians camped along the Tittabawassee in the summer and went into their permanent camp on the Ball farm in the winter.

TWO COUNTIES IN SESSION LEARN OF PROFITS FROM HAY

"Hay Day" for Lake and Osceola Counties, sponsored by Michigan State College as a part of the more-alfalfa program, was held on the V. W. Montgomery alfalfa farm, on the north Chase road, four and a half miles from Reed City.

Two Michigan State College men were present, L. D. Kurtz, extension specialist in farm crops, and W. C. Cribbs, district extension agent.

The Montgomery farm was selected for the demonstration because of Mr. Montgomery's success with a run down farm. Five years ago returns from the farm would not pay the taxes of $118. Last year, from 40 of the 120 acres, $1,400 was realized from sale of alfalfa and it is anticipated that when the entire farm has been seeded to alfalfa, there will be an average yearly sale of $2,500 worth of hay.

The place at one time was one of the rich farms of this country. Continued cropping exhausted the soil, which is a gravel loam with plenty of sand and some clay.

COW TESTER DISCOVERS CHEATING SEPARATORS

Robert Osborne, of Hesperia, tester for the West Oceana Cow Testing Association, has plugged one big dairy leak in Oceana County.

In checking the accuracy of cream separators used by members of the association, he found 16 out of 27 were defective and were cheating their owners out of 2.89 worth of cream each month. The cream screws had become worn and were not skimming the milk efficiently, permitting much valuable butter fat to remain in the milk for the calves and pigs.

World's Only One-Armed Steeple-Jack!

There are a good many people who think being a steeple-jack is a fine occupation—for the other fellow. They wouldn't aspire to it as a vocation if they had eight arms and as many legs.

Yet Harry Weinsing of Baltimore—with but only one arm—earns his livelihood that way and likes it. Our photo shows him about to put a new rope on a flag pole atop a large downtown department store building in the Maryland city.

FIND ECONOMY IN MEAT CUTS

Here are a number of the different cuts of beef and how they are used. The first cut from the shoulder or chuck is suitable for pot roasts, spiced meat, casserole dishes and stews. It is an economical cut of meat, although it has high food value. It contains about two-thirds lean, one-fifth fat and from one-fourth to one-eighth bone.

The plate is used for making soup, corned beef and pot roasts. For stews, soup and hamburg steak, the shank is particularly adaptable. The flank is almost boneless and consequently there is very little waste in using this cut. For making pot pie or stuffing with dressing and roasting it is unexcelled. A juicy cut about two-thirds lean and one-sixth bone is the round. The inside or top is delicious for roasts or steaks, while the outside or bottom can be utiliezed for stews or ground meats.

The rump is about one-half lean and one-third fat and is used for braising, pot roasts, corning and steaks. The rib costs more than any forequarter cut but makes excellent roasts. Porterhouse steak is cut from the loin and of course is very choice. For pot roast, stews, corned beef or soup, the brisket cut is particularly well liked. The shoulder clod is used chiefly for pot roasts and steak and is economical as there is no waste. For making mince meat or brown stew the neck can be put into use. The flavor and richness is increased considerably by the addition of some salt pork.

ALUMNI GIVEN PREFERENCE IN "U" GRID TICKET SALES

Regents of the University of Michigan have voted to give the alumni preference in the distribution of football tickets for the coming season.

The decision to favor none except holders of bonds issued for the construction of the new stadium is an approval of the stand taken by Coach Fielding H. Yost. Bondholders have been assured seats between the 30-yard lines. Applications for tickets for the fall games are to be received Aug. 21 to 31.

NONOGENARIAN BROTHERS TAKE LONG MOTOR TRIP

Elder Henry Nicola, 93 years old, celebrated his birthday by taking an automobile trip to West Virginia, accompanied by his brother, Zalmon Nicola, 91; D. K. Nicola, of Columbus, Ohio, a 60-year old son of Zalmon, and his own son, Leroy Nicola, 72, of this city.

Zalmon Nicola came from Lincoln, Nebraska, to make the trip to the former home of the brothers, near Kingwood.

Michigan Asks Ohio Corn Ban

Residents of Detroit who are fond of sweet corn will be protected this summer from borer-infested ears from Northern Ohio, if Federal officials grant a petition filed by Herbert E. Powell, State Commissioner of Agriculture, for a quarantine against the Ohio product.

Mr. Powell, in a telegram to Dr. C. L. Marlatt, special representative of Secretary of Agriculture William M. Jardine, in the corn borer campaign, has pointed out that Michigan farmers have co-operated wholeheartedly in the campaign and have thoroughly cleaned up their fields, whereas the Ohio farmers have not. In justice to the Michigan farmers, he declares, the quarantine should be laid down.

Dr. Marlatt, in his reply, said the matter would be settled at a conference to be held in Toledo in the near future.

Since March, 1926, when the United States Supreme Court handed down a decision in a case affecting the State of Washington, the individual states have been without authority to protect themselves from destructive insects or diseases by means of quarantines except with the sanction of the Federal Horticultural Board.

Shortly before this decision was given, L. Whitney Watkins, then State Commissioner of Agriculture, had promulgated a quarantine against Ohio corn. The issue came to a climax last July, when the United States Department of Agriculture officials not only left the Ohio-Michigan line unprotected, but also failed to patrol the quarantine line in Michigan for a period of two weeks during which Ohio sweet corn, which ripens early, was being brought into this State.

Mr. Watkins sought to have the Federal Horticultural Board uphold Michigan in its attempt to keep out Ohio corn. Sweet corn growers in the vicinity of Toledo, supported by C. V. Truax, the Ohio Director of Agriculture, made strenuous objection, however, claiming that they stood to lose $200,000 if cut off from the Detroit market. Nothing was done.

Last winter, when Mr. Powell and his assistants got behind the $10,000,000 campaign against the borer, they served notice upon the Federal officials that unless the farmers in Ohio and Indiana cleaned up their fields, they would again ask for a quarantine.

At first all went well, but the farmers of Northern Ohio, where the land is flat and low, were troubled with an excess of rainfall and declared it was impossible for them to comply with the regulations.

$1,406 THEFT LOSS MARKS LAST YEAR FOR EAST LANSING

Of the $7,574.83 worth of property "lost, strayed or stolen," in the little college town of East Lansing, during the last year, the police d epartment recovered $6,167.95, leaving a total loss of only $1,406.88 sustained by the 3,000 citizens, the annual record of J. P. Hackett, chief of police, indicates.

The report also shows that the department answered 528 calls, made 223 arrests, of which 19 were for traffic violations, six for illegal possession of liquor, seven for driving while intoxicated, three for issuing fraudulent checks, and the remainder for miscellaneous offenses. In addition to the traffic arrests, there were 187 "reprimands" for disregard of traffic laws and signals. Student arrests are reported as almost negligible.

Fire during the year threatened property valued at $343,390, and resulted in a total loss of only $22,523, the report shows. The fire department answered 82 fire alarms in the city and 16 calls for rural fires.

DREDGE BRINGS INDIAN RELICS TO SURFACE

Dredging several feet under the bed of Manistee harbor channel to lay a submarine electric cable, workmen brought to the surface two relics of ancient days when Chippewa Indians roamed the forests and fished the waters of Manistee county. Edward Levandowski, one of the workmen, is exhibiting a tomahawk and an arrow head found seven feet under the river bottom. The tomahawk, of gray-green stone, is in perfect condition, and is as keen as a stone implement could be ground. The arrow head is of typical form and is undamaged.

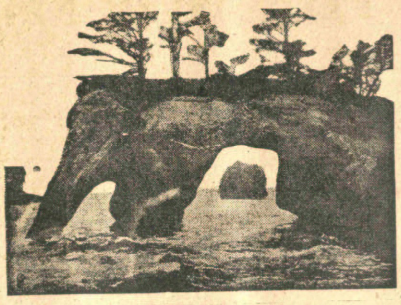
"Elephant Head" Arch



One of the queerest land formations—an amazing sample of Nature's artistic sculpture work—may be seen on the coast of Washington State near Moclips Beach. It is known as the Elephant head of the Arch Rocks and, as may be seen in the photo above, closely resembles the head of a pachyderm. Quite unusual and pretty, too, isn't it?

COUSIN MARRIAGES IN OTHER STATE VALID

Marriages of first cousins consummated legally outside the state are valid in Michigan, despite the statute forbidding first cousins to marry in Michigan, under a decision by the State Supreme Court. The decision affirms decisions to the same effect in both the Probate Court and the Circuit Court for Berrien County.

Frank F. and Kate A. Miller, residents of Berrien County, were first cousins, and decided to marry. In 1904 they went to Kentucky, where such marriages are legal, and were married, returning immediately to Berrien County. They lived there as husband and wife until 1926, when Miller died. Since then collateral heirs have endeavored to balk the receipt of the widow's share of Miller's estate, setting forth that Mrs. Miller never was a legal wife, and therefore is not entitled to share in the estate.

Dairymen War On T. B. Spread

The campaign for milk free of tuberculosis germs was discussed in all its aspects at Lansing at the third annual Lakes States Conference on Bovine Tuberculosis Eradication. Workers connected with the campaign in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee attended.

In addition to discussions of the relationship between bovine and human tuberculosis and the methods employed in various phases of the work, considerable time was given to the subject of avian tuberculosis.

"Without doubt, avian tuberculosis is one of the most serious problems to be handled in connection with the control and eradication of tuberculosis," said H. W. Norton, Jr., director of the bureau of animal industry, State Department of Agriculture. "Surveys indicate a very high percentage of tubercular infection in the poultry flocks of Michigan and it is definitely known that swine readily contract the disease from poultry.

"The annual losses both in swine and poultry in this state are enormous and it is quite evident that different methods of handling the poultry flock must be employed if these losses are to be prevented. Keeping the flock confined in the poultry yard instead of allowing free range over the farm and through the barns will protect the cattle and swine from exposure if the flock is infected. This is in line with good poultry practice and the flock so handled will show a greater profit at the end of the year."

Million Year To 13 in State

Thirteen of the 207 fortunate individuals who paid income tax in 1925 on incomes of more than $1,000,000 were residents of Michigan, the Internal Revenue Bureau reveals with a grudging paucity of detail designed to protect the identity of the fortunate ones.

Two of the Michigan Croesuses enjoyed annual incomes of more than $5,000,000 a year but, though the bureau gives everyone three guesses as to who they were, it declines to reveal how much over $5,000,000 their incomes were, or how much tax they paid.

The lesser plutocrats of the State were grouped as follows: One had an income somewhere between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000; one drew down something between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000; four between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000; one between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000; and four between $1,000,000 and $1,500,000.

The total income of the fortunate 13 is given in a non-committal lump sum as having amounted to $37,451,141. An unofficial calculation shows that if they were earning their money at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, the total fortuntes of the 13 amounted only to the disappointing sum of $624,185,700.

This is taken as demonstrating that while Michigan may number some billionaires among her population, her citizens, at least in 1925, enjoyed no billionaire incomes, the yearly income on just one solitary billion at 6 per cent being $60,000,000.

Further light is shed on the sad case of the billionaires by the fact that nearly $23,000,000 of the $37,000,000 total income earned by the 13 Michigan plutocrats came from interest on tax-exempt Government bonds. This leaves a total of only $14,000,000 derived from industrial securities and other taxable sources. Since at least two of Michigan's most plutocratic citizens are supposed to have very little money invested in Government bonds, an astute calculator will arrive at the conclusion that neither of the two incomes listed as "over $5,000,000" was greatly in excess of that sum.

The most popular income in Michigan in 1925 appeared to be between $1,000 and $2,000. Of the 189,000 who made returns, fully 59,000 confessed to income within this modest bracket. The great bulk of the citizenry fitted into the brackets below $5,000. Only about 29,000 Michiganders earned more than that amount in 1925.

As usual, more than a majority of the makers of income tax returns resided in the eastern half of the state. No less than 110,357 of the returns were made from Wayne County alone.

TOUGH GAMES FACE STATE 11

Michigan's warriors of track and diamond have stowed away their weapons after a strenuous season, and the earliest rumors of football for the season of 1927 are gathering momentum daily.

Each day the mammoth new stadium at Ann Arbor looms higher on the horizon, and the fondest expectations of F. H. Yost and his associates are being fulfilled. No longer will those who occupy the seats back of the end zones clamor for field glasses to help their vision. The end seats begin only six yards from the goal posts, the extra space being due partly to construction features and partly to the absence of a cinder track surrounding the field.

The last bit of concrete will be poured by August 20, and by September 1 the dozen and one necessary odd jobs will be finished. There will be 72,000 permanent seats, and plans for 15,000 temporary seats when needed are under consideration.

It is expected that the season of 1927 will witness a new attendance record set by another Michigan team. The three out-of-town games, Illinois, Wisconsin and Chicago, will draw maximum crowds in immense stadiums. Large crowds of the curious will attend the opening games against Ohio Wesleyan and Michigan State. At the three feature games, Ohio, Navy and Minnesota, it is expected that fully 90,000 persons will seek admission each Saturday.

A glance at Michigan's schedule makes it easy to understand why the Wolverine football staff will have its work cut out next fall. To begin with, since the conference rules set September 15 as the first day of practice, the opening of college a week earlier than usual, namely, on September 19, gives the squad only three days of double practice and training table, before classes begin, instead of the usual ten.

Then, look at the schedule itself. The first two games are neither tougher nor easier than usual. Ohio Wesleyan and Michigan State are well-known elevens, and will cause Michigan the usual early season effort, if nothing more. But after State, without a single let-up, the Wolverines face, on successive Saturdays, Wisconsin away, Ohio here, Illinois and Chicago away, and Navy and Minnesota here.

There are enough tough games on that list to last two ordinary seasons. With their characteristic philosophy, Coach Yost and his confreres are facing the situation with all their resources, but next year must find a high powered Michigan eleven, keyed up for six consecutive weeks—a seemingly impossible situation.

Sixty men, the usual number, will constitute the list of invitees next fall. Many of those at present eligible will fall at the wayside, cut down by the inexorable axe of ineligibility that has deprived Michigan of so many stars in recent years. On the other hand, many would-be stars, regarded as lost, will have regained their eligibility. So the losses and gains will approximately equal themselves.

The physical condition of the team will again be in the hands of Coach Charles Hoyt, head trainer. Hoyt's worries have already begun, for strolling along the campus he runs across several of his charges wearing what is termed in his language as a "pot." That means weeks of worried labor for Hoyt next fall, and pounds of fat and gallons of perspiration exuded by the candidate.

Summer conditioning is left in the hands of the individual. Simple food and plenty of exercise is the program prescribed by Hoyt. Those who fall prey to the lures of summer temptations will regret it during the hard, hard weeks between September 15 and October 1.

NEVER ABSENT FROM SCHOOL IS GIRL'S RECORD

Never absent from classes during her 12 years at school, and without a tardy mark for seven years, Miss Mabel Callen, who graduated from the Grand Blanc, Mich., high school, has achieved a record that few students can equal. She is the daughter of Mrs. W. S. Callen of Grand Blanc, and niece of Mrs. F. C. Royal of Dearborn. Miss Callen expects to take a business course at Michigan State Teachers college at Ypsilanti. Besides standing high in her class, she is quite an athlete, and one of the best basketball players in the school.

FLINT MAN NAMED PRESIDENT OF STATE MEDICAL SOCIETY

Dr. Herbert E. Randall, of Flint, unanimously was elected president of the Michigan State Medical Society at its annual meeting at Mackinac Island, and Detroit was selected as the place for the 108th annual sessions of the society in 1928.

That the members of the profession are thoroughly aroused and determined to take definite action in an attempt to give the state a new medical practices act, was indicated by the reception accorded the annual address of the president, Dr. J. B. Jackson, of Kalamazoo, which dealt with the necessity for such action.

MICHIGAN'S STRAWBERRY HARVEST NEARS A PEAK

The peak of Michigan's 1927 strawberry production was reached last week, according to reports from various parts of the fruit belt.

Canning factories in western and southern Michigan began their strawberry pack. It promises to be a record breaker, as a large crop of high quality fruit is being harvested. The rainfall has been sufficient to produce berries of normal size, and there has been enough sunshine to give the fruit a near normal sugar content.

GAR PIIKE IS CAUGHT IN ST. CLAIR RIVER

A gar pike weighing five pounds, with a six-inch sword, was caught in the St. Clair river by an unidentified fisherman, who left his unusual trophy in a Port Huron hardware store, where it is on display. It was caught with an ordinary net.

FLESER BATTING MARK IS ENVIABLE RECORD

Captain Don Fleser, of the Michigan State College baseball team, has left behind him a college batting mark for future Sparton diamond athletes to beat.

The fleet center fielder had a college batting average of .551. When a sophomore Fleser hit over .600 during the season and last year fell to something over .500 and this year his mark was .395.

An injured knee kept him from running out hard infield chances that in other years were sure base hits for him.

BERRY INSPECTION TOUR IS ARRANGED BY STATE

With a view to keeping down raspberry diseases and clinching Michigan's place as the leading state in the production of raspberries, a tour of 18 plantations in southwestern Michigan was held under the auspices of the State Department of Agriculture.

Among the plantations visited was that of the House of David, at Benton Harbor.

ALCOHOL BRINGS CRASH TO AIRPLANE JOY RIDERS

Exuberant Detroit roadhouse patrons are believed to have decided on an aerial joy ride and to that end attempted to make away with an airplane belonging to Karl Hawkinson, prize winner at the Ypsilanti, Mich., air meet. Their take-off was poor and the plane is badly damaged from crashing into a tree. The plane was at a private air field at Merton Grove. The would-be aerial joy riders escaped injury and arrest.

HUGE LIGHTS AT AIRPORT

A system of powerful lights has been installed at Selfridge Field in anticipation of a program of night flying that will be inaugurated this summer. The system was placed in operation for the first time last night.

While a number of Army fields in various sections of the country were equipped with night flying equipment before the Mt. Clemens airport, the Government spared no expense in the installation of the lights and the field stands as one of the best equipped for night operations.

Lieut. George Finch was the first to make use of the 5,000,000 candle power flood light, that threw the field into a day-time brilliance, when he landed at 9 p. m. from Dayton, Ohio, where he had met Maj. Thomas G. Lanphier and Col. Charles A. Lindbergh en route to Washington. He carried orders for Maj. Lanphier, who is commandant of Selfridge.

With a 9,000,000 candle power beacon playing its beams in the skies, visible in Detroit, and flood lights illuminating the ground, Lieut. Finch came to earth without any difficulty.

Selfridge Field officers said the lights will be in use regularly during night maneuvers and the convenience of pilots returning at night from other fields.

MICHIGAN HENS WIN EGG HONOR

Michigan hens again have demonstrated their superiority over out-of-state rivals by crowding a pen of Westerners out of first place in the fifth international egg laying contest at Michigan State College.

A pen of White Leghorns from Harry Burns' farm, near Millington, is leading the contest by a 15-egg margin over the Hollywood Poultry Farm entry from Washington, which had led almost since the start last November.

In gaining the 15-egg lead, Burns' hens were required to lay approximately 100 eggs more than their western competitors, yet they only have a lead of 15. This unusual situation is the result of more than 90 underweight eggs deposited by the Millington hens compared with less than 10 laid by the hens from Washington.

Underweight eggs weigh less than the minimum prescribed in the rules of the contest.

Hens in this year's contest are laying better than the contestants in the four previous races. If they continue to perform as in the first six months, Prof. C. M. Ferguson says, they will establish a new high average. The total production to date is about 2,000 eggs ahead of a year ago, which was a record.

At the age of 99 years, Hannibal G. Coburn, Howard City's veteran hotel man, has one more great ambition. It is to live until June 3 next year, his 100th birthday, and to observe that anniversary by taking an airplane ride from Howard City to Detroit.

What Do You Actually See?

That same Southern city has abolished the red-light district; the saloons are gone forever; the drunks along the wharf have disappeared. Children no longer frequent the open saloon at some father's request, and one can go for days through the very sections which were infested with immorality and the very slime of humanity, and there is not the slightest trace of these evils. Any man may walk down to the shore front in Boston, and he will find, not saloons and drunkards, but wholesale houses and humming trucks and sober laborers. The very street in Hartford that had so many saloons now retails food, clothing and many other useful articles. New London the haven of many a sailor, has put up shoe stores, clothing houses and grocery establishments where the old saloon stood; and people used to say, if you take away these saloons you are going to have a long row of empty stores along Bank Street. We forget that. But just to remind you, let me repeat What do you actually see in the way of changes since 1918? And what if we add to these few examples our bank reports; our new homes; our better cared for children; our many happier leisure hours; our automobiles and our luxuries, once swallowed by the saloon?—The Union Signal

The End

Poison Liquor in the Saloon Regime

When fashion popularized the drinking of spirituous liquors in the time ef our forefathers, it was comparatively a pure beverage—pure of its kind.

This sounds like a wet apologist of to-day; but it is the opening sentence of an assault on the liquor dealers of America for the poisonous adulteration of drink—and was written in 1874 by J. E. Stebbins, a newspaper man who covered the Hillsboro crusade for the Cincinnati papers. Remember it was written 53 years ago, long before the present generation of wet propagandists sowed the country with their misstatements as to the Government's poisoning of alcohol, and it reminds one of an era when under the most favored circumstances the liquor trade endeavored to swell the profits by trebling their whisky with concoctions of water and almost every variety of poison. It is a perfect reminder of the fact that the whisky trade has never played fair. Many a historian has unearthed the fact that the earliest Egyptian, Greek and Babylonian wine dealers, had to be threatened with death before they would sell their wares in legal measures, at the right price and without adulteration; but one doesn't have to be an archæologist to discover that with the Whisky Ring in its full plentitude of power, as it was in our seventies, there was scarcely a bartender in the United States who wasn't selling adulterated liquor; scarcely a wine merchant who wasn't adding to his gains as he added impurities to his wines.

In 1874 when J. E. Stebhins wrote the history from which our opening sentence is taken, the liquor traffic practically had its own way in this country; and with all that freedom it wouldn't be fair! With a hugo output of legal whisky and malt drinks the saloons sought to evade the manufacturers tax by making their own cellar products out of poison, a statement which can be proved easily by the records of most any state legislature. Wine was cheap in the seventies, and yet the wine journals bitterly assailed a horde of dealers for selling moonshine whisky and flavoring the water in bottles labelled "Madiera Wine"—the labels being counterfeit. Strychnine was the most common adulterant; a New York bootlegger buying more of the drug in one purchase than all the doctors would have needed in one year. Three cents worth of this drug, a gallon of water and a pint of moonshine made wine, port or Madiera—just in proportion to the handmade flavoring.

And that in the days of the legalized saloon in which we are commended!

A Beautiful June Wadding

One of the prettiest weddings of this season was that of Miss Gladys Westcott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Randall Westcott, to Mr. Arlington Rodlam son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Rodlam of Jonesville, Michigan, which was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents near North Adams, Michigan, Wednesday morning, June 29, at 12 o'clock.

Miss Marjorie Young, cousin of the bride, served as bridesmaid and Mr. Floyd Grill of Jonesville, was the best man. Miss Frances Young another cousin of Miss Westcott, played Mendelssohn's Wedding March, during which the bridal party took their places before an improvised arbor of flowers, where the ceremony was performed by the Reverend C. W. Long of Grand Rapids. The bride was lovely in her wedding gown of white georgette and carried a gorgeous shower bouquet of roses and lilies-of-the-valley. Her attendant wore powder blue crepe and a corsage of sweet peas and roses in harmonizing shades.

After the ceremony tne guest-gathered at tables where a bounteous three-course luncheon was served by Misses Gladys Emery of Adrian, Mildred Arnold of Jonesville, Irma Cheney of Ionia, and Thelma Brooks of Somerset.

Covers were laid for ten guests at the bride's table which was beautifully adorned with a bouquet of pink roses and lighted by tall pink tapers adorned with pink and orchid tulle bows. A huge white wedding bell with a shower of rose buds hung above the table. These with the baskets and place cards for each guest were also in orchid and pink. The remaining guests were seated at small tables, each table being most attractively decorated.

The bride and groom left immediately for a motor trip to Niagara Falls, New York City, Washington, D. C. and other points of interest in the East, after which they will be at home to their many friends in Jonesville, Michigan.

Jane Randolph aged 14 years, of the Jerome High School, daughter of Fred Randolph and wife was awarded first prize in the essay contest sponsored by the Daughters of the American Revolution and Opal McBain of the 7th grade won second prize. Opal is the daughter of Dick McBain and wife of Moscow Township. The two essays will be read at the meeting of the Womans Congress on the Hillsdale Fair Grounds this fall or at some meetings of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The subjects of these documents was Early History of Hillsdale County and it is said much special study and preparation has been shown in this work, and both writings are creditable. Judges were Mrs. Viola Moore, Mrs F. A. Lyon and Mrs. Karl Katzenmeyer of Hillsdale.

Malaria Peddled By Mosquitos

Michigan's Department of Public Health keeps constantly reminding the people how they need health precautions—and we guess they do. As a matter of fact the usual drink of some chaps these days is very unhealthy stuff—full of blindness, paralysis and various unknown names but it keeps coming from somewhere, and the boys keep drinking.

The worst enemy of health is the mosquito that injects himself into your bedroom at night and tinkers around within one inch of your probosis, until such time as he can catch you asleep, then he sinks in his bill. This rascal they tell us, carries seventeen different malaria germs in his sample case and you should watch out for him.

We have all seen individuals who seem to think malaria is a joke. No one who has witnessed a patient go from chills to fever and back again thinks its funny. Furthermore, if people would realize that malaria in some of its forms can be mistaken for such diseasess as typhoid, tuberculosis, a severe and unusually fatal form of heart trouble, even abscess of the liver, and a grave kidney disease, they would look upon malaria with respect, In mild forms of this infection the patient may show "merely poor health" but ha suffers accordingly all the handicaps which poor health produces. In more serious types of this disease a prolonged illness may be followed by recovery, but from serious forms like the "Blackwater Fever" death is not an uncommon result.

Mosquitos carry the parasite of malaria. The one type of mosquito which does this, stubbornly refuses to quit and once it gets into the sleeping quarters of a human being. she (for it is the female that carries the germ) persistently buzzes around until she gets a bite and leaves the bug behind.

The best preventative measure to be taken is to keep the mosquitos from breeding, and since they are hatched in swamps, pools and damp soils, these must be drained away and dried up or the waters treated with coal oil

Since the insect does most of his biting at night, sleeping quarters must be screened and protected and baby carriages covered with netting.

D'Autremonts Sent Up For Life

The readers of this paper will remember the pictures of two dapper young men posted up in conspicuous places since last winter, and a reward offered for the capture of three brothers accused of robbing a mail train in Oregon and killing the crew. These men have been rounded up and sentenced to life imprisonment. The twins were captured in Ohio and one other brother in the Philippines where he was serving in the army. Just to show what it costs the Government to catch these rascals, it is said two millions five hundred thousand circulars were printed in six different languages and distributed all over the United States. Cost price is not mentioned but likely runs in to the thousands of dollars. Advertising did the business for a returned soldier from the Philippines saw the pictures, remembered such a man in his detachment and gave up the evidence. Pictures posted up at Steubenville, Ohio, positively identified the twins by the same process.

Charles Carney and family of Holdenville Oklahoma arrived in town last week and are guests of his parents Darwin Carney and wife and other relatives here.

NEXT EARLIEST LENT NOT DUE UNTIL 2008

Season This Year is Only Eight Days From Latest Possible Date

Lent, which began Ash Wednesday, March 2, is only eight days away from the latest date on which the season can begin, according to a writer in the New York Times. The earliest date is Feb. 4, which happened in 1818. The next earliest date will be in 2008, when Ash Wednesday will fall on Feb. 5.

These dates are set by an ecclesiastical reckoning for Easter Sunday covering a period of 228 years, or twelve cycles of the moon, and an analysis of the table, from 1786 to 2013 shows that there are more late than early Easters, the figures being 175 Easters in April and 53 in March

WAYS TO BLOCK CROOKED PROMOTERS

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

(This is one of a series of articles exposing the wiles of sharpers who are after your money.)

MANY reliable corporations, firms and individuals are engaged in developing mining properties, drilling for possible new oil wells and promoting new inventions and enterprises. On the other hand many unreliable persons are ostensibly engaged in the same pursuits, but in reality are only promoting frauds. Therefore, every investor should first divide the sheep from the goats before he hazards his savings. Because there are many dishonest manipulators using mining, oil, invention and promotion terms to deceive does not mean that all promoters in these fields are crooked. The truth is, there are many trustworthy men engaged in promoting enterprises that are honest investments. The problem is to know the difference between promoters of the reliable type and the high-pressure variety. The former are engaged in legitimate business. The other group is engaged in fleecing the public.

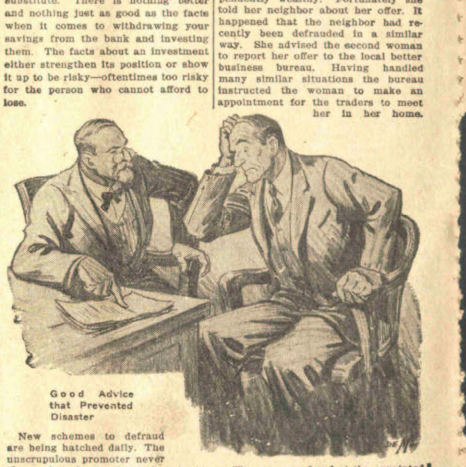
W R MOREHOUSE

The number of those who deliberately scheme to defraud is large and they are shrewd and deceitful. For this reason those who cannot afford to lose their savings should not trust entirely to their own judgment in making investments.

In order to divide the sheep from the goats—to distinguish between reliable and unreliable promoters, to tell the good investments from the worthless—the inexperienced investor should consult his banker or let the National Better Business Bureau, whose headquarters are in New York City, advise him. It costs nothing to get such advice from either source. It is safe to say that if those who have lost their savings through fraudulent schemes had followed this simple course they would still be in possession of their money.

Get the Facts

Invariably, get the facts and take no substitute. There is nothing better and nothing just as good as the facts when it comes to withdrawing your savings from the bank and investing them. The facts about an investment either strengthen its position or show it up to be risky—oftentimes too risky for the person who cannot afford to lose.



Good Advice that Prevented Disaster

New schemes to defraud are being hatched daily. The unscrupulous promoter never sleeps but is continuously plotting new methods of attack on the savers' hard-won accumulations. The liberties he takes with the law and the schemes he designs for belittling the sound advice of responsible persons makes it even more essential for investors to get the facts.

Remember that anything that is worth investing in is worth knowing about as to its safety, its income, and its marketability. Any investment which is enshrouded by a screen of glowing promises or is so complicated that neither you nor your banker can fathom it and get the hard facts isn't an investment you can afford to put your money into.

Make it an unbreakable rule to get all the facts, whether the investment be large or small, and you will save yourself the heartaches and bitter disappointment of losing your savings.

Millions of dollars which have unfortunately been lost through poor investment might have been saved if the investors had taken time to investigate before investing. There is always need for capital in safe, honest business and so great is the legitimate demand for investors' funds that not one cent need be wasted by them on fraudulent schemes.

Don't Trade Good for Bad

Don't exchange your investments for others you know nothing about. Some time you may be approached to make a trade by a plausible person claiming to have better investments to offer than those you have. Recently a woman owning a block of gilt-edge public utility stock was approached by two smooth sharpers and urged to exchange it for stock in a fruit company which, she was told, was not only very valuable then but would increase rapidly in value and soon make her independently wealthy. Fortunately she told her neighbor about her offer. It happened that the neighbor had recently been defrauded in a similar way. She advised the second woman to report her offer to the local better business bureau. Having handled many similar situations the bureau instructed the woman to make an appointment for the traders to meet her in her home.

They were on hand at the appointed hour. With the cunning of expert swindlers they proceeded to inveigle her stock away from her, assuring her that if she exchanged her public utility stock for that of the fruit company there was no doubt she would become very rich. But just as they were spreading out before her a beautifully embossed stock certificate the bureau's detective stepped out from his place of concealment and told the swindlers he had come prepared to take them for a ride in his car. They protested loudly and even struck at him, but experienced as he was in handling persons who resist arrest he soon had them handcuffed together.

Investigation revealed that the certificate of stock of the fruit company was fictitious. No such company had ever been organized. The evidence also disclosed that some certificates had already been issued and exchanged and there were a large number more ready for future use whenever a trade could be arranged.

Literally thousands of inexperienced investors are being swindled out of their good investments in such trades. It behooves all persons who have good investments not to exchange them without first getting all the facts from their banker or other person fully qualified to advise and protect them.

(A future article will tell of more schemes by which people are defrauded of their savings.)

Reserve Officers Will Be There

More than 100 Reserve Officers and 1,000 Citizens Military Training students will arrive in Battle Creek this week to begin the daily routine of military training, athletics and play which constitues the annual event so much touted by the military authorities of this state The officers will remain about two weeks and the students will be there 30 days. On or about July 8th the camp will be in full blast, and on August 15th, it will be over for the season. Colonel Raymond Sheldon commander-in-chief, is a thoroughly gentlemanly officer and he takes an interest in the personal welfare of the boys as if they were his own. The Colonel plans to invite the parents of the boys in training to come to Camp and visit their sons to see that the boys get what is promised them. You can come any day and your own son will show you through and you can see for yourself what is being done to make healthy, vigorous men and good soldiers out of the lads. While the Colonel does not stress too heavily on the military side of the question, he does desire to satisfy all critics of the material praticaability of the comip Medical attention is free and if a boy is ill, his parents are at once notified. Camp Custer is located in the heart of Michigan and is the healthiest section in the world. This 9,000 acres of Government Reserve land in the hills and vales is blessed with the purest water and air, and should be the making of your boy.

A grand convention of Michigan Reserve officers will take place at Post Tavern, Battle Creek, July 9 and 10. There are 3,000 of these men in Michigan and our military policies will be talked over by men who are supposed to know what they mean. Any officers in this section desiring to attend and wanting tent space and room at Camp Custer during the session, should notify Colonel Sheldon at once.

He Thinks Women Wiser

A certain medic, Dr. Frank Mc Coy of Los Angeles, California, is credited with stating that men and women are rapidly becoming more settled on sexual matters.

"Men and women as we have known them are different both as to physical shape and mental incilnations. Men are physchologically dominent, aggressive and with a more reasoning mind. Women have more creative power are less aggressive mentally and have lived more emotional lives. In the past ten years there have been remarkable changes in both the mental and physical life of men and women The average man is taking on many of the feminine qualities such as love for the artistic and an appeciation of the finer shades ofr emotional feeling. On the other hand women are acquiring many of the mental and physieal characteristics of men. The clinging vine type is using her head piece more than she did. Women have thrown away yards of skirts and discarded corsets, bustles and other monstrosities; girls feet are becoming bigger and men's smaller."

Well, the Doc. hits it off about right although he don't go into particulars. In regard to discarding he is quite right because the girls have discarded so much there is little left, and as far as becoming masculine is concerned, he made a real ringer there. The other day we saw a bobbed-haired, coarsely constructed, gum-chewing specimen of the female species who tallied with the doctor's description perfectly.

This paper wishes to announce that the Michigan State Holiness Camp Meeting will conveue at Eaton Rapids Camp Ground July 29 to August 7, 1927, and the Methodists as a whole, cordially invite any or all who are interested to be in attendance, as this camp ground is a sort of Mecca for all Methodists and their well-wishers. Here is located a large stretch of wooded park land and river with all its beautiful and restful advantages. Here your children can roam the woods, and rusticate while their elders are attending the services. Lodging can be obtained at the hotel for 50c per night or $3.00 per week, one in a room. Two in a room is proportionately cheaper. The leading speakers scheduled are Rev. John Paul of Upland, Indiana: Dr. Will Huff of Sioux City Iowa and Dr. Turbeville, of Oskaloosa, Iowa. These men are all high lights in Methodism and good talkers well qualified to entertain an aadience. Plenty of cottages on the grounds if you want to do camping. Address the secretary Fern Wheeler, Chorlotte, Michigan, for particulars.

Watch Your Well!

The condition of nine out of ten open wells throughout the community would if known, cause considerable alarm, because the water is impure and it is not always known whichway the underground current runs. As a rule a well that has spells of being empty or nearly so, and then again high water is unfit for drinking purposes and never should be used. This condition indicates that surface water gains admittance carrying all kinds of poison with it. The only safe wells in this part of Michigan are what is known as driven or cased wells, where the large pipe is driven deeply into the soil often 75 or 80 feet to solid rock, and inside is another hole into which a smaller pipe enters and goes down one hundred and twenty-five feet which is the usual depth in this village, although it varies somewhat in surrounding country. Here we have water reasonably safe from contagion though not always so. A few years ago a veterinary here who was vitally interested in the health of the village took sterilized samples of the water from such wells as the owners would allow and mailed these samples to Lansing where State chemists analyzed them, and the results were somewhat surprising to a host of citizens Wells which were supposed to be absolutely safe and 99 percent pure were contaminated with some form of sewage or underwash from out-buildings or objectionable plants. The fact that your well is driven does not guarantee an actual immunity, but it helps like the dickens. A few years ago all wells in the city of Hillsdale were condemned. Why? Because it was found that practically all of them received their supply from the same underground source, and with so much loose sewage and disease filth, this stream had become contaminated, therefore the city council ruled that city works water only should be used for consumption. This had been filtered by chemicals and came out of the faucet minus its death-dealing germs The old story of out-door closets on top of a hill and a well in the hollow does not always prove a poisoned source, because sometimes the surface of the earth and the dividing stratas down 80 feet or a hundred below may be exactly opposite—carrying the current away from the well, but there is absolutely no way of knowing except by chemical examination by an expert. In addition to this our water here is all heavily impregnated with minerals such as lime, sulphur, iodine, magnesia and iron. Lime is the largest content but is not always objectionable. The human body will assimilate a large quantity of lime in a short time making bone, teeth and nails. Iodine is a wonderful preventative of some diseases like goitre Iron is always desirable for up-building the blood and tissues.

Magnesia is a wonderful bowel remedy and digestive. All these qualities can be found in most any well in this village together with a lot of other ingredients not so necessary. Hence no farmer on any plat of land can afford to do without the best possible water obtainable. Whenever you try to economize, don't for one minute consider cutting off the best drinking water it is possible to get here. If your well costs you $300 and many of them do, charge it to your health account. In the farm barn of the up-to-date citizen will be found a tank piped from the premises well, provided with an overflow and constantly supplied with a cold circulating stream. In the spacious barn yard is another or possibly two large concrete tanks built stationery and if possible under the limbs of some friendly apple tree or other shade, always ready with its cooling draft for the hot dusty horses from the field and the milch cows. It is a source of great satisfaction to learn that a large number of farmers in this part of the state have installed either electric or gasoline pumping outfits and while they cost more than the old-fashioned wind-mill they are advantageous in many ways. We have found many farms on the electric lines where a two to five h. p. electric motor could be cheaply maintained and was always ready. If necessary it should be carried to the work and most any farmer of these days is able to install and wire his own premises. We are always somewhat doubtful when we see electric wires strung all over a big dusty barn—it has a look like fire, but very few fires have ever been reported from this source. Personally if we owned such a barn and wired it at all every inch of wire inside the building would have to be carried thru a conduit—but as has been said—every fellow to his own taste, etc.

When Your Ship Comes In From Hawaii

EVERYBODY watches for a ship to come in, a ship that will bring some long-looked-for happiness, some especial joy. The cargoes are all different, but they carry in small or large parcels the fulfilment of wishes, even the most trifling.

The housekeeper who really cares for her job is full of wishes, and mostly they center around some new concoction to set before her family at dinner. She loves to see the happy surprise on their faces and hear their pleased comments. The ship of recent date that gave her most cause for gratitude was that which brought to her pantry shelves canned Hawaiian pineapple. She added it to many recipes and made it the "raison d'etre" of many others, before unknown, and offered to her family for their delectation.

Housewives who have tried only a few ways of serving pineapple may be glad to experiment with the following recipes which have been tested by well-qualified cooks and found good. There is a recipe here for almost every course.

SAUTEED PINEAPPLE: Sliced Hawaiian canned pineapple browned in butter and put around chicken, turkey, or any of the light meats makes not only an attractive decoration but adds piquancy to the meat. Instead of the sautè, a can of pineapple may be emptied into a shallow dish, each slice by itself and not overlapping and allowed to simmer in the juice until the fruit is clear. Decorate a platter with this in the same way.

Fry bacon and remove to hot platter and keep hot. Season a little flour with salt and pepper, dip sliced canned pineapple into the flour covering both sides and brown in the hot bacon fat. Serve with lettuce.

Pineapple may be used in numerous ways as an ingredient in salads but the very best combination of all, a salad that may be used as a course at dinner or that is satisfying enough to form the main dish at luncheon is called:

"BEST OF ALL" SALAD: Make on individual plates a fairly substantial bed of finely shredded lettuce. Cover with celery thinly sliced crosswise. Lay on this a slice of canned pineapple. Cover the center with a square of cream cheese. Around the pineapple place prunes that have been stoned and stuffed with walnuts. Either mayonnaise or oil and lemon dressing may be used.

Almost any fruit cup is improved by the addition of canned pineapple. The following are favorite combinations:

FAVORITE FRUIT CUP: Put in layers of sherbet glasses diced apple, diced banana, crushed (or sliced, cut in small pieces) pineapple. Fill the glass with the juice of preserved strawberry or cherry. Top with whipped cream.

WATERMELON AND PINEAPPLE: Seed and cut into small pieces the red part of a watermelon. Mix with cut, sliced canned Hawaiian pineapple. A few seedless raisins with this adds character both in looks and taste.

CANTALOUPE AND PINEAPPLE: Cantaloupe may be substituted for watermelon in the above recipe. Fresh strawberries, walnuts and sliced pineapple also make a pleasing fruit cup.

A hot pineapple dessert that always finds favor is

PINEAPPLE SOUFFLE: Melt 2 tablespoons shortening; add 4 tablespoons flour and stir till smooth. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, ⅓ cup sugar, 1 cup milk, and bring to a boil, stirring constantly. Take from fire and mix in the well-beaten yolks of 3 eggs, then 1 can of crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Fold in stiffly beaten whites of 3 eggs, pour into a greased baking-dish, set in pan of hot water and bake in moderate oven. Serve immediately.

PLAIN PINEAPPLE HARD SAUCE: Cream thoroughly 4 tablespoons butter with ½ cup sugar. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla and 1 cup drained crushed pineapple.

PINEAPPLE-EGG SAUCE: Beat well the whites of 4 eggs, adding 2 tablespoons sugar and beat again. Add 2 cups crushed Hawaiian pineapple, drained. Beat well and serve.

COOL PINEAPPLE DRINKS: In making all drinks it is better to boil the sugar in water first and cool before adding the fruits. Using 2 cups water and one of sugar as a foundation, delightful drinks may be made by adding the juice of 3 lemons, 3 oranges, and the juice from 1 can of sliced Hawaiian pineapple. Or, add to this a pint of freshly infused tea, thoroughly cooled. Or, without the tea (as desired) add a bottle of ginger ale.

Peony Farm Is On Island

There may be some who doubt whether the world really beats a path to the door of the man who invents the best mousetrap.

But let him grow the best peonies, on a romantic island in a romantic lake, and the world scarcely will be able to find parking space on the island for its cars.

This peony man, who has put the fabled mousetrap inventor in the shade, is Daniel E. Weage. He is the proprietor of the Island Peony Gardens, in Coldwater Lake, 11 miles south of Coldwater. The lake is off the main highway; there is only the sign, "To Island," to guide visitors; and they must pass along a narrow road, built on a causeway, to reach the island. Yet on Sundays, when the blooming season is at its height, there are sometimes as many as 10,000 visitors from Michigan, Ohio and Indiana.

Mr. Weage deals in peony roots by wholesale, and he is hampered rather than helped by the presence of so many visitors.

"But let them come," he said. "I'm glad to have them, if looking at my peonies makes them happier."

How did this man happen to be in this business and on this island? Those who know him well hint at things of which he does not speak—he was once a preacher, they declare, who lost his faith in orthodox religion. Be that as it may, his own explanation is simple.

"I started growing peonies in 1909," he said. "I was a contractor in Coldwater. I had a large home and I started in to beautify the grounds. I hadn't known there were such things in the world. I kept on increasing them and before long I had three or four thousand dollars invested. Then I went into the business on a commercial basis.

"It was in 1913 when I came out here. My business had outgrown the space at home, and I wanted an unlimited supply of warm water for irrigation. Finally I found this."

Lake water, even from a Coldwater lake, is warmer than water from a well, he explained.

"And so now I live through from one year's end to the next in the hope of seeing the peonies bloom again," he finished.

When he first came to the island, Mr. Weage began to grow peonies near its northernmost tip. But it is axiomatic among peony growers, as among the growers of most other things, that you can't grow peonies more than a few years in one place. The soil becomes impregnated with disease germs and your plants will die if you don't move.

So the peony gardens have moved, glacier-like, up the island slope to the south. There are several acres of them altogether. A two-acre plot is watered with overhead irigation.

"This little two-acre field has the cream of the world's peonies," said Mr. Weage, as he wandered lovingly among the great blossoms of snow white and delicate pink and rich red, each a queen in its own right. Thousands of queens there were here, and not one envying the royal finery of her neighbors.

"There are other men who have more peonies than I have, but I think I have the largest collection of fine peonies in the world."

Mr. Weage, whose hair is growing white, said this quietly and without pride.

Acid Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

LINDY'S REPLY IS SEEN AS SPUR TO DAIRY INDUSTRY

Even the dairy cow is prospering as a result of the epoch-making flight of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

"A bottle of milk and a bath!" was Lindbergh's reply when, upon reaching the home of Ambassador Herrick, in Paris, he was asked what he wanted.

Now, milk and water were long considered as fit chiefly for children, but it proved the most desired combination for this man of iron nerve and muscles of steel! People will talk about "strong drink"! Analysis will show that milk is the strongest liquid we have—strongest in food value, strongest in the elements which make for flesh, bone, energy and a clear head. It is surely "that strong drink which is for men"! It is not a stimulant which puts fire into the body to burn up its energy, but it is a builder—constructive, not destructive. Not only that, but increased consumption of milk helps to develop the most useful and most needed production of dairy products—a basic industry in America. Lindbergh is evidently a man of few words, but to the young men of America there is sounder advice in his seven-word statement than in many a 5,000-word oration by some "gifted orator."

"A bottle of milk and a bath!"

Trucks Link Farms, Cities

Greater use of the motor truck by farmers in western Michigan threatens to squeeze the operators of commercial trucks just as these interests have cut into the business of the railroads.

Producers are developing new markets. They have purchased motor trucks and are hauling their crops 10 to 300 miles. This produce formerly was handled by the railroads through local dealers and more recently by trucksters who called at the farms for their loads.

A group of farmers near Beulah, Benzie County, pooled their sweet cherry crop last year and hauled the entire production by motor truck to Chicago, a distance of 300 miles. Other growers in southwestern Michigan trucked their fruit in a small way last year, but this season they intend to buy more trucks and market their entire crop.

Recent completion of paved highways to Detroit will result in a larger tonnage being hauled direct from West Michigan fruit farms and orchards to the municipal markets in the Motor City this season. Other eastern Michigan cities are due to receive more fruit direct from the producer by motor trucks than in the past, according to present intentions of growers, who have announced plans to develop the home markets for Michigan products.

STATE SOCIAL WORKERS TO MEET IN BATTLE CREEK

TRIPLETS, TWINS IN LUDINGTON HIGH GIVEN DIPLOMAS

Triplets and twins were graduated from Ludington High School, when 61 students were awarded diplomas.

The triplets, Meredith R., Raymond and Roy W. McLean, are children of Mr. and Mrs. E. O. McLean of Ludington. Mr. McLean is a former newspaper editor.

The twins, Vena E. and Vera E. Piper, are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Piper, of Summit Township, Mason County.

Meredith R. and Raymond McLean and vera E. Piper of this quintet are four-year honor roll students.

Always grease new pie plates, pot covers, sieves, tin cups and bread pans with lard before using them, and put in a warm oven. They will never rust if treated in this way.

Rolls, biscuits or doughnuts may be steamed a few minutes to freshen them, or they may be placed in a paper bag (end fastened securely) and left for a short time in a warm oven.

New Pack For Soldiers --20 Pounds Lighter

A new pack, containing all of a soldier's necessities for a long, forced march, is being tried out with evident pleasing success in the United States Army. It is twenty pounds lighter than the old type pack—which is SOME big difference after a day's tramping over hard, dusty or deep, muddy roads. Ask any A. E. F. veteran.

Our photo above shows the new pack at the left. The old—at the right.

Survivor Ends Political War

Blue Lake township, once the scene of a bitter political warfare which resulted in the killing of three persons in May, 1926, by a bomb sent through the mail to August Krubaech, supervisor, by Asa K. Bartlett, constable, is peaceful today.

The township hall, located far back in the cut-over timber district, and the scene of the former political battles today is the social center of the district. Here weekly dances and social sessions are held and the folks who once were enemies gather to make themselves merry.

Carl Franke, a serious young man of 27 years, is given the major portion of the credit for restoring peace among the residents of the township, after the warfare had taken the life of his brother, William R. Franke, 22 years old.

Mr. Krubaech operated the Three Lakes Tavern, and during his term warfare started. Bartlett led this fight. The voters, however, returned the tavern keeper to the office of supervisor, despite the opposition of Bartlett and his followers. Defeated at the polls, Bartlett planned to kill his political enemy.

Janette Krubaech, 18 years old, daughter of the supervisor, was to be married May 29, 1926, to William Franke. Two days before the wedding there was activity about the hotel, as plans were made for the event. Finally, the rural mail man arrived and left a package which was brought to the tavern by Janette. She believed that it was a wedding gift, and with Mr. Franke gathered about as her father opened it.

The package contained a bomb. The tavern was wrecked. William Franke was killed instantly, and Mr. Krubaech and his daughter died a few hours later. The next day Asa Bartlett was arrested and two days later he made a written confession. The next week he was on his way to prison at Marquette to serve a life term.

Carl Franke was one of the first on the scene that day. He heard the explosion and ran across the fields from his home. He found his brother dead. Later Carl Franke was appointed supervisor to take the place of Mr. Krubaech. And since that time he has been healing the wound of other years.

To remove the odor of smoke, put a basin of water in the room, leave overnight, and keep a window slightly open. The air will be quite sweet by morning.

To prevent custard dishes or glasses from cracking when pouring boiled custard into them, place them on a damp cloth. This plan is most effective.

WIDOW DISCOVERS WAY TO SPEED SCHOOLING

A French widow, Mme. Simon, claims to be able to teach a totally illiterate person to read and write in 20 hours.

Mme. Simon is the inventor of a new and simplified method of hand-writing, based on the principle that all letters are formed with straight lines and circles. Mme. Simon has been able to test her method on young soldiers of the last incorporated contingent, which included no fewer than 18,000 men who were completely illiterate.

They were able to read and write after 10 lessons of two hours each, but her pupils who broke all records were the three children of El Glaoui, the Pasha of Marrakech, who were able to read and write French after eight lessons of one hour each.

State's Spuds Are in Demand

More than 300 Michigan potato growers have asked for certification of approximately 1,700 acres of potatoes in the seed certification and inspection service offered through the co-operation of the Michigan Crop Improvement Association and Michigan State College, according to H. C. Rather, secretary of the association.

The inspection service this year will be more nearly state-wide than ever before. Applications have been received from 58 counties, representing all sections of the State, although nearly one-half of the applications are from Antrim, Otsego, Emmet, Montcalm and Oceana counties.

The value of the inspection service as directed by Michigan State College has been proved in increased yields and higher quality. In 1920, when this work started, the average yield from all certified fields was 138.5 bushels an acre. This was only 33.5 bushels higher than the average of all fields in the State for 1920. The yield has been increased steadily since 1920. In 1926 the average yield from certified fields was 256 bushels an acre, and 138 bushels above the State average for all fields. The 1926 yield in certified fields was 117.5 bushels an acre greater than the 1920 yield from certified fields.

"The quality aof potatoes also has been improved," says H. C. Moore, potato specialist of the farm crops department at Michgian State College.

"The consistent high quality of Michigan certified seed has enablled seed growers to command a higher price for their potatoes than is obtained by growers in many certified seed potato producing states. During the past seven-year period Michigan certified potato seed has brought an average premium of approximately 75 cents a bushel above the market price of U. S. No. 1 grade table stock. The total fees paid by Michigan growers for inspection and certification service has averaged two and three-quarters cents for each bushel certified.

If the oven is very hot, put a piece of waxed paper under the casserole cover. This will prevent the contents of the casserole baking too quickly.

GIRDLING TREES TO SPEED FRUIT USED MORE THAN CENTURY

Girdling fruit trees to induce crop production, as practiced at the Graham horticultural experiment station, near Grand Rapids, is not a new practice. Pomologists admit "ringing" trees has been advocated for more than a century, but it has never been widely adopted by orchardists.

Experiments at the Graham station are intended to determine the practicability of girdling young Northern Spy trees, and should it be found worth while the pomologists hope to encourage the practice among Michigan orchardists.

Young Northern Spy trees normally do not come into bearing until 12 to 15 years of age. This is the most objectionable feature to Michigan's leading apple variety. Growers prefer to plant other varieties, which come into production at 5 to 7 years.

The experiment station has found that girdling induces earlier fruitfulness. Narrow rings cut in the bark restrict the natural downflow of the sap in the trees, causing a congestion of plant food in the branches. Fruit spur formation is stimulated and a crop of apples results the following season.

Station workers this year have dressed the wounds with grafting wax, and all operations have been successful.

FRANKFORT WOMEN ARE BUILDERS OF TOURIST CAMP

When the women of Frankfort want something done they follow Captain John Smith's advice and "go do it themselves." Remembering that stalwart pioneer, they set about providing benches, camp stoves and other facilities in Frontenac field, used by tourists as a camp ground.

Soliciting donations of brick, planks, nails, cement and iron, they constructed several wooden benches without a thumb-nail casualty. Then they mixed cement and gravel, borrowed a couple of trowels and proceeded to build three outdoor stoves. A pot-luck dinner in a neighboring hall interrupted work at noon, but 5 o'clock found the stoves and an outdoor broiler complete and bushels of tin cans and rubbish removed.

Many a husband ate his supper from a tin can that night, but all Frankfort is proud of its tourist park, and the Civic Improvement Club, to which the women belong, is looking about for new things to "improve."

PORT HURON SCOUTS CLAIM STATE RECORD

The Port Huron council of the Boy Scouts of America lays claim to a new state record for a relay obstacle race in a regulation meet, Leonard W. Taub, Port Huron executive, announced. In a city-wide meet, Troop 2, of which H. P. Millard is scoutmaster, set a mark of one minute and 50 seconds for the event, eight scouts participating.

ST. MARY'S RIVER DRAFT PUT AT 19 FEET, 3 INCHES

A recommended draft of 19 feet, three inches for St. Mary's River for Lake Superior loading was posted by the Lake Carriers' Association. With this draft vessels will check to bare steerageway when passing over rock bottoms. The recommended draft for Lake St. Clair covering cargoes between Lake Erie and Lake Michigan remains unchanged at 19 feet, six inches.

Paid For Birth 45 Years Ago

An Imlay City man has just paid the doctor who brought him into the world for performing that service 45 years ago.

Recently Dr. George W. Jones, an Imlay City physician, was talking with the brother of the 45-year-old man. The conversation drifted to a discussion of the difficulty the average physician has in collecting many of his bills.

"Do you know," Dr. Jones asked, "that I never received the $10 due me for bringing your brother into the world?"

A few days later, Dr. Jones received a letter and a check for $10 from the brother of the man to whom he had been talking. The letter read:

"My dear Mr. Jones: I inclose herewith my check for $10. I deeply regret that this charge for your professional services has remained unpaid for so many years, but I am very thankful that I learned recently of it and am able to make payment.

"It is now 45 years since you brought me into the world. And, aside from the fact that I regret exceedingly the account not having been paid before, it is a pleasure for me to make payment for your professional services at the time of my birth."

Dr. Jones withholds the name of the man.

MICHIGAN BEAVER DECLARED FINEST IN WORLD FOR FUR

Vernon Bailey, of the national biological survey, who addressed the annual meeting of the Upper Peninsula Development bureau in Iron Mountain recently, said that the finest beaver in the world is grown in the upper peninsula.

"This first came to my attention when investigating beavers in the Tahquamenon river district," Bailey said. "I was familiar with the best pelts that Canada and other sections of the United States produce, and I found that nowhere else does the beaver grow fur so lustrous and so richly dark in color as here.

"The scientific name for North American beaver is Castor canadensis. The upper peninsula beavers showed such striking characteristics as a subspecies that I named them Castor canadensis michiganensis, and this name has been accepted by zoologists and biologists generally."

Bailey estimated that one beaver can thrive comfortably to each acre of swamp land where poplar wood is at hand. Contrary to general opinion, Bailey has demonstrated that beavers will eat poplar bark brought to them at some distance from their streams.

This would indicate that beaver colonies can be kept going at small cost where they have exhausted their local supply of food, until new poplar, which is a fast growing wood, can be made available.

Old Folks Say Doctor Caldwell was Right

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice, known to druggists and the public since 1892, as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Then, the treatment of constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions that result from constipation was entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a combination of senna and other mild laxative herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you, and the better for the general health of all. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will last a family several months, and all can use it. It is good for the baby because pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. In the proper dose, given in the directions, it is equally effective at all ages. Elderly people will find it especially ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

Let's All Pull Together for a Greater Michigan and Greater Nation

The Sign of The Four

By A. CONAN DOYLE

"It was rather a queer position that we found ourselves in then. There we were all four tied by the leg, and with precious little chance of ever getting out again, while we each held a secret which might have put each of us in a palace if we could only have made use of it. It was enough to make a man eat his heart out to have to stand the kick and cuff of every petty jack-in-office, to have rice to eat and water to drink, when that gorgeous fortune was ready for him outside, just waiting to be picked up. It might have driven me mad; but I was always a pretty stubborn one, so I just held on and bided my time.

"At last it seemed to me to have come. I was changed from Agra to Madras, and from there to Blair Island, in the Andamans. There are very few white convicts at this settlement, and, as I had behaved well from the first, I soon found myself a privileged person. I was given a hut in Hope Town, which is a small place on the slopes of Mount Harriet, and I was left pretty much to myself. It is a dreary, fever-stricken place, and all beyond our little clearings was infested with wild cannibal natives, who were ready enough to blow a poisoned dart at us if they saw a chance. There were digging, and ditching, and yam-planting, and a dozen other things to be done, so we were busy enough all day; though in the evening we had a little time to ourselves. Among other things, I learned to dispense drugs for the surgeon, and picked up a smattering of his knowledge. All the time I was on the lookout for a chance of escape; but it is hundreds of miles from any other land, and there is little or no wind in those seas; so it was a terribly difficult job to get away.

"The surgeon, Doctor Somerton, was a fast, sporting young chap, and the other young officers would meet in his rooms of an evening and play cards. The surgery, where I used to make up my drugs, was next to his sitting-room, with a small window between us. Often, if I felt lonesome, I used to turn out the lamp in the surgery and then, standing there, I could hear their talk and watch their play. I am fond of a hand at cards myself, and it was almost as good as having one to watch the others. There were Major Sholto, Captain Morstan, and Lieutenant Bromley Brown, who were in command of the native troops, and there were the surgeon himself, and two or three prison officials, crafty old hands, who played a nice, sly, safe game. A very snug little party they used to make.

"Well, here was one thing which very soon struck me, and that was that the soldiers used always to lose and the civilians to win. Mind, I don't say that there was anything unfair, but so it was. These prison chaps had done little else than play cards ever since they had been at the Andamans, and they knew each other's game to a point, while the others just played to pass the time and threw their cards down anyhow. Night after night the soldiers got up poorer men, and the poorer they got the more keen they were to play. Major Sholto was the hardest hit. He used to pay in notes and gold at first, but soon it came to notes of hand, and for big sums. He sometimes would win for a few deals, just to give him heart, and then the luck would set in against him worse than ever. All day he would wander about as black as thunder, and he took to drinking a deal more than was good for him.

"One night he lost even more heavily than usual. I was sitting in my hut when he and Captain Morstan came stumbling along on the way to their quarters. They were bosom friends, those two, and never far apart. The major was raving about his losses.

"'It's all up, Morstan," he was saying, as they passed my hut. 'I shall have to send in my papers. I am a ruined man.'

"'Nonsense, old chap!' said the other, slapping him upon the shoulder. 'I've had a nasty facer myself, but—' That was all I could hear, but it was enough to set me thinking.

"A couple of days later Major Sholto was strolling on the beach; so I took the chance of speaking to him.

"'I wish to have your advice, major,' said I.

"'Well, Small, what is it?' he said, taking his cheroot from his lips.

"'I wanted to ask you, sir,' said I, 'who is the proper person to whom hidden treasure should be handed over. I know where half a million worth lies, and, as I cannot use it myself, I thought perhaps the best thing that I could do would be to hand it over to the proper authorities, and then, perhaps, they would get my sentence shortened for me.'

"'Half a million, Small?' he gasped, looking hard at me to see if I was in earnest.

"'Quite that, sir—in jewels and pearls. It lies there ready for anyone. And the queer thing about it is that the real owner is outlawed and cannot hold property, so that it belongs to the first comer.'

"'To government, Small,' he stammered; 'to government.' But he said it in a halting fashion, and I knew in my heart that I had got him.

"'You think, then, sir, that I should give the information to the governor-general?' said I, quietly.

"'Well, well, you must not do anything rash, or that you might repent. Let me hear all about it, Small. Give me the facts.'

"I told him the whole story, with small changes, so that he could not identify the place. When I had finished he stood stock-still and full of thought. I could see by the twitch of his lip that there was a struggle going on within him.

"'This is a very important matter, Small,' he said at last. 'You must not say a word to anyone about it, and I shall see you again soon.'

"Two nights later he and his friend, Captain Morstan, came to my hut in the dead of the night with a lantern.

"'I want you just to let Captain Morstan hear that story from your own lips, Small,' said he.

"I repeated it as I had told it before.

"'It rings true, eh?' said he. 'It's good enough to act upon?'

"Captain Morstan nodded.

"'Look here, Small,' said the major. 'We have been talking it over, my friend here and I, and we have come to the conclusion that this secret of yours is hardly a government matter after all, but is a private concern of your own, which, of course, you have the power of disposing of as you think best. Now, the question is, what price would you ask for it? We might be inclined to take it up, and at least look into it, if we could agree as to terms.' He tried to speak in a cool, careless way, but his eyes were shining with excitement and greed.

"'Why, as to that, gentlemen,' I answered, trying also to be cool, but feeling as excited as he did, 'there is only one bargain which a man in my position can make. I shall want you to help me to my freedom, and to help my three companions to theirs. We shall then take you into partnership, and give you a fifth share to divide between you.'

"'Hum!' said he. 'A fifth share! That is not very tempting.'

"'It would come to fifty thousand apiece,' said I.

"'But how can we gain your freedom? You know very well that you ask an impossibility.'

"'Nothing of the sort,' I answered. "I have thought it all out to the last detail. The only bar to our escape is that we can get no boat fit for the voyage, and no provisions to last us for so long a time. There are plenty of little yachts and yawls at Calcutta or Madras which would serve our turn well. Do you bring one over. We shall engage to get aboard her by night, and if you will drop us on any part of the Indian coast you will have done your part of the bargain.'

"'If there was only one,' he said.

"'None or all,' I answered. 'We have sworn it. The four of us must always act together.'

"'You see, Morstan,' said he, 'Small is a man of his word. He does not flinch from his friends. I think we may very well trust him.'

"'It's a dirty business,' the other answered. 'Yet, as you say, the money would save our commissions handsomely.'

"'Well, Small,' said the major, 'we must, I suppose, try and meet you. We must first, of course, test the truth of your story. Tell me where the box is hidden, and I shall get leave of absence and go back to India in the monthly relief boat to inquire into the affair.'

"'Not so fast,' said I, growing colder as he got hot. 'I must have the consent of my three comrades. I tell you that it is four or none with us.'

"'Nonsense!' he broke in. 'What have three black fellows to do with our agreement?'

"'Black or blue,' said I, 'they are in with me, and we all go together.'

"Well, the matter ended by a second meeting, at which Mohammed Singh, Abdullah Khan, and Dost Akbar were all present. We talked the matter over again, and at last we came to an arrangement. We were to provide both the officers with charts of the part of the Agra fort and mark the place in the wall where the treasure was hidden. Major Sholto was to go to India to test our story. If he found the box he was to leave it there, to send out a small yacht provisioned for a voyage, mhich was to lie off Rutland Island, and to which we were to make our way, and finally to return to his duties. Captain Morstan was then to apply for leave of absence, to meet us at Agra, and there we were to have a final division of the treasure, he taking the major's share as well as his own. All this was sealed by the most solemn oaths that the mind could think or the lips utter. I sat up all night with paper and ink, and by the morning I had the two charts all ready, signed with the sign of the four—that is, of Abdullah, Akbar, Mohammed, and myself.

"Well, gentlemen, I weary you with my long story, and I know that my friend Mr. Jones is impatient to get me safely stowed in chokey. I'll make it as short as I can. The villain Sholto went off to India, but he never came back again. Captain Morstan showed me his name among a list of passengers in one of the mail boats very shortly afterwards. His uncle had died, leaving him a fortune, and he had left the army, yet, he could stoop to treat five men as he had treated us. Morstan went over to Agra shortly afterwards, and found, as we expected, that the treasure was indeed gone. The scoundrel had stolen it all, without carrying out one of the conditions on which we had sold him the secret. From that day I lived only for vengeance. I thought of it by day and I nursed it by night. It became an overpowering, absorbing passion with me. I cared nothing for the law—nothing for the gallows. To escape, to track down Sholto, to have my hand upon his throat—that was my one thought. Even the Agra treasure had come to be a smaller thing in my mind than the slaying of Sholto.

"Well, I have set my mind on many things in this life, and never one which I did not carry out. But it was weary years before my time came. I have told you that I had picked up something of medicine. One day, when Doctor Somerton was down with a fever, a little Andaman Islander was picked up by a convict gang in the woods. He was sick to death, and had gone to a lonely place to die. I took him in hand, though he was as venomous as a young snake, and after a couple of months I got him all right and able to walk. He took a kind of fancy to me then, and would hardly go back to his woods, but was always hanging about my hut. I learned a little of his lingo from him, and this made him all the fonder of me.

"Tonga—for that was his name—was a fine boatman, and owned a big, roomy canoe of his own. When I found that he was devoted to me and would do anything to serve me, I saw my chance of escape. I talked it over with him. He was to bring his boat round on a certain night to an old wharf which was never guarded, and there he was to pick me up. I gave him directions to have several gourds of water and a lot of yams, cocoanuts, and sweet potatoes.

"He was stanch and true, was little Tonga. No man ever had a more faithful mate. At the night named he had his boat at the wharf. As it chanced, however, there was one of the convict-guard down there—a vile Pathan, who had never missed a chance of insulting and injuring me. I had always vowed vengeance, and now I had my chance. It was as if fate had placed him in my way that I might pay my debt before I left the island. He stood on the bank with his back to me, and his carbine on his shoulder. I looked about for a stone to beat out his brains with, but none could I see. Then a queer thought came into my head and showed me where I could lay my hand on a weapon. I sat down in the darkness and unstrapped my wooden leg. With three long hops I was on him. He put his carbine to his shoulder, but I struck him full and knocked the whole front of his skull in. You can see the split in the wood now where I hit him. We both went down together, for I could not keep my balance, but when I got up I found him still lying quiet enough. I made for the boat, and in an hour we were well out at sea. Tonga had brought all his earthly possessions with him, his arms and his gods. Among other things, he had a long bamboo spear, and some Andaman cocoanut matting, with which I made a sort of a sail. For ten days we were beating about, trusting to luck, and on the eleventh we were picked up by a trader which was going from Singapore to Jiddah with a cargo of Malay pilgrims. They were a rum crowd, and Tonga and I soon managed to settle down among them. They had one very good quality; they let you alone and asked no questions.

"Well, if I were to tell you all the adventures that my little chum and I went through you would not thank me, for I would have you here until the sun was shining. Here and there we drifted about the world, something always turning up to keep us from London. All the time, however, I never lost sight of my purpose. I would dream of Sholto at night. A hundred times I have killed him in my sleep. At last, however, some three or four years ago, we found ourselves in England. I had no great difficulty in finding where Sholto lived, and I set to work to discover whether he had realived on the treasure or if he still had it. I made friends with someone who could help me—I name no names, for I don't want to get anyone else in a hole—and I soon found that he still had the jewels. Then I tried to get at him in many ways; but he was pretty sly, and had always two prize-fighters, besides his sons and his khitmutgar, on guard over him.

"One day, however, I got word that he was dying. I hurried at once to the garden, mad that he should slip out of my clutches like that, and looking through the window, I saw him lying in his bed, with his sons on each side of him. I'd have come through and taken my chance with the three of them, only, even as I looked at him, his jaw dropped, and I knew that he was gone. I got into his room that same night, though, and I searched his papers to see if there was any record of where he had hidden our jewels. There was not a line, however, so I came away, bitter and savage as a man could be. Before I left, I bethought me that if I ever met my Sikh friends again it would be a satisfaction to know that I had left some mark of our hatred, so I scrawled down the sign of the four of us, as it had been on the chart, and I pinned it on his bosom. It was too much that he should be taken to the grave without some token from the men whom he had robbed and befooled.

"We earned a living at this time by my exhibiting poor Tonga at fairs and other such places as the black cannibal. He would eat raw meat and dance his war-dance; so we always had a hatful of pennies after a day's work. I still heard all the news from Pondicherry Lodge, and for some years there was no news to hear, except that they were hunting for the treasure. At last, however, came what we had waited for so long. The treasure had been found. It was up at the top of the house, in Mr. Bartholomew Sholto's chemical laboratory. I came home at once and had a look at the place, but I could not see how, with my wooden leg, I was to make my way up to it. I learned, however, about a trap-door in the roof, and also about Mr. Sholto's supper-hour. It seemed to me that I could manage the thing easily through Tonga. I brought him out with me with a long rope wound round his waist. He could climb like a cat, and he soon made his way through the roof, but, as ill-luck would have it, Bartholomew Sholto was still in the room, to his cost. Tonga thought he had done something very clever in killing him, for when I came up by the rope I found him strutting about as proud as a peacock. Very much surprised was he when I made at him with the rope's end and cursed him for a little bloodthirsty imp. I took the treasure-box and let it down, and then slid down myself, having first left the sign of the four upon the table, to show that the jewels had come back at last to those who had most right to them. Tonga then pulled up the rope, closed the window, and made off the way that he had come.

"I don't know that I have anything else to tell you. I had heard a waterman speak of the speed of Smith's launch, the Aurora, so I thought she would be a handy craft for our escape. I engaged with old Smith, and was to give him a big sum if he got us safe to our ship. He knew, no doubt, that there was some screw loose, but he was not in our secrets. All this is the truth, and if I tell it to you, gentlemen, it is not to amuse you—for you have not done a very good turn—but it is because I believe the best defense I can make is just to hold back nothing, but let all the world know how badly I have myself been served by Major Sholto, and how innocent I am of the death of his son."

"A very remarkable account," said Sherlock Holmes. "A fitting wind-up to an eytremely interesting case. There is nothing at all new to me in the latter part of your narrative, except that you brought your own rope. That I did not know. By the way, I had hoped that Tonga had lost all his darts; yet he managed to shoot one at us in the boat."

"He had lost them all, sir, except the one which was in his blow-pipe at the time."

"Ah, of course," said Holmes. "I had not thought of that."

"Is there any other point which you would like to ask about?" asked the convict, affably.

"I think not, thank you," my companion answered.

"Well, Holmes," said Athelney Jones, "you are a man to be humored, and we all know that you are a connoisseur of crime, but duty is duty, and I have gone rather far in doing what you and your friend asked me. I shall feel more at ease when we have our story-teller here safe under lock and key. The cab still waits, and there are two inspectors downstairs. I am much obliged to you both for your assistance. Of course, you will be wanted at the trial. Good-night to you."

"Good-night, gentlemen both," said Jonathan Small.

"You first, Small," remarked the wary Jones as they left the room. "I'll take particular care that you don't club me with your wooden leg, whatever you may have done to the gentleman at the Andaman Isles."

"Well, and there is the end of our little drama," I remarked, after we had sat some time smoking in silence. "I fear that it may be the last investigation in which I shall have the chance of studying your methods. Miss Morstan has done me the honor to accept me as a husband in prospective."

He gave a most dismal groan. "I feared as much," said he; "I really cannot congratulate you."

I was a little hurt. "Have you any reason to be dissatisfied with my choice?" I asked.

"Not at all. I think she is one of the most charming young ladies I ever met, and might have been most useful in such work as we have been doing. She has a decided genius that way; witness the way in which she preserved that Agra plan from all the other papers of her father. But love is an emotional thing, and whatever is emotional is opposed to that true cold reason which I place above all things. I should never marry myself, lest I bias my judgment."

"I trust," said I, laughing, "that my judgment may survive the ordeal. But you look weary."

"Yes, the reaction is already upon me. I shall be as limp as a rag for a week."

"Strange," said I, "how terms of what in another man I should call laziness alternate with fits of splendid energy and vigor."

"Yes," he answered, "there are in me the makings of a very fine loafer, and also of a pretty spry sort of fellow. I often think of those lines of old Goethe—

"'Schade dass die Natur nur einen
Mensch aus dir schuff,
Denn zum wurdigen Mann war und
zum Schelmen der Stoff.'

By the way, apropos of this Norwood business, you see that they had, as I surmised, a confederate in the house who could be none other than Lal Rao, the butler; so Jones actually has the undivided honor of having caught one fish in his great haul."

"The division seems rather unfair," I remarked. "You have done all the work in this business. I get a wife out of it, Jones gets the credit, pray, what remains for you?"

"For me," said Sherlock Holmes, "there still remains the cocaine bottle." And he stretched his long white hand up for it.

RARE CLOCKS ARE HOBBY

Mechanical pets!

In many of the finest homes of Detroit stand venerable clocks that are regarded with an entirely different sort of feeling than people ordinarily entertain for mere things.

Many of these clocks are cherished with the sort of affection that is otherwise reserved for a faithful dog or even a human friend. It's what the clock is, as well as what it does that sets it apart.

Taking examples at random, Orla B. Taylor, lawyer, has an old clock that he imported from Yorkshire, England. According to Horace Greeley Schwarz, nationally known Detroit expert on clocks, Taylor first made the acquaintance of his clock when, as a boy, he accompanied his father on a trip to Europe. In the Taylor ancestral home was a clock that had been first acquired by a great-great-grandfather. It was a massive affair with three times the bulk of the ordinary grandfather clock.

Young Taylor had never seen anything as impressive as this towering piece of machinery. He begged his father to buy it and bring it back to Detroit. The request was unavailing, but when the boy reached maturity and made his first independent trip to Europe, he promptly realized the thwarted wish of his childhood. Today that old clock counts the hours in the Taylor home.

Other clocks owned in Detroit have different kinds of associations. Perhaps their distinction lies in the previous owners whom they recall. For example, in the Founders' Club, Book-Cadillac Hotel, a clock that chimes the passing hours once belonged to Sarah Bernhardt. It was bought for the club at a Paris auction of the great actress' effects.

Or a distinguished maker's name and craftsmanship will invest a timepiece with another sort of historic value. A clock that can be traced back to Eli Terry or Simon Willard—to mention only two American names—and still runs today, may also be venerated as a living survivor of the generations glorified by Washington and Jefferson.

"I once restored a clock for a Dr. Tower, who now lives in New Baltimore, that had a curious history," recalled Mr. Schwarz.

Dr. Tower was motoring across Michigan and stopped for a meal in a small town near Grand Rapids. He happened to see a curious clock in the window of a general store and went inside to ask if it was for sale. When assured that it was and that the price was $50, the doctor said he would take it. Having little spare cash with him at the time, he paid the dealer a $10 deposit and left instructions where the clock was to be shipped.

The story is that Henry Ford chanced to drive through the same town and saw the same clock. Told that the clock had already been reserved, Ford offered a large increase in price. However, the dealer stuck to his original bargain, even at a loss to himself.

The clock was most unusual. It had no face. The numerals were painted on the glass door of the case. The works could be watched while the hands told time.

"Obviously the clock was a rare antique," continued Mr. Schwarz, "but none of the journals, books or other records seemed to have a description of it. Finally, in a museum catalogue I found the picture of another clock just like it made by Eli Terry, the father of the shelf clock industry of this country. A notation said that this was the only known specimen left of this kind of Terry clock. Terry had made 8 or 10 others like it early in his career, around 1795, but the model had been discontinued.

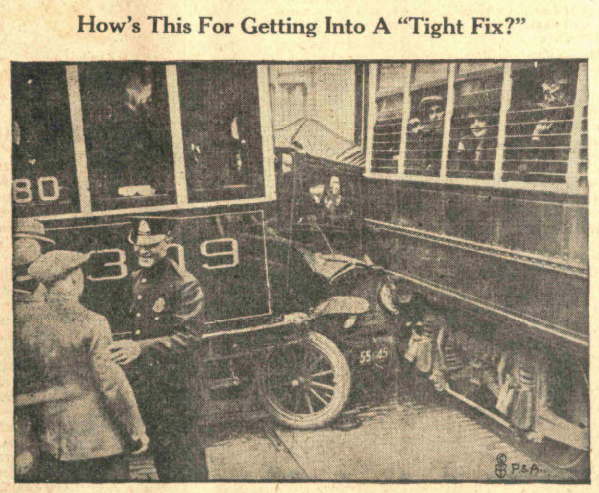
"How that rare clock found its way into a Michigan farmer's home is hard to imagine, but there it was until a storekeeper picked it up at a farm auction not so long ago."

Lee Anderson has a rare clock made by the great American master, Simon Willard. Willard turned out some 3,000 banjo clocks, but made very few of the sort brought to Detroit by Mr. Anderson. Mr. Schwarz rates Simon Willard's genius as a mechanic highly.

"For dexterity of hand and eye," said Mr. Schwarz, "no mechanic anywhere ever equaled Simon Willard. He filed and cut the teeth of his wheels without scoring them. When one considers that one thousandth of an inch variation in the escape wheel will make a serious difference in timekeeping, and that many of Simon Willard's clocks today do not vary 30 seconds a month, the feat seems incomprehensible."

Simon Willard made the clock that so many sightseers are shown in Statuary Hall of the Capitol at Washington. The works were made when Willard was 85 years old, and their performance is as perfect today as on the day of the "Clock Father's" final test.

How's This For Getting Into A "Tight Fix?"



They say flivvers can go through anything, but, judging by the above photo, it looks like somebody missed a guess! The Lizzie in this case should have known better than to try to "horn in" between a couple of affectionate street cars.

Anyway, just imagine having your car crushed almost to a pulp between a couple of husky trolleys like these—and getting out of it without injury! The driver of this road-skimmer did BUT—he's been celebrating Thanksgiving ever since!

Where did this happen? Montreal, Canada.

We have previously called attention to the story contest which is put on by the Detroit Union League Club for the saving of "Old Ironsides" or the good ship "Constitution" which is to be repaired as a relic, and will require considerable money and work to put it into shape to resist the ravages of time. Being built of wood she is very rotten and much new timber must be put in. The writer sending the best story on "Why Old Ironsides Should be Saved" will be rewarded by a prize of $100 in gold and a bronze medal. Other prizes are $75, $50, $25, and $10. Each story must contain over 5,000 words, to be written either with pen or typewriter on one side of the paper only. Name and address of the sender and author must be placed in the upper left hand corner of the first sheet, also the name of the High school to which he or she belongs and the grade. None but students of High Schools allowed to compete.

Calcium Cyanide is a highly poisonous powder used to eradicate the common Ground hog or "Digger". A long handled spoon is used to place a spoonfull of this within a burrow in a heap in one spot. This quickly forms hydrocyanic gas upon contact with the air and the result is dead diggers if they happen to be anywhere within a few feet of the poison gases. The manner of placing this poison is to dig into the runs and reach in a ways dumping the powder; then quickly close up the opening. Much care must be exercised in handling the cyanide as it is deadly poison to the human family and it must not be left open, and should not be placed in any buildings where livestock of any kind are housed. The old-fashioned use of mole traps has been found to be quite beneficial at times, but much care must be used in setting the traps and often they fail to hold the animal. The trap will be upset often but allowing the animal to escape.

Beauty Stripes

The women of Paraguay have marks on their faces like army stripes, to indicate rank. The pigment used consists of ashes mixed with blood, while the instrument is a sharp thorn. If a woman being tattooed cries out with pain she is told that she is a disgrace to her family and unworthy of a husband.

An Ancient Symbol of Hospitality

A PICTURESQUE old rectory in Rhode Island was recently being restored. Covered with vines, its colors mellowed by age, so the rectory had stood for over one hundred years. The north doorway on this old home was formerly the doorway of the French Admiral deTernay, and is one of the famous carved doorways of New England. When the dust of years was brushed from the ancient carvings and the central ornament disclosed, it proved to be a pineapple.

Only one other similar doorway is still in existence—that on the old State House on Washington Square. Commenting upon his architectural design a writer of "Parish Tidings" says.

"The pineapple in the midst is an ancient symbol of hospitality, and no symbol of hospitality must be allowed to decay over the doorway of a priest, whose doors must always be open to the sheep of the flock. May the old pineapple be a true symbol of a real welcome for many years to come!"

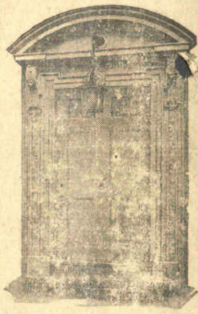
Today, the pineapple on the table symbolizes hospitality. Much of the beauty of old doorways has been lost, but the spirit of hospitality is still fostered, and the hostess who serves pineapple extends to the guest within the door, an ancient warmth of greeting.

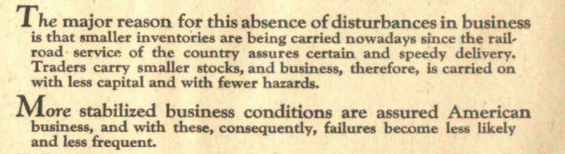
The newest aid to the hostess who serves pineapple are Hawaiian pineapple "tid-bits". They are made from the same sun-kissed Hawaiian pineapple as the sliced or crushed product, and they lend themselves to dishes in which smaller pieces of pineapple are preferable to larger pieces.

Here are some delightful ways of serving pineapple tid-bits:

Pineapple Waldorf Salad—Pare, quarter and core three apples and cut into tiny cubes. Add medium size can of Hawaiian pineapple tidbits, one-fourth cup walnuts broken in pieces and one-half cup celery cut in thin inch-long slices. Mix with thick mayonnaise dressing and serve on lettuce.

Baked Pineapple Tomatoes—Scoop out centers of six uniform-sized tomatoes. Chop six slices crisp bacon, tomato center, and one onion. Add medium size can of Hawaiian pineapple tid-bits, and enough bread crumbs to make the right consistency to stuff into the shells. Cover with more crumbs and grated cheese. Bake in a hot oven (500 degrees) for twenty minutes.





"We Serve Michigan"

What Better Railroad Service Has Meant to Business

Agricultural commodities have shown an upward tendency in prices during the current year, while the course of industrial and raw material prices has taken a downward trend. We have been going through a period of price re-adjustments—always a critical time for business—but, in this instance, there were not the usual accompanying shocks to business peculiar to such periods.

The major reason for this absence of disturbances in business is that smaller inventories are being carried nowadays since the railroad service of the country assures certain and speedy delivery. Traders carry smaller stocks, and business, therefore, is carried on with less capital and with fewer hazards.

More stabilized business conditions are assured American business, and with these, consequently, failures become less likely and less frequent.

What the workings of the Federal Reserve Act proves to be to business, through the stabilizing of credits, the improved steam railroad transportation service is accomplishing through its regular and its prompt deliveries. So the large outlays to better the service have justified themselves. Both expedients work to the same end in their respective spheres. They avert the shocks.

In Michigan, this is particularly true. Vast sums, in recent years, have been expended to achieve this new standard of service. Seven of the nine railroads serving Michigan alone are expending this year nearly $26,000,000 in new engines and cars and in improvements and betterments which will continue these stabilizing forces.

These expenditures, too, were made right at home, and at a time when the lull in industry, through which we have just passed, was at its low ebb. Therefore, these $26,000,000, going largely to labor, raw materials and manufactured commodities, served appreciably to buoy up conditions.

Michigan railroads have, therefore, been more than local common-carriers. They have, through their service, removed some of the hazards inherent in business in former years.

Obituary

Esther Collins Locklin, the youngest daughter of Sylvester and Betsy Collins was born in Wheatland township November 30, 1851 on the farm which has been her home the greater part of her life and departed at the age of 75 years, 7 months and 5 days. On December 5, 1871 she was united in marriage to Lovell H. Locklin who passed away May 20, 1913. To this union were born 3 children, Walter E. who passed away July 12, 1918, a daughter who died at the age of 2 months, and Mrs. Charles Bohn, with whom she has made her home for the past fourteen years, and who with 4 grand children, 2 sitsers Mrs. Ophelia Ingham of Detroit, Mrs. E. D. Buck of Hillsdale and a brother Eli Collins are left to mourn.

At an early age she united with the Methodist Episcopal church and has always been an active and faithful member, and a loyal ardent christian, encouraging and helpful toward all good work. Her hope in the future was very bright, founded on the christian faith which was a great comfort to her in times of sickness and suffering when she often expressed a desire to go Home and be at rest with her Savior and loved one s there.

She was one of the earliest members of the W. F. M. S. and also a member of the W. C. T. U. and continued faithful to both until the end and will be greatly missed in each and by a host of friends who have been cheered, comforted and encouraged by her loving kindnesses in words and deeds.

MARKHEIM

By

Robert Louis Stevenson

"Yes," said the dealer, "our windfalls are of various kinds. Some customers are ignorant, and then I touch a dividend on my superior knowledge. Some are dishonest," and here he held up the candle, so that the light fell strongly on his visitor, "and in that case I profit by my virtue."

Markheim had but just entered from the daylight streets, and his eyes had not yet grown familiar with the mingled shine and darkness in the shop. At these pointed words, and before the near presence of the flame, he blinked painfully and looked aside.

The dealer chuckled. "You come to me on Christmas Day," he resumed, "when you know that I am alone in my house, put up my shutters, and make a point of refusing business. Well, you will have to pay for that; you will have to pay for my loss of time, when I should be balancing my books; you will have to pay, besides, for a kind of manner that I remark in you today very strongly. I am the essence of discretion, and ask no awkward questions; but when a customer cannot look me in the eye, he has to pay for it." The dealer once more chuckled; and then, changing to his usual business voice, though still with a note of irony, "You can give, as usual, a clear account of how you came into the possession of the object?" he continued. "Still your uncle's cabinet? A remarkable collector, sir!"

And the little pale, round-shouldered dealer stood almost on tip-toe, looking over the top of his gold spectacles, and nodding his head with every mark of disbelief. Markheim returned his gaze with one of infinite pity and a touch of horror.

"This time," he said, "you are in error. I have not come to sell, but to buy. I have no curios to dispose of; my uncle's cabinet is bare to the wainscot; even were it still intact, I have done well on the Stock Exchange, and should more likely add to it than otherwise, and my errand today is simplicity itself. I seek a Christmas present for a lady," he continued, waxing more fluent as he struck into the speech he had prepared; "and certainly I owe you every excuse for thus disturbing you upon so small a matter. But the thing was neglected yesterday; I must produce my little compliment at dinner; and, as you very well know, a rich marriage is not a thing to be neglected."

There followed a pause, during which the dealer seemed to weigh this statement incredulously. The ticking of many clocks among the curious lumber of the shop, and the faint rushing of the cabs in a near thoroughfare, filled up the interval of silence.

"Well, sir," said the dealer, "be it so. You are an old customer after all; and if, as you say, you have the chance of a good marriage, far be it from me to be an obstacle. Here is a nice thing for a lady now, he went on, "this hand glass—fifteenth century, warranted; comes from a good collection, too; but I reserve the name, in the interests of my customer, who was just like yourself, my dear sir, the nephew and sole heir of a remarkable collector."

The dealer, while he thus ran on in his dry and biting voice, had stooped to take the object from its place; and, as he had done so, a shock had passed through Markheim, a start both of hand and foot, a sudden leap of many tumultuous passions to the face. It passed as swiftly as it came, and left no trace beyond a certain trembling of the hand that now received the glass.

"A glass," he said hoarsely, and then paused, and repeated it more clearly. "A glass? For a Christmas? Surely not?"

"And why not?" cried the dealer. "Why not a glass?"

Markheim was looking upon him with an indefinable expression. "You ask me why not?" he said. "Why look here—look in it—look at yourself! Do you like to see it? No! nor I—nor any man."

The little man had jumped back when Markhei mhad so suddenly confronted him with the mirror; but now, perceiving there was nothing worse on hand, he chuckled, "our future lady, sir, must be pretty hard favoured," said he.

"I ask you," said Markheim, "for a Christmas present, and you give me this—this damned reminder of years, and sins and follies—this hand-conscience! Did you mean it? Had you a thought in your mind? Tell me. It will be better for you if you do. Come, tell me about yourself. I hazard a guess now, that you are in secret a very charitable man?"

The dealer looked closely at his companion. It was very odd, Markheim did not appear to be laughing; there was something in his face like an eager sparkle of hope, but nothing of mirth.

"What are you driving at?" the dealer asked.

"Not charitable?" returned the other gloomily. "Not charitable; not pious; not scrupulous; unloving; unbeloved; a hand to get money, a safe to keep it. Is that all? Dear God, man, is that all?"

"I will tell you what it is," began the dealer, with some sharpness, and then broke off again into a chuckle. "But I see this is a love match of yours, and you have been drinking the lady's health."

"Ah!" cried Markheim, with a strange curiosity. "Ah, have you been in love? Tell me about that."

"I," cried the dealer. "I in love! I never had the time, nor have I the time today for all this nonsense. Will you take the glass?"

"Where is the hurry?" returned Markheim. "It is very pleasant to stand here talking; and life is so short and insecure that I would not hurry away from any pleasure—no, not even from so mild a one as this. We should rather cling, cling to what little we can get, like a man at a cliff's edge. Every second is a cliff, if you think upon it—a cliff a mile high—high enough, if we fall, to dash us out of every feature of humanity. Hence it is best to talk pleasantly. Let us talk of each other; why should we wear this mask? Let us be confidential. Who knows, we might become friends?"

"I have just one word to say to you," said the dealer. "Either make your purchase, or walk out of my shop!"

"True, true," said Markheim. "Enough fooling. To business. Show me something else."

"This, perhaps, may suit," observed the dealer: and then, as he began to re-arise, Markheim bounded from behind upon his victim. The long skewerlike dagger flashed and fell. The dealer struggled like a hen, striking his temple on the shelf, and then tumbled on the floor in a heap.

From these fear-stricken rovings, Markheim's eyes returned to the body of his victim, where it lay both humped and sprawling, incredibly small and strangely meaner than in life. In these poor, miserly clothes, in that ungainly attitude, the dealer lay like so much sawdust. Markheim had feared to see it, and, lo! it was nothing. And yet, as he gazed, this bundle of old clothes and pool of blood began to find eloquent voices. There it must lie; there was none to work the cunning hinges or direct the miracle of locomotion—there it must lie till it was found. Found! ay, and then? Then would this dead flesh lift up a cry that would ring over England, and fill the world with the echoes of pursuit, the dead or not this was still the enemy. "Time was that when the brains were out," he thought; and the first word struck into his mind. Time, now that the deed was accomplished—time, which had chosen for the victim, had become instant and momentous for the slayer.

The thought was yet in his mind, when, first one and then another, with every variety of pace and voice—one deep as the bell from a cathedral turret, another ringing on its treble notes the prelude of a waltz—the clocks began to strike the hour of three in the afternoon.

Terror of the people in the street sat down before his mind like a beseiging army. It was impossible, he thought, but that some rumour of the struggle must have reached their ears and set on edge their curiosity; and now, in all the neighbouring houses, he divined them sitting motionless and with uplifted ear—solitary people, condemned to spend Christmas dwelling alone on memories of the past, and now startlingly recalled from that tender exercise; happy family parties, struck into silence round the table, the mother still with raised finger; every degree and age and humour, but all, by their own hearths, praying and hearkening and weaving the rope that was to hang him. Sometimes it seemed to him he could not move too softly; the clink of the tall Bohemian goblets rang out loudly like a bell; and alarmed by the bigness of the ticking, he was tempted to stop the clocks. And then, again, with a swift transition of his terrors, the very silence of the place appeared a source of peril, and a thing to strike and freeze the passer-by; and he would step more boldly, and bustle aloud among the contents of the shop, and imitate, with elaborate bravado, the movements of a busy man at ease in his own house.

At times, with a strong effort, he would glance at the open door which still seemed to repel his eyes. The house was tall, the skylight small and dirty, the day blind with fog; and the light that filtered down to the ground story was exceedingly faint, and showed dimly on the threshold of the shop. And yet, in that strip of doubtful brightness, did there not hang wavering a shadow?

He glanced over his shoulder at the open door, where the shadow was still lingering and shivering; and with no conscious repugnance of the mind, yet with a tremor of the belly, he drew near the body of his victim. The human character had departed. Like a suit half-stuffed with bran, the limbs lay scattered, by trunk doubled, on the floor; and yet the thing repelled him. Although so dingy and inconsiderable to the eye, he feared it might have more significance to the touch. He took the body by the shoulders, and turned it on its back. It was strangely light and supple, and the limbs, as if they had been broken, fell into the oddest postures. The face was robbed of all expression; but it was as pale as wax, and shockingly smeared with blood about one temple.

With that, shaking himself clear of these considerations, he found the keys and advanced towards the open door of the shop. Outside, it had begun to rain smartly; and the sound of the shower upon the roof had banished silence. Like some dripping cavern, the chambers of the house were haunted by an incessant echoing, which filled the ear and mingled with the ticking of the clocks. And, as Markheim approached the door, he seemed to hear, in answer to his own cautious tread, the steps of another foot withdrawing up the stair. The shadow still palpitated loosely on the threshold. He threw a ton's weight of resolve upon his muscles, and drew back the door.

On that first story, the doors stood ajar, three of them like three ambushes, shaking his nerves like the throats of cannon. He could never again, he felt, be sufficiently immured and fortified from men's observing eyes; he longed to be home, girt in by walls, buried among bedclothes, and invisible to all but God.

When he had got safe into the drawing-room, and shut the door behind him, he was aware of a respite from alarms. The room was quite dismantled, uncarpeted besides, and strewn with packing cases and incongruous furniture; several great pier-glasses, in which he beheld himself at various angles, like an actor on a stage; many pictures, framed and unframed, standing, with their faces to the wall; a fine Sheraton sideboard, a cabinet of marquetry, and a great old bed, with tapestry hangings. The windows opened to the floor; but by great good fortune the lower part of the shutters had been closed, and this concealed him from the neighbors. Here, then, Markheim drew in a packing case before the cabinet, and began to search among the keys. It was a long business, for there were many; and it was irksome, besides; for, after all, there might be nothing in the cabinet, and time was on the wing. But the closeness of the occupation sobered him. With the tail of his eye he saw the door—even glanced at it from time to time directly, like a besieged commander pleased to verify the good estate of his defences. But in truth he was at peace. The rain falling on the street sounded natural and pleasant. Presently, on the other side, the notes of a piano were wakened to the music of a hymn, and the voices of many children took up the air and words. How stately, how comfortable was the melody! How fresh the youthful voices! Markheim gave ear to it smilingly, as he sorted out the keys; and his mind was thronged with answerable ideas and images; church-going children and the pealing of the high organ; children afield, bathers by the brook-side, ramblers on the brambly common, kite-flyers in the windy and cloud-navigated sky; and then, at another cadence of the hymn, back again to church, and the somnolence of summer Sundays, and the high genteel voice of the parson (which he smiled a little to recall) and the painted Jacobean tombs, and the dim lettering of the Ten Commandments in the chancel.

And as he sat thus, at once busy and absent, he was startled to his feet. A flash of ice, a flash of fire, a bursting gush of blood, went over him, and then he stood transfixed and thrilling. A step mounted the stair slowly and steadily, and presently a hand was laid upon the knob, and the lock clicked, and the door opened.

Fear held Markheim in a vice. What to expect he knew not, whether the dead man walking, or the official ministers of human justice, or some chance witness blindly stumbling in to consign him to the gallows. But when a face was thrust into the aperture, glanced round the room, looked at him, nodded and smiled as if in friendly recognition, and then withdrew again, and the door closed behind it, his fear broke loose from his control in a hoarse cry. At the sound of this the visitant returned.

"Did you call me?" he asked pleasantly, and with that he entered the room and closed the door behind him.

Markheim stood and gazed at him with all his eyes. Perhaps there was a film upon his sight, but the outlines of the new-comer seemed to change and waver like those of the idols in the wavering candlelight of the shop; and at times he thought he knew him; and at times he thought he bore a likeness to himself; and always, like a lump of living terror, there lay in his bosom the conviction that this thing was not of the earth and not of God.

And yet the creature had a strange air of the commonplace, as he stood looking on Markheim with a smile; and when he added: "You are looking for the money, I believe?" it was in the tones of every-day politeness.

Markheim made no answer.

"I should warn you," resumed the other, "that the maid has left her sweetheart earlier than usual and will soon be here. If Mr. Markheim be found in this house, I need not describe to him the consequences."

"You know me?" cried the murderer.

The visitor smiled. "You have long been a favorite of mine," he said; "and I have long observed and often sought to help you."

"What are you?" cried Markheim: "the devil?"

"What I may be," returned the other, "cannot affect the service I propose to render you."

"It can," cried Markheim; "it does! Be helped by you? No, never; not by you! You do not know me yet; thank God, you do not know me!

"I know you," replied the visitant, with a sort of kind severity or rather firmness. "I know you to the soul."

"Know me!" cried Markheim. "Who can do so? My life is but a travesty and slander on myself. I have lived to belie my nature. All men do; all men are better than this disguise that grows about and stifles them. You see each dragged away by life, like one whom bravos have siezed and muffled in a cloak. If they had their own control—if you could see their faces, they would be altogether different, they would shine out for heroes and saints! I am worse than most; myself is more overlaid; my excuse is known to me and God. But, had I the time, I could disclose myself."

"To me?" inquired the visitant.

"To you before all," returned the murderer. "I supposed you were intelligent. I thought—since you exist—you would prove a reader of the heart. And yet you would propose to judge me by my acts! Think of it; my acts! I was born and I have lived in a land of giants; giants have dragged me by the wrists since I was born out of my mother—the giants of circumstance. And you would judge me by my acts! But can you not look within? Can you not understand that evil is hateful to me? Can you not see within me the clear writing of conscience, never blurred by any wilful sophistry, although too often disregarded? Can you not read me for a thing that surely must be common as humanity—the unwilling sinner?"

"All this is very feelingly expressed," was the reply, "but it regards me not. These points of consistency are beyond my province, and I care not in the least by what compulsion you may have been dragged away, so as you are but carried in the right direction. But time flies; the servant delays, looking in the faces of the crowd and at the pictures on the hoardings, but still she keeps moving nearer; and remember, it is as if the gallows itself was striding towards you through the Christmas streets! Shall I help you; I, who know all? Shall I tell you where to find the money?"

"For what price?" asked Markheim.

"I offer you the service for a Christmas gift," returned the other.

Markheim could not refrain from smiling with a kind of bitter triumph. "No," said he, "I will take nothing at your hands; if I were dying of thirst, and it was your hand that put the pitcher to my lips, I should find the courage to refuse. It may be credulous, but I will do nothing to commit myself to evil."

"I have no objection to a deathbed repentance," observed the visitant.

"Because you disbelieve their efficacy!" Markheim cried.

"I do not say so," returned the other; "but I look on these things from a different side, and when the life is done my interest falls. The man has lived to serve me, to spread black looks under the colour of religion, or to sow tares in the wheatfield, as you do, in a course of weak compliance with desire. Now that he draws so near to his deliverance, he can add but one act of service—to repent, to die smiling, and thus to build up in confidence and hope the more timorous of my surviving followers. I am not so hard a master. Try me. Accept my help. Please yourself in life as you have done hitherto; please yourself more amply, spread your eblows at the board; and when the night begins to fall and the curtains to be drawn, I tell you, for your greater comfort, that you will find it even easy to compound your quarrel with your conscience, and make a truckling peace with God. I came but now from such a deathbed, and the room was full of sincere mourners, listening to the man's last words; and when I looked into that face, which had been set as a flint against mercy, I found it smiling with hope."

"And do you, then, suppose me such a creature?" asked Markheim. "Do you think I have no more generous aspirations than to sin, and sin, and sin, and, at the last sneak into Heaven? My heart rises at the thought. Is this, then, your experience of mankind? or is it because you find me with red hands that you presume such baseness? and is this crime of murder indeed so impious as to dry up the very springs of good?"

"Murder is to me no special category," replied the other. "All sins are murder, even as all life is war."

"I will lay my heart open to you," aswered Markheim. "This crime on which you find me is my last. On my way to it I have learned many lessons; itself is a lesson, a momentous lesson. Hitherto I have been driven with revolt to what I would not; I was a bond-slave to poverty, driven and scourged. There are robust virtues that can stand in these temptations; mine are not so: I had a thirst of pleasure. But today, and out of this deed, I pluck both warning and riches—both the power and a fresh resolve to be myself. I become in all things a free actor in the world; I begin to see myself all changed, these hands the agents of good, this heart at peace. Something comes over me out of the past; something of what I dreamed on Sabbath evenings to the sound of the church organ, of what I forecast when I shed tears over noble books, or talked, an innocent child, with my mother. There lies my life; I have wandered a few years, but now I see once more my city of destination."

"You are to use this money on the Stock Exchange, I think?" remarked the visitor; "and there, if I mistake not, you have already lost some thousands?"

"Ah," said Markheim, "but this time I have a sure thing."

"This time again, you will lose," replied the visitor quietly.

"Ah, but I keep back the day!" cried Markheim.

"That also you will lose," said the other.

The sweat started upon Markheim's brow. "Well, then, what matter?" he exclaimed. "Say it be lost, say I am plunged again in poverty, shall one part of me, and that the worse, continue until the end to override the better? Evil and good run strong in me, haling me both ways. I do not love the one thing. I love all. I can conceive great deeds, renunciations, martyrdoms; and though I be fallen to such a crime as murder, pity is no stranger to my thoughts. I pity the poor; who knows their trails better than myself? I pity and help them; I prize love, I love honest laughter; there is no good thing nor true thing on earth but I love it from my heart. And are my vices only to direct my life, and my virtues to lie without effect, like some passive lumber of the mind? Not so; good, also, is a spring of acts."

But the visitant raised his finger. "For six-and-thirty years that you have been in this world," said he, "through many changes of fortune and varieties of humour, I have watched you steadily fall. Fifteen years ago you would have started at a theft. Three years back you would have enched at the name of murder. Is there any crime, is there any cruelty or meanness, from which you still recoil?—five years from now I shall detect you in the fact! Downward, downward, lies your way; nor can anything but death avail to stop you."

"It is true," Markheim said huskily, "I have in some degree complied with evil. But it is so with all: the very saints, in the mere exercise of living, grow less dainty, and take on the tone of their surroundings."

"I will propound to you one simple question," said the other; "and as you answer, I shall read to you your moral horoscope. You have grown in many things more lax; possibly you do right to be so; and at any account, it is the same with all men. But granting that, are you in any one particular, however trifling, more difficult to please with your own conduct, or do you go in all things with a looser rein?"

"In any one?" repeated Markheim, with an anguish of consideration. "No," he added, with despair, "in none! I have gone down in all."

"Then," said the visitor, "content yourself with what you are, for you will never change; and the words of your part on this stage are irrevocably written down.

Markheim stood for a long while silent, and indeed it was the visitor who first broke the silence. "That being so," he said, "shall I show you the money?"

"And grace?" cried Markheim.

"Have you not tried it?" returned the other. "Two or three years ago did I not see you on the platform of revival meetings, and was not your voice the loudest in the hymn?"

"It is true," said Markheim; "and I see clearly what remains for me by way of duty. I thank you for these lessons from my soul; my eyes are opened, and I behold myself at last for what I am."

At this moment the sharp note of the door-bell rang through the house; and the visitant, as though this were some concerted signal for which he had been waiting, changed at once in his demeanour.

"The maid!" he cried. "She has returned, as I forewarned you, and there is now before you one more difficult passage. Her master, you must say, is ill; you must let her in, with an assured but rather serious countenance—no smiles, no overacting, and I promise you success! Once the girl within, and the door closed, the same dexterity that has already rid you of the dealer will relieve you of this last danger in your path. Thenceforward you have the whole evening—the whole night, if needful—to ransack the treasures of the house and to make good your safety. This is help that comes to you with the mask of danger. 'Up!' he cried; "up, friend; your life hangs trembling in the scales: up, and act!"

Markheim steadily regarded his counsellor. "If I be condemned to evil acts," he said, "there is still one door of freedom open—I can cease from action. If my life be an ill thing, I can lay it down. Though I be, as you say truly, at the beck of every small temptation, I can yet, by one decisive gesture, place myself beyond the reach of all. My love of god is damned to barrenness; it may, and let it be! But I have still my hatred of evil; and from that, to your galling disappointment, you shall see that I can draw both energy and courage."

The features of the visitor began to undergo a wonderful and lovely change: they brightened and softened with a tender triumph, and even as they brightened, faded and dislimned. But Markheim did not pause to watch or understand the transformation. He opened the door and went downstairs very slowly, thinking to himself. His past went soberly before him; he beheld it as it was, ugly and strenuous like a defeat. Life, as he thus reviewed it, tempted dream, random as chance-medley—a scene of him no longer; but on the farther side he perceived a quiet haven for his bark. He paused in the passage, and looked into the shop, where the candle still burned by the dead body. It was strangely silent. Thoughts of the dealer swarmed into his mind, as he stood gazing. And then the bell once more broke out into impatient clamour. He confronted the maid upon the threshold with something like a smile.

"You had better go for the police," said he: "I have killed your master."

(The End)

New Charter Brief to Point

On August 1 the new fourth-class city of East Grand Rapids will commence operation under the commission-merger form of government.

The community's charter, in preparation since last December by a body of nine men, three of whom are officials under the present village government, recently was adopted by a decisive vote.

The charter, which is among the shortest on record, divides the city into three wards. Each ward will elect two city commissioners for terms of two years each. The mayor, who is one of the commissioners, will be elected at large, and for a term of two years.

The city treasurer is to be elected annually, but the city attorney and the city clerk will be appointed by the commission. The city clerk also may be the comptroller. The commission will select the city manager, who shall be the administrative head of the city. A provision of the charter expressly prohibits the commissioners from giving orders to the manager except by formal action of the commission, thus preventing interference with the manager's affairs, although the commissioners always will have general direction of the manager.

NORTH MICHIGAN AND WISCONSIN UTILITIES MERGE

Consolidation of 15 Wisconsin and Northern Michigan public utilities in the Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co. all subsidiaries of the North American Co., is announced by S. B. Way, president of the company. The consolidated property represents $16,000,000 valuation.

A. K. Ellis, vice-president and general manager, will be in charge of the property that will furnish service to Appleton, Neenah, Menasha and 10 Wisconsin counties, Iron Mountain, Michigan, and extensive mining and manufacturing districts in the Upper Michigan Peninsula. Mr. Ellis' headquarters will be at Appleton and another office will be at Iron Mountain, Mich.

The Wisconsin Traction, Light & Power Co., Appleton, will join the consolidation, in which the former Peninsula Power Co., recently named the Wisconsin-Michigan Power Co. and 13 other similar companies will be merged.

Other Wisconsin companies included in the merger are: Wisconsin Northern Light, Heat & Power Co., Weyauwega Electric Light Co., Badger Utility Co., and Star Electric Co., all doing business north and west of Appleton; Aurora Electric Light & Power Co. and Niagara Light & Power Co., of Florence and Marinette Counties.

Michigan concerns are Iron Mountain Electric Light & Power Co., Dickinson County Public Service Co., Powers-Spalding Light Co., and Twin Falls Light Co. The Michigan concerns operate in Iron, Dickinson and Menominee Counties.

WOMAN AND MAN DISCOVER WAY TO DETECT WATER MILK

A woman and a man, chemists at the University of Wisconsin, have discovered a method of detecting whether water had been added to milk. Their contributions to human welfare was described at a session of the mid-Western regional meeting of the American Chemical Society at the University of Chicago. The discoverers are Miss Lila Miller and Prof. H. A. Shuette.

Since the Fifteenth Century public officials have sought a method of determining whether milk had been watered, it was brought out, and these chemists have learned that mercuric nitrate performs that service.

It precipitates the curd from the milk, leaving a colorless liquid from which readings for content can be made with greater accuracy than is possible with use of other chemicals, it was said.

MT. CLEMENS ACTS TO GET NEW WATER WORKS

The first step in the construction of a new water system for Mt. Clemens, probably to be located on the shore of Lake St. Clair, has been taken.

The question of bonding the city for the cost of the large pumping and filtering plant probably will be submitted to a vote some time in August, it was said. The cost has been estimated at nearly $750,000.

In the meantime the city is experiencing a water scarcity. The production of the present underground water system is sufficient for only half the needs of the city.

In times of peace the wise nation makes strenuous preparations for more peace.

5,000 COWS IN MACOMB SICK

Nearly 5,000 diseased cows have been marked for slaughter as a result of the canvass of Macomb County in the campaign for tuberculosis eradication, it is announced by H. W. Norton, Jr., of Lansing, director of the bureau of animal industry, State Department of Agriculture.

Although many of these cows have been supplying milk to dairies the danger to consumers has been minimized by the system of pasteurization maintained by the distributors, he explained. Pasteurization is not regarded by sanitation experts, however, as 100 per cent perfect in destroying disease germs and hence the elimination of the diseased cows means a greater degree of protection for consumers.

Preliminary figures from the canvass, now nearing completion, show that the percentage of infection will run about 19 per cent. This is by far the worst ever found in the herds of any Michigan county, the highest previously having been in Wayne, where the initial canvass several years ago resulted in the slaughter of 12 per cent of the cows.

Many of the herds of Macomb County, especially in the southern half, will be virtually wiped out.

PAVING IS PROMISED FOR IMLAY CITY-ALMONT ROAD

Word has been received from the state highway department confirming a report that paving of M-53 between Imlay City and Almont is actually to be completed. Eight miles of concrete was promised last year by a member of the administrative board, but during the closing months of 1926, word was received that the road probably would not be built in 1927. Now word comes that the survey will be made this summer, the contract for at least three miles of the distance let late in the autumn or early in the winter, so that work can be commenced as early in the spring as weather will permit.

This stretch of highway has become one of the main arteries out of Detroit for tourists and Sunday visitors, being the only concrete road running straight north out of that city.

The fact that this road is "The Earle Memorial Superhighway" adds to its importance.

Church Thief Loots 1,000

An unusual account of how he made his living by robbing poor boxes and stealing sacred gold vessels in churches in nearly every state in the Union was told by Ray K. Marsden, alias Roy Dean, of Green Bay, Wis., and Flint, Mich.

Marsden is under arrest in Ohio charged with the theft of a shrine of the Church of Our Lady of Consolation. Four alleged accomplices have been arrested at Bromley, Ky.

Marsden declared that his operations had extended to every state except Delaware, where he feared the lash law, and that in all he had committed more than 1,000 church robberies. Some churches, he said, he looted as many as 10 times.

When making small buns or cakes, flour the tins well instead of greasing them. This plan is much less expensive, and the cakes never stick to the tin.

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

22 CITIES ARE CITED FOR POLLUTING RIVER

Twenty-two cities have been cited by the State Department of Health and the State Department of Conservation for contempt of stream pollution orders and a request sent to W. W. Potter, attorney-general, to advise those cities of their delinquency and start court action, if necessary.

The two departments already have started action against the city of Lansing.

The cities cited were: Three Rivers, Grand Ledge, Greenville, Midland, Manchester, Standish, South Haven, St. Ignace, Munising, Ironwood, St. Joseph, Newberry, Bessemer, Negaunee, Allegan, Charlotte, Plainwell, Monroe, Penwater, Marquette and Menominee.

SHIP "GOBBLES" GIANT WHALES

Mankind's revenge for the indignity suffered by Jonah docked at New York the other day with $1,000,000 worth of whale oil aboard.

It is a giant whaler that literally swallows whales through a drag tunnel in her bows. Three hundred and fifty sea monsters were hauled through the ship's metal gullet in three months on this voyage to Antarctic waters.

But, unlike Jonah, they will never emerge to tell their experience. At the moment they were in the form of 48,000 barrels of oil, and soon will grace bathrooms all over the nation as a popular brand of soap.

The C. A. Larsen, huge Norwegian whaling depot ship, has successfully carried big business methods to within 700 miles of the South Pole, and old-fashioned Leviathans of the district couldn't cope with progress. The Larsen has been to the Bay of Whales, in the Ross Sea, 2,000 miles south of New Zealand. The crew said the steamer plowed through 600 miles of ice on the outward trip, but encountered clear water during the laden home voyage.

In the Bay of Whales the Larsen's arrival was a disaster to the schools of great mammals comparable to the simultaneous advent of 100 old-fashioned whaling vessels.

The ship is the first to be equipped with a drag tunnel in her bow. It is a metal throat 16 feet in diameter and 20 feet long. Through it any whale weighing up to 150 tons can be dragged up to the stripping deck as efficiently as a kippered herring through a dumb waiter.

South of New Zealand the Larsen made rendezvous with her six 200-ton "killer boats," which put up there for the summer and fall. The fleet then made for the hunting grounds. These were traversed by Amundsen, Shackleton and Scott on their South Pole expeditions and Amundsen is credited with having carried the word back to Norway that the place was thick with whales.

The killer boats carry cannon which hurl 100-pound harpoons with deadly accuracy. On the harpoon is a soft-nosed time bomb, which explodes shortly after the whale has felt the thrust in his innards and started to leave the vicinity.

When harpooned, the whale either flukes up and heads for the bottom, or flees with great speed along the surface of the water. Often their speed attains 50 miles an hour. And in the old days when whaling was done by hand from small boats, it was not unusual for their companion boats to see one or more vanish in the distance on a joy-ride otherwise unattainable in those times.

Not even the legendary white whale, "Moby Dick" would have a chance now. When the whale starts a run, the motors of the killer boat are thrown in reverse. Even with the engines turning in reverse at eight knots the boats are sometimes dragged several miles before their catch becomes exhausted or dies from the bomb.

STATE IS CALLED IDEAL FOR RAISING CHINCHILLA RABBITS

Michigan is admirably adapted to chinchilla rabbit raising, says James S. Novy, manager of a company that has purchased a 100-acre tract of land one mile north of Howell, Michigan, the farm to be devoted to breeding this important fur bearer.

A recent issue of the Farmers Bulletin No. 1519, U. S. Department of Agriculture, shows that such skins as Arctic seals, Baltic leopard, electric beaver, mole and French sable are specially prepared and dyed rabbit skins. About the only rabbit skin used undyed is that of the chinchilla which is described as having a fine pelt, the fur being about an inch long, soft and silky in appearance, and in color resemblees the rare South American chinchilla, a combination of slate, pearl gray, blue and white. The long guard hairs are tipped with jet black and so arranged as to give an attractive, wavy appearance.

STYLES ROUT FEAR OF AGE

Who would have believed that a Scotch plaid design would ever be fashionable for evening dresses? Well, they are. The Tartans are being frequently worn but all the designs for evening are composed of squares in shades of the most popular pastel colorings. Taffetas are the weaves chosen for these designs. Frequently these taffeta frocks are trimmed with narrow laces which blend harmoniously with the pastel shades.

There are no elderly women today! The years add beauty and an enriched personality that can be acquired in no other way, rather than add age to a woman, and thus make her the more interesting.

True, there are certain subtle changes in coloring that is necessary for her to adopt changes in selecting her colors but, other than this, one is always the same type and does not change this type merely because the hair grows white.

The outstanding changes that come with the years are in the complexion and in the hair. The skin will have a tendency to darken and tan a bit and perhaps even become sallow. That is why a woman with white or gray hair is always flattered by the use of a bit of rouge, which will of course save her from looking sallow and enable her to wear colors that she otherwise could not wear.

Too many summer scarfs? Nevare! It just can't be done. But when one must purchase them at store prices it is out of the question to own many of these delightful adjuncts to the summer costume. When one can make them of lovely, fluffy materials, that is another matter.

Reports from the mid-season Paris showings do not indicate that the tailored suit is prominently featured. And the ensembles are receiving more general attention. Some strike a happy medium and feature coats that give the effect of suits.

Oxford and other shades of gray are being featured in jewelry for fall, based upon the exploitation of this color in the mid-season openings.

Marcasite, because of its caste, is admirably suited to carry out the gray ensemble. One Paris designer offers smoky gray pearls with rose colored stone fastenings.

Have you seen the new "puppy-dog" bags that match the fur of the coat? Yes, the bag looks exactly like a little stuffed toy dog.

AUTO POPULATION OF WORLD SHOWS BIG GAIN

A total of 27,650,267 passenger automobiles, trucks and buses were in operation throughout the world at the beginning of 1927, as compared with 24,473,629 at the beginning of 1926, an increase of 3,176,638, according to a world census of motor vehicles just made available by the Automotive Division of the Department of Commerce.

Automobiles, trucks and buses operated in the United States at the beginning of 1927 totaled 23,137,334, about 80 per cent of world registrations.

Believe it or not, but the positive truth is that the gentleman on the left is only 13 years old. On the right is his Daddy. They are Robert Herschel Taylor and his father, T. H. Taylor—both of Toccoa, Georgia.

Robert is 5 feet, 11½ inches tall and weighs a mere 226 pounds. He is in high school, where his excellent record shows that he is unusually mentally as well as physically.

Native Georgians claim Robert is additional evidence that their state "grows bigger people" than any other part of the world.

NEW MOTOR PLANT INVOLVING MILLIONS TO BE AT PONTIAC

Plans have been announced for immediate erection of a new plant for the Yellow Truck & Coach Manufacturing Co. at Pontiac, which will employ more than 5,000 men and ultimately house all of the various manufacturing branches and executive offices of this General Motors unit.

According to the announcement, the new plant will be built on the 156-acre tract purchased less than a year ago from Alfred Howland, adjacent to the south boundary of Pontiac and along the old Detroit, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway tracks. The purchase price of the ground is understood to have been $238,000.

In the new plant, which will have approximately one and one-quarter million square feet of floor space, the company will manufacture the complete line of one to 15-ton General Motors trucks, Yellow taxicabs, Yellow motor coaches, together with the engines, bodies and other necessary parts.

It is believed that the plans ultimately will bring to Pontiac all of the units now controlled or operated by the Yellow Truck & Coach Manufacturing company. While details of the expenditures to be entailed in the new plant were not divulged, it is believed that several millions will have been invested by January 1, 1928, the date on which the new plant is to be in complete operation.

Pretty Hard To Believe That These Three Are Brothers--But It's a Fact!

Pictured above is what you might term "the long and short of brotherhood." They're brothers three and though there's little differences in their ages, there's considerable in their height. The two little fellows are Frank (3 ft., 3 ins.), aged 49 years, and Charles (3 ft., 4 ins.), 47 years old. Towering over them is William Achtemeier (6 ft.), 43 years old.

FOREIGN BOATS IN RACES HERE

Two motorboat races of a truly international character are included on the programme for Detroit's eleventh Fall regatta on the Detroit River, September 3-6.

Several times the gold cup committee has attempted to stage events such as the Harmsworth trophy race without much success in the way of securing foreign entries that could run and make a race of it. The Maple Leaf VI and Excelsior-France were among the boats that were sent across, but proved failures and unequal to the task of stepping along with the American-built craft.

This year things promise to be different with the local committee carding two events that are standard on the other side—the 12 litre and 1½ litre classes. This was not done in a haphazard manner, but after careful investigation of a committee headed by Com. Charles Sorenson to ascertain just what foreign entries could be secured to race American crafts of these types. This resulted satisfactorily and entries are assured from Canada, England, Germany and France with a possibility that Ialy may send over one or two craft.

The 12-litre class is for 735 cubic inch engine boats and a speed of around 70 miles an hour is to be expected in the event which is to be run in three 30-mile heats for the Carl Fisher International trophy the opening day of the regatta, Saturday, September 3.

BLUE BILLS AND TEAL BREEDING AT MONROE

Bluebill and teal ducks have joined the ranks of breeding ducks in the marshes adjacent to Monroe. As a rule there two species are generally in their northern breeding range at this time of year, leaving the Monroe marshes to the mallards and black ducks. According to observers the cold weather is accountable for this unusual condition.

COACH GETS PAY ABOVE SALARY IN HIS CONTRACT

Coach C. Leo Redmond of the Muskegon High School is to receive $4,000 next year, the highest salary ever paid an athletic director in Muskegon.

Despite the fact that Redmond's three-year contract at $3,500 a year has two years to run, the Board of Education decided to increase his salary $500 for the next year.

PROGRESS LEAVES NEW WORK UPON OLD LUMBER CAMP

The traveler who ventures into northern Michigan's woodlands nowadays, expecting to find some of the scenes of the mythical age of Paul Bunyan, will be disappointed. Lumbering has changed. Camps are different and men of the old type who love the woods and the woodsmen's life for its own sake are few.

All that remains of the old days in the upper peninsula is the picturesque garb of the lumberjack—big checked mackinaw, heavy woolen stag pants and boots and his inevitable habit of drinking or gambling away his earnings in one big blow-out.

It takes a pioneer like Frank LaBrie, of Gladstone, Mich., who grew up in the lumber business and who is still in it as chief camp constructor for a big lumbering concern, to tell of it.

The camps of today and those of 25 years ago are as different as the old-timers and the men, who, brought to town by the spring break-up, may be seen any time now on the street corners or in front of their favorite hang-outs, according to the old lumberman.

The early camps were seldom more than two buildings made of rough hewn logs. One housed the men and the kitchen. It was a combination cook and bunk house. The other was for the horses.

In the center of this first building was an open stove, eight by ten feet, banked with timber supported sand. All the cooking was done here. Stews and the like were cooked in a big kettle. Bread, potatoes and such were cooked in hot ashes. The fare was ample but plain.

In those days the lumberjack seldom saw his camp in daylight, except on Sunday. He left for the woods before the sun was up. He carried his dinner with him, eating at 11 o'clock and worked through the day until after sunset. Sometimes he did not eat supper until 10 p. m.

FROG CATCHER IS FILLING HIS PURSE BY FOLLOWING MARSHES

Although Michigan is up against the problem of diminishing supplies of most of its wild life, bull frogs and the croaking green frogs of our swamps are holding their own. This, at least, is the opinion of Gus "Froggy" Wickham, who holds honors as Michigan's foremost frog fisher.

For more than 30 years "Froggy" Wickham has been supplying frog legs to the hotels and clubs of Grand Rapids and other cities. His catch sometimes runs as high as 450 dozen legs in a week. Selling the legs at 50 cents a dozen, it can be seen that "Froggy" makes rather a good thing out of his devotion to hunting the marshes. In the first two days of the present season, "Froggy," aided by his son Fred, and John Thide, made a catch of 60 dozen legs, which they delivered to the Peninsular Club in Grand Rapids. This catch was made in the marshes around Charlotte.

"Gus" and his crew use both spears and clubs in their attacks upon frogs. They travel all over the state, going from one swamp to another reaping the harvest of luscious legs for the road house, hotel and club trade.

Criticism, like charity, should begin at home.

2 QUIT STATE AS EDUCATORS

Dean Mortimer E. Cooley of the Engineering and Architectural Colleges and Prof. Jacob E. Reighard of the zoology department, University of Michigan, have tendered resignations following more than 40 years' service on the University faculty.

Dean Cooley, a prominent figure in state politics as well as on the engineering faculty, first became associated with the university in 1881, and has been head of the department since 1913. He was chief engineer of the United States Navy during the Spanish-American war, and served as educational director of the student army training corps, seventh district, during the World War. His resignation takes effect June 30, 1928.

Prof. Reighard became an instructor in the zoology department of the university in 1886, and was director of the university museum from 1895 to 1913. His various connections include scientific investigation for the Michigan fish commission from 1890 to 1895; director of biological survey of the Great Lakes for the United States fish commission from 1898 to 1901; and a member of the board of advisors of the Michigan State geological survey and trustee of the Marine Biological station. He was president of the American Fisheries Society in 1916.

ALL human beings should have a proportion of iron in their diets, and the pineapple is one of the few fruits which requires this element in order to come successfully to maturity. The soil of Hawaii is a rich volcanic dust, but pineapples grow better in it with the addition of fertilizer in order to give them a balanced ration.

It was found long ago, however, that, though the soil contains much iron, this iron was combined with manganese, and prevented the plants from getting enough. In order to provide them with iron in the form in which they needed it, an "iron ration" was invented, and now they get it in the form of a spray while they are growing, and they keep green under this treatment, and bear delicious fruit.

Boys and girls in their teens are in special need of iron in their diet, and most of them will welcome it when it comes in the form of pineapple, whether in the fruit salad, the pie or cake, or, what may be liked best of all, the fruit cup. Mothers may be interested in trying some of these recipes.

Pineapple Salad: Make individual jellies with lemon jelly powder and the juice from canned sliced pineapple which is substituted for the water. When the jellies are beginning to set, drop into them small sections of sliced pineapple and blanched almonds. Serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise. This is equally nice as a dessert, in which case the jellies should be surrounded with mounds of whipped cream and served with lady-fingers.

Pineapple Pie: Drain the juice from a can of sliced Hawaiian pineapple. Heat one and a half cups milk. Mix one-half cup sugar, one-eighth teaspoon salt, and two tablespoons cornstarch and slowly add hot milk. Cook in double boiler until the cornstarch is thoroughly cooked. Pour on two beaten egg yolks and let cook in double boiler about two minutes, stirring all the time. Cool and add one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple, well drained, and one-half teaspoon vanilla. Pour into a baked crust and cover with a meringue made of two stiffly-beaten egg whites and two tablespoons sugar. Brown in a moderate oven.

Pineapple Cake: Cream one-half cup shortening and one cup sugar together until light and add two well-beaten egg yolks. Mix and sift two cups flour, one-quarter teaspoon salt, and four teaspoons baking powder. Add alternately with three-quarters cup syrup drained from crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Fold in two stiffly beaten whites of egg. Bake in layer cake pans in a moderate oven. Put pineapple icing between the layers and on top. The icing is made by adding drained crushed pineapple to a boiled icing.

Pineapple Punch: Mix together the juice drained from canned pineapple, the juice of lemons, simple syrup, and ginger ale. Dilute with water to suit the taste.

$1,000 IN REWARDS for Poultry Thieves!
The Michigan Business Farmer

Let's Drive the Poultry Thieves out of Michigan

Stealing chickens, ducks and turkeys from the farms of this State has proven so profitable that we are fighting an organized gang of bandits who use motor trucks to rush their spoils to city markets. It has got to stop.

The Michigan Business Farmer has set aside ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00) to be paid in rewards to anyone, including state and county police officers, who secures the evidence and conviction of poultry thieves who steal chickens, ducks, turkeys or guinea fowl from its subscribers.

FIRST REWARD PAID

Frank Watkins, R. 3, Holly, Michigan, was paid the first reward under this offer. The thief he caught served 30 days in the Oakland county jail and paid $65 fine. Frank has $50 to show for ridding Michigan of one poultry thief.

Poison Liquor in Saloon Regime

This poisoning of liquor was so bad in Ohio that the legislature debated the subject at length and passed a law penalizing the bootlegging prisoner of that era with sentences up to five years. The debates brought out the fact that whiskey was being made on all sides with water and a concoction of Jimson weed, from which comes stramonium, known to pharmacy as a deadly poison. A pint would and did—kill two men. Two fishermen were found dead in their boat on the Ohio River after drinking a pint of this fire water and the saloon keeper who made the sale emptied all his kegs into the river in fear of prosecution.

Jimson-weed whisky was bad enough, sold legally over bars protected by the law—but even this product could be further diluted with water and the burning qualities provided by the addition of belladonna. A Boston newspaper told of the further addition of the chemical extract of deadly nightshade, a plant so poisonous that children are warned not even to touch it.

Two cents' worth of this extract and a gallon of water was bootlegged in Boston for a dollar and a half a gallon—not to the drinker but to the saloon-keeper who sold it as "pure" liquor at ten cents a glass!

No bartender on the busiest of all the rum fleets, the old time Mississippi steamers, could hold a job unless he could make "imported French brandy" over night. The secrets of the bartending business included the manafacture of every known drink from beer to champagne out of all the poisons in the pharmacopoeia. It cost a young man twelve dollars to learn these secrets, as the books containing various formulae went at that price and were carefully guarded.

State governments, aroused by the great number of deaths by poison after drinking, put analytical chemists on the job and in many cases published the truth. A particularly bad situation was turned up in Ohio after two years' work, but the liquor trade managed to stave off official publication of the facts although the newspapers gave the whole story. The official chemist in that state said that in two years not 10 percent of the whisky he sampled was pure, the rest of it all being diluted with or made entirely from, poisons. Much whiskey was made of sulphuric acid, nux vomica, caustic potash and red depper.

And that under the legalized saloon!

These state analysts brought to light the old trick of making "beer" with water and cocculus, of which five grains would kill a dog; and also any number of "oils" of deadly variety, to be mixed with water and sold as almost anything the customer wanted.

Wine was adulterated abroad, even before being shipped from its own country; the adulterants being alum, Brazil wood, sawdust, lead laurel juice, gypsum, cider, vinegar logwood, beetroot, potassa. In the Massachusetts campaign against adulterated liquors in the seventies the Boston Journal declared that 95 percent of all wines and liquors in the state were adulterated, some slightly, but most of them in a serious and dangerous manner. It was learned there that champagne was adulterated with water and sugar of lead to treble the retailers income; and that ammonia added in the right proportion to moonshine gave the villainous mixture the tang of aged liquors!

And that under the legalized saloon!

The court of common pleas at Cincinnati has in its archives the record of a lawsuit based on the refusal of a druggist to pay for two barrels of "Fine French Brandy" after a government inspector had stuck a steel rod into the stuff and in half an hour found the rod covered with a copper solution. The fine French Brandy was sulphuric acid, nitric acid, prussic acid, fusel oil, mixed up with watered moonshine.

And that under the legalized saloon!—The Union Signal

Report of The Sheriff's Office, Week Ending July 9th, 1927

Tom Power, of Hudson, was arrested for reckless driving on U. S. 112, in the village of Jonesville. When taken before Justice Swan of that place, he was fined $25 and costs. This is an unusually large fine for a first offense, but Power so far forgot himself as to refuse to return with the officer who arrested him. He now realizes his mistake. It's cheaper to obey orders, especially when you are told that you are under arrest.

Wayne Entrican, of Hillsdale was arrested on a Body Warrant Thursday afternoon and brought before the Circuit Judge on Friday He was remanded to jail, but on Saturday he made a satisfactory payment on his back alimony account and was released, to appear at the October term of Court for sentence on a Contempt of Court charge.

Henry Martin, the Indiana bootlegger who was arrested on U. S. 112 some time ago, plead guilty before Judge Chester on Friday and was sentenced to 6 months in Ionia and fined $100 and costs which were taxed at $50.

Gerald Sudborough, of Jonesville was arrested there Saturday night on a Body Warrant for the Lenawee County Sheriff and turned over to Deputies from that County.

Much favorable comment has been heard in regard to the recent Fourth of July celebration in Hillsdale. While there was present the largest crowd in the history of the Fair Grounds, estimated by some as 20,000 people, there was no trouble whatsoever. No drunks, no fights, and only one accident. A record hard to beat. A number of officers were on duty at the scene of the celebration, but their activities were limited to helping the inumerable motorists extricate their cars from the jam in the parking space. A good natured, tho' noisy crowd, which is it should be on the Fourth. And a good time was had by all.

A Peculiar Circumstance

Near Caledonia New York, by a lonely road side, is a solitary grave We don't know whether this grave is even marked except by a simple mound of earth, but beneath the surface lies a murdered soldier of the war of 1812 and he has lain there for over a century. People of Caledonia scarcely ever think or talk of this grave—its nothing of importance to them—they're commonplace folks and such trifles don't interest them at all.

One Sunday afternoon in October 1814, a large body of troops from Fort Niagara, near Buffalo, encamped to eat their midday rations on their way to Sackett's Harbor. They had been paid the day before, and were jovial and lively; but before night the body of a dead soldier was discovered in a clump of bushes, not far from the smouldering embers of the camp fire. There was a bullet hole thru' his head and an attempt to conceal his body indicated that he had been murdered.

Word was was promptly sent to the officer in command of the troops and by a roll call he discovered that two stragglers had been left behind when the troops resumed their march. One of them was the dead soldier, John Alexander from Connecticut The other was suspected of the murder, arrested tried and punished. John Alexander was buried by the side of the road where he was found, and there the matter dropped. But the following year a plant of a species unknown before in that region sprang up on the grave, and the next year two other stalks of the same plant appeared a few feet from the first one Little attention was paid to them at first, but gradually people noticed that the same unknown plant sprang up vigorously each year in the same spot and flourished and blossomed about the time of the wheat harvest.

Finally, a visiting botanist recognized it as false gromwell, a plant that is indigenous to the soil of Connecticut; and some one remembered that Connecticut was the soldier's home state. How came this Connecticut plant to grow on that lonely, neglected grave beside that New York road? people asked. Was there in the soldier's pocket a letter from loved ones at home containing the flower of the plant, which had ripened into seed and taken root?

The mystery has never been solved, but the flower still blossoms every year on the spot where the murdered soldier was buried more than a century ago.

Lake Steamer Captains Prefer Aerial Compass

The big twin lakers "Greater Detroit" and "Greater Buffalo" which are in the passenger service on Lake Erie running out of Detroit this summer are equipped with an improved form of compass which was primarily designed for the aeroplane. It may not interest you to know that accurate as the common mariner's compass is supposed to be, yet it sometimes fails in deep fogs or under startling electrical disturbances. The aerial compass is so valuable that a number of the liners have been equipped with it. No matter how dense the fog, or black the night this compass will inform the captain just what his longitude and latitude is. For instance if a boat is in the middle of Lake Erie and a fog shuts out everything the Captain wants to know where the channel lights are. By the way the Government has established two radio sending stations on Lake Erie, one is at the mouth of Detroit River in the lighthouse, the other is at Buffalo. When the Captain runs his vessel into a dense fog all he has to do is to slip on the head set and the apparatus does the rest.

In a short time 175 ships will be thus supplied. Thus it will be seen that danger of collisions and running aground are entirely done away with, and officers of incoming boats will rest much easier. Formerly in such cases the only relief known was to constantly sound the sonorous whistle, but even though it has a terrific voice, the sound is often completely muffled by the fog and vessels in comparatively close proximity, remained in ignorance of each other. On the ocean highways this same process would discover icebergs, floating derelicts etc., so that life on the deep is becoming one of safety.

HOW A FARMING COMMUNITY WAS REBUILT AGAIN

Glass factories and coal mines had kept the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker and the banker busy the year round in Point Marion, Pennsylvania. Hired men left the farms followed by the farm owners to get their share of the attractive wages.

Suddenly labor saving machinery was brought in to the old hand method window glass factories. The coal business took a drop and hundreds of people had to find new employment. Savings accounts dwindled. Deposits of the two banks dropped off almost 3 million dollars.

"Bring in more industries," was being sung at luncheon clubs all over the land, every town seemed to be advertising unlimited water supply, cheap fuel and free factory sites Competition was keen and the reward doubtful.

The question came, "Why not stimulate the agricultural pursuits of the community which have lain dormant so long." Farm income might be increased and production costs lowered in many instances.

The first move of one of the banks was the purchase of healthy chicks These were furnished by the bank at wholesale to interested farmers payment to be made by note payable in six months. The bank followed through by aiding in the dissemination of culling and feeding knowledge and by helping to market the cockerels which in most instances paid the initial cost of all the chicks.

"I hope that the time will come when men will endow beds in this institution," he said. "I understand that all who come here are treated alike, whether rich or poor. And I hope the time will come when those without means can come here for treatment without it costing them a dollar."

The medical profession of Battle Creek and of the entire state was well represented at the dedicatory ceremony, including a delegation from the medical faculty of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor.

TO PROBE NEEDS OF INDUSTRY

Big Employers Will Treat With Workers at Detroit Conference

Co-operative relationships in industry will be discussed by Catholic workers and employers at the fifth annual meeting of the Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems, to be held in Detroit July 1 and 2.

J. M. Larkin, assistant to the president in charge of industrial relations of the Bethlehem Steel Co., will describe his company's plan of industrial relationships. Charles F. Wills, of Chicago, a district representative of the Machinists' Union, will discuss "Union Management and Co-operation". The Rev. Fr. J. B. Culemans, of Moline, Ill., will speak on "The Social Effects of Machine Industry".

The Rev. Fr. William A. Cummings, director of Catholic charities in the Archdiocese of Chicago, will present the case of the family of the unskilled worker. The discussion will be led by employers, employees and students of Catholic social teaching.

A paper on "American Economic Radicalism" will be read by the Rev. Fr. R. A. McGowan, assistant director of the department of social action, National Catholic Welfare Conference. Judge Philip H. Donnelly, of Rochester, N.Y., a representative of the American Federation of Labor, who has been active in the recent Communist investigation in New York state, will lead the discussion.

Among those who will lead in the discussion on unskilled workers and their families are: Prof. James E. Hagerty, dean of the sociology department of Ohio State University; the Rev. Fr. Francis J. Haas, S.J., of Marquette University, and the Rt. Rev Msgr. Patrick J. Dunigan, of Flint.

The president of the conference is Frederick P. Kenkel, of St. Louis, Mo., and the Rt. Rev. Peter J. Muldoon, of Rockford, Ill., is honorary president. All sessions of the conference will be open to the public.

that their growth would closely follow the amounts spent each year for advertising.

The local newspaper is the most highly regarded advertising medium, it was disclosed. In all, 929 companies answering the questionnaire used the local papers and 338 did not. The institutions buying space in local papers are evenly divided among all sections of the country. Comparing six media for selling personal trust services and considering their effectiveness from the standpoint of producing results, the speaker declared that the local newspapers should head the list. Folders and booklets can reach a limited audience, he observed, but the newspaper is the best medium for acquiring prestige and mass circulation. It should never be omitted, he urged.

Wife Christens Leviathan Named for Her Husband

Launching of million-dollar freighter: Mrs. B. F. Affleck, who sponsored vessel, and her husband in whose honor it was named.

Toledo, Ohio.—Launching the million-dollar 12,000-ton freighter, "B. F. Affleck," one of the largest boats in the Pittsburgh Steamship company's fleet of 90 vessels, marks another notch in the career of a man who left school at the eighth grade, entered a machine shop at 13, studied nights and rose to an outstanding figure in industry with a lake leviathan named for him.

A. R. Kuhlman, president of the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, Horace S. Wilkinson, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Crucible Steel Company of America and president of the Toledo Shipbuilding company which built the vessel, A. F. Harvey, president of the Pittsburgh Steamship company, which operates the largest fleet of freighters on the Great Lakes, and other notables took part in the ceremonies. Interest in the event was increased by the official christening by Mrs. B. F. Affleck of the new freighter named for her husband who is president of the Universal Portland Cement company and former president of the Portland Cement Association.

To build the "B. F. Affleck" required, among other things, 4,500 tons of steel, 785,000 rivets and 11 tons of paint. From top of pilot house to keel the craft measures 65 feet. Launching this huge new freighter which will carry coal, iron ore and limestone on the Great Lakes, completes another link in the large deep-water program of the Universal company, a feature of which was the recent formal opening by Vice-President Charles G. Dawes of the cement company's new Buffington Harbor, the first private harbor to be built on Lake Michigan in twenty years and one of only three such harbors on all the lakes.

Over in Detroit the people recently voted on the proposition to build or not to build the International bridge across the Detroit River. We are pleased to announce the yeas carried about eight to one It seems the Mayor of the city for some reason opposed the construction of the bridge; on what grounds nobody knows, but he tried to knock out the proposition and failed. At least the people want the bridge built, and Canada has given her consent to go ahead with it, as well she may since the value of Canada is fourfold what it would be to us. It will likely require five years to complete; will be of the suspension type and entire cost is not yet determined. If Money-mad America should stop long enough to consider a point and abandon her terriffic struggle to save dollars she might build as would become a nation and make this bridge one of the memorials of a century and more of peace between the largest caucasian races of the globe, but of course this will not be done. All that will go onto this bridge will be the steel and masonry sufficient to maintain it at 130 feet above high water.

The U. S. Department of Labor has prepared a Publication entitled "Infant Care" which discusses quite thoroughly the care of infants including feeding of infants, infant diseases and general care. These publications are very helpful to young mothers. Copies of this publication may be be secured without cost by addressing a postal card to Congressman Joseph L. Hooper 501-7 City National Bank Bldg, Battle Creek, Michigan.

Michigan Farmers to Plow For Honors

Farmers of Michigan who compete in the plowing contest at M. S. C. Farmers Day, August 4, will have an opportunity to drive a team of championship purebred horses owned by the College. The contest will be divided into three classes: two horse walking plow, four-horse gang plow, and tractor gang plow, Horses, tractors and plows will be furnished by the College. The contest will be judged on knowledge and skill in making preliminary adjustments of plows and on the quality of the plowing.

The International Grand Champion Percheron mare, Maple Grove Leila, and the reserve champion Percheron Mare, Dunham's Marie will make up the team that is probably the best known to those who have knowledge of the prize-winning horses owned at East Lansing. All Michigan farmers are eligible to compete in the contest, and entries may be made by applying to George Getman of the M. S. C. Engineering Department Applications will be received up to 9:30 of the morning of the contest. Winners of first place in each of the three divisions of the contest will receive trophies. Second place winners will receive nickel-plated wrenches as prizes. Two new stunts to be added to the Farmers Day entertainment program this year will be a horseshoe pitching contest and a milk can throwing contest. Coach Ralph Young, Athletic Director, will be in charge of these two contests Entries are also coming in for the town and country church choir singing contest and competition is expected to be keen in this event. The Grange baseball tournament finals, to be played off during the day, are included in the entertainment program. The afternoon open air meeting will draw a brilliant speaking program this year, the fact that Farmers Day comes during the big Country Life week in the college, making International men available.

The Sub-Division Business

To those not familiar with the development of city property from the raw state to plat and the building of villages over-night as it were in the suburbs of big cities, it would seem there was a jiu-jitsu trick of slight-of-hand but as a matter of fact there is nothing of the kind. The work of picking up abandoned farms near a big city is carried on systematically and strenuously. In the first place it might be mentioned most of the farmers who own large places in such localities find the vocation rather irksome when matters get to a point where their land is worth $1,000 to $5,000 per acre, therefore when the realtor comes along and says "sign" accompanied by a little hand-out of all the way from $50,000 to $100,000 the farmer is glad to lay down his shovel and hoes, abandon the tractor or the harvester, and vacate his home If these men ever get home-sick and wish to regain their places where they have passed so many happy hours, we have never learned of it.

So much for the farmer, now what of the realtor? Don't get the impression the Realtor is destined to be a loser, he never is. Every time he bites off a tract of rich mother earth near the big municipality, he is going to clean up several million not-with-standing these lots are re-sold in the years to follow for twenty times their first cost. How does he do it?

Well, here is the great B. E. Taylor organization for an example which has been at the sub-division game for several years in Detroit, and you'll agree "organization" is a real proper definition. If you should drive out Telegraph Road in West Detroit most any Sunday you would find here a whole city by itself. Here are enormous ditch digging machines eating trenches through the virgin soil at the rate of a foot per minute seven and eight feet deep. Here are giant steam shovels puffing a grinding away hoisting surplus soil a couple of yards at a clip, loading it into trucks and moving it elsewhere, where depressions need filling. Right in the heart of some big farm, scrapers and graders are busy tearing up the sods and building a 40-feet concrete pavement. In a short time sewers are in the ground, water mains are down boulevard lights rear their glass heads, side walks line the highways and Presto! From a farmstead of 100 acres yesterday, to-day we have the modern sub-division all ready for the houses, garages, business blocks, and golf courses of tomorrow. B. E. Taylor controls 3,500 acres of such real estate all lying in the township of Redford, in West Detroit, and a journey completely around the outer drive is a surprise to anyone, since this tract contains beautiful landscape effects, ravines, parks, artificial lakes, lagoons from River Rouge, and is strictly speaking, a municipality. In the store houses of the company are long rows of tractors, graders, iron water mains piled to the roof, concrete sewer pipe three feet and larger in diameter, hydrants, light posts and every conceivable material which goes into the making of a mushroom town. At all times night and day and Sundays these machines dig and delve snort and puff, belch clouds of smoke, clang and grind shaping out streets, laying pipelines and making ready for the builder, who follows right on their heels. A few more short months and across the level green lawns kept cleanly mown, arise flocks of handsome bungalows and two story brick residences, like muskrat houses on the marsh. One year ago you inspected the level lawns devoid of a building of any kind as far as you could see; now you come back and try to find the locality—but you can't. The carpenter, the mason, the landscape artist all have been busy—and for the life of you it can't be found. But its there just the same—and worth a couple of million more than it was yesterday.

What has become of the woodlands, the low places, the ravines? Transformed by the modern science of park building, they are beautiful golf courses, where troops of happy players roam for hours, in pursuit of the game. On Mr. Taylor's properties are no less than six large buildings permanently built in the very latest styles of architecture for public uses. The Totem Pole Inn, the monstrous Club House for Golfers, the Riding club and Stables are controlled by the different associations of business men of Detroit, as is the Gun Club. There are three golf courses ideally located adjacent to the picturesque River Rouge which flows winding and rippling through the tract. These buildings together with the exceedingly high class residences costing $15,000 to $20,000 and substantial business places mostly of brick, give notice to the home-seeker that for an ideal Detroit residence section and suburban location Strathmoor and Brightmoor are supreme of Northwest side properties.

The Fall Bird

It was 10:30 p. m. Detroit time. The streets were literally crowded with gay pedestrians. He was small and brown and weazened. He might have been 30, but likely he was considerably older; his snuff brown suit had seen better days; his coat fitted well for the shape it was in; it showed style had once dominated its cut. A somewhat soiled straw hat reposed at a rakish angle over the right eye. Obviously he might have been just a "rounder" doing the town, but a once over made it worse. He was not a common bum, because his countenance showed breeding some distance back. Evidently he belonged to the soiled dove class; he might have been a down and out actor or a stage hand. You could see that his lot had been cast mostly in the ghetto district—that is, a district alive with saloons when it was "wet" and pock-marked with speak-easies when it was "dry" or worse still, it harbored the submerged third class and thugs.

At any rate something was wrong Down Woodward Avenue he came swinging like a millionaire, his arms gyrating like a Dutch windmill in a spanking breeze. But look! He's staggering; he's going down. Whatever that boy has imbibed, he's made a pinch hit. The sidewalks are thronged with the elite passing to and fro, but they don't mind—such sights are too common in Detroit.

With a blood curdling yell the grogged one makes a lunge for imaginary assailants and slumps to the curb, narrowly missing an iron post that would have dashed out his brains. He rolls into a messy heap like a lobster suddenly plucked from his element, and there's a tangle of waving arms and legs, punctuated with Apache yells and hoots. One or two smartly frocked girls merely glanced at the fallen one and tittered—that was all. The janitor from a doorway grinned a real Irish grin. Nobody cared.

Directly down Woodward swinging an indolent night stick, came a smartly groomed officer, commonly known as a "copper," a "Dick" or a "bull." His dapper blue uniform and military cap would command respect anywhere. This arm of the law also grinned, as has been his custom for ages, walked over to the prostrate wriggling mess and with slow and measured beat placed a mighty hand on the soppy one's shirt bosom; he made one grab like a hobo extracting baked beans from a tin can, and the victim arose automatically. Being merely an actor or such-like of 125 pounds weight and the officer tipping the beam around 200, there was no trouble holding the rat in mid-air while "Dick" inspected his catch, precisely as a cross-eyed professor would examine a fresh bug he had captured.

Satisfied the specimen did not look right Mr. Policeman marched up the street dangling the snuff-colored suit which seemed to have little in it.

We didn't see the drunk's feet hitting at all, but that made little or no difference—he was on his way, but where was he going?

Well, if the rascal was just plain "drunk" he'd be all right next morning, but on the other hand if his head was off center, then Eloise would reach out its grimy paw, —Goodby! and who cares? This is just a little anecdote of the side walks of Detroit, but its true.

Now we hear an awful uproar from the wet crowd about "government poisoned liquor." What do the police think of government poisons? Ask them where this man got his liquid hell. Don't for one moment think the government ever saw it. The poisoned liquor that made a raving lunatic from a common bum came from the near-by distilleries of Canada, but the Lord only knows how many corrupt bootleggers had poisoned it since. For an animal absolutely devoid of conscience, they have the Juggernaut car of India completely shaded. If this poor fellow's poison dose was not imported, it came from some cellar still, reeking with blindness paralysis and death.

Government-poisoned liquor—bah!

What do we hear now? Talk of a mighty suspension bridge across Detroit River. Nobody living on this side is particularly interested, but over across they are strong for it, and we wouldn't be surprised if Canadian breweries were the prime movers in the undertaking. Funny how whiskey seeks its own level, isn't it?

Corn borers and corn borers! We are yet cursed with the awful tale of his ravages all over Southern Michigan. Will the corn borer fanatics ever get enough of this and quit? We hope so, for this is the 15th week we have been bombarded with "Corn Borer Propaganda" from Prof. What's-His-Name of the M. S. C. or some other place which he supposes we publish, but supposition is about all there is to it. We're sore on that junk and we hope to be done with it for all time. Not that we are plugging for the carnivorous worm which is in the limelight, but we must certainly have time to discuss the divorce evil.

Bill McDaniel who is serving a term in the county jail for toting hooch is in deep trouble now for sure. As soon as his sentence expires the Sheriff will serve a warrant on him for 2nd degree murder. He is the man who crowded another machine off the road on U. S.—112 near Milnes where by a woman was killed, by his carelessness, so 'tis claimed. However, liquor was in the car and in McDaniel also, so it is not certain how the case will come out.

The exact tensile strength of aluminum is not known, but it will out-class common iron.

CO-EDS LEARN COOK MYSTERY

Probably no one will ever get up an expedition with guns and ships, telescopes and things to discover anything about foods, yet every day in commercial and college laboratories foods are the objects of endless scientific experiments. The results if heeded will eventually make a better tempered world, which is more than can be said for the discovery of the mountains of the moon.

Take the griddle-cake, for instance. As her problem in an elective course in food experiments at Michigan State College, a co-ed in the home economics department worked for three months or more experimenting with different recipes. Her findings banished forever the possibility of griddle-cake failures and literature will testify that soggy, leaden, tough, pale, lumpy griddle-cakes have more than once been the villain of the piece, while the golden brown, crisp, fluffy, tender ones have come in for most extravagant praise.

The ideal recipes were found to be ones which called for a combination of sour and sweet milk or buttermilk and sweet milk for the liquids. In the sour and sweet milk recipe one-third cup of each was used with one-half teaspoon of soda for the sour milk, and one teaspoonful of baking powder with one-half teaspoon of salt was mixed and sifted with one cup of flour.

One well beaten egg was added to the milk, then the liquids added to the dry ingredients, and lastly, one tablespoonful of fat was melted and added to the whole, which was stirred until smooth. Pastry flour was used, as bread flour has a tendency to make the cakes bread-like.

In the buttermilk and sweet milk recipe, one cup of sweet milk and half cup of buttermilk were used with one-half teaspoonful of soda for the buttermilk, and three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one tablespoonful of sugar and one teaspoonful of salt were sifted with two cups of flour. One egg and two tablespoonfuls of melted fat were used and the M. S. C. co-ed states "in my opinion this product was superior to any of the other combinations."

When Miss Geraldine Gillespie demonstrated these cakes in one of the laboratories of the home economics building, M. S. C., she used a griddle which did not need greasing, heating it thoroughly so that the cakes would not be coarse and turning them lightly as soon as bubbles began to rise.

Another M. S. C. girl set out to find the greatest amount of graham and whole wheat flours that can be used in turning out a loaf of bread. These experiments with both flours disclosed that when the proportion was half of either and half of the white flour, the loaves were more nearly standard.

The recipe used called for one cup liquid, three cups flour, half cake yeast, one tablespoonful of sugar, two teaspoonsful fat, and half teaspoonful salt. The yeast was mixed to a paste with a little warm water (the liquid used in this instance) and the rest of the water combined with the sugar, fat and salt. The two were then mixed together and the flour gradually beaten in. It was necessary to add about one-half cup of flour the experiment states. Then the mixture was kneaded for 16 minutes and put in the top of a double boiler with the water in the pan beneath kept at a temperature of 41 degrees centigrade (lukewarm) until the bread had doubled in bulk. It was then kneaded for five minutes, placed in a pan and let rise until it was ready for the oven.

The loaf was baked on the bottom shelf of the oven and set crosswise to get an evenly shaped loaf. The oven was at 190 degrees when the loaf was put in and the temperature was gradually raised to 240, where it was kept for 10 minutes, then allowed to drop again to 190 for the remainder of the baking. Total time of baking was three-quarters of an hour.

AGED ANGLER BATTLES HOUR TO LAND BIG FISH

For nearly an hour, Martin Anderson, aged 70, battled with a 125-pound sturgeon fishing from a small rowboat on Bar Lake, four miles north of Manistee. The aged man was fishing alone when the sturgeon got into his net. Twice it nearly pulled him out of the craft, but he managed to retain his balance and eventually landed it while the crowd on shore gathered to witness the exhibition. The fish measured four and a half feet in length.

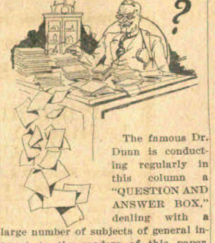
DO YOU KNOW ?



The famous Dr. Dunn is conducting regularly in this column a "QUESTION AND ANSWER BOX," dealing with a large number of subjects of general interest to the readers of this paper. You are invited to send in your questions to Dr. Dunn, care of this paper, and they will be given prompt consideration; and where deemed of general interest, will be answered through this column so far as space permits.

Dr. Dunn has for a long time been a member of the executive staff of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company of Detroit, and has become famous through his weekly broakcasting over WGHP. The doctor has had wide professional, commercial and sociological experience, and while the absolute accuracy of the answers to all questions is not guaranteed, the most authentic sources of information will be the basis of all replies.

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: Is it considered likely that the dumping of sewage from the great cities that line the Great Lakes into these lakes will ever destroy the purity of the water as a whole?

A.—The problem of contamination of the waters of the Great Lakes has received the earnest attention of sanitary engineers for several decades back; and largely as a result of their investigations and recommendations, the great majority of big cities lining the Great Lakes have already installed elaborate sewage disposal plants, running into many millions of dollars. And those cities which have not already installed complete sewage disposal plants will no doubt take care of this matter within the next few years, in response to state and provincial regulations aimed to prevent contamination of water.

***

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: When I have a collision with another car and sustain damage to my automobile, what must I be able to show in order to recover my damages from the other party?

A.—You must first prove that the other party was negligent; next, you must show that you yourself were free from any negligence which contributed to the accident; and third, you must show that damage resulted to you or your car.

***

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: Supposing, under the above circumstances, that I am able to show that the other party was very, very negligent, but that I was guilty of some slight negligence which contributed to the accident, could I recover in such a case?

A.—No; you could not. In order to recover you must prove that you were entirely free from any negligence which contributed to the accident.

***

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: On which side of a parkway should motorists drive?

A.—Drive on the right-hand side of parkway, unless otherwise directed.

***

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: Are the ordinary celluloid eye shades dangerous?

A.—A warning to thousands of persons who are using flammable eye shades, in lieu of hats and caps, to exercise caution to avoid accidents has been issued by the National Safety Council, which is beginning to receive reports of people being severely burned as a result of the visors becoming ignited. "Persons who are wearing these celluloid eye shades, attached to straps going over the head, as substitutes for hats during these warm days should be careful while lighting cigars, pipes or cigarettes, lest their matches ignite these visors. People working in certain shops, factories and other industrial plants, where there are open flames or hot chips flying, will do well to get eye shades that are non-flammable," says the statement.

Q.—Dear Dr. Dunn: Just what is meant by 'Preferred Protection for Man and Motor?'

A.—"Preferred Protection for Man and Motor," about which you inquire, is the "trade name" adopted by the Michigan Mutual Liability Company for their unique automobile insurance policy. This policy gets its name through the fact that it not only affords protection for the owner's investment in the motor car, but also protects his estate against loss through any injury or damage that the car may do to other persons or their property; also it provides for indemnity to the policyholder if he sustains personal injury. Ordinary policies provide no protection for the personal injury of the policy holder.

The Preferred Policy also provides Emergency Road Service privileges good at any garage or service station in the United States or Canada, as well as up-to-date and accurate touring information to any part of the world. The company maintains a fully equipped bureau for the collection and dissemination of touring information.

This policy is the most complete contract of "Protection and Service" that is now offered to the motoring public.

Here He Is--Folks--The One-Armed Paper-Hanger!

You've heard a lot said about the one-armed man who was supposed to be able to accomplish the impossible in hanging wallpaper. Well, he's no longer a myth! For, above, you're looking at the photographed likeness of Albert J. Smith, who has accomplished the paper-hanging feat in his home town at Dedham, Mass.

Not only can he hang the flowered plastered covering, but he has built himself a two-story house—doing the work in his spare time while away from his duties as a railroad switchman. Our photographer, in taking the above photo, says he "swings a wicked axe, too!"

HUGE RUM SEIZURES ARE MADE BY PASTOR-RAIDER

Fifty thousand pint bottles of beer, 1,500 pints of imported whiskey, 600 gallons of intoxicating wine, and 400 gallons of moonshine whisky which has been confiscated during the last two years, is the unusual record made by St. Clair county's pastor-sheriff Rev. D. C. Turbin. But in addition to the unusual amount of contraband liquor which Sheriff Turbin has seized along the 50-mile stretch of the St. Clair river from Port Huron to Anchorville, he is believed to be the only ordained minister in the state holding the office of sheriff.

SALADS NOW HEAD MENU

What is home without the salad!

In these days of calories and color the star role of the menu is played by this delectable combination, graced by just the right dressing. And thereby lies much of the secret of success in salad making, for the piquant flavor of the dressing adds the finishing taste to a dish that is delightful to the eye, and altogether pleasing to the palate.

But let us not despise the foundation vegetables that enter into the making of this culinary masterpiece, for salads are not served alone for their beauty, which is something to gladden the eye, but because they supply the vitamins so much needed in the daily diet. They also give opportunity for the use of many left-overs that otherwise would be a total loss and the cause of increasing the budget allowance.

A rich, golden tinted mayonnaise or a tasty, crimson French dressing play well their part in adding beauty to a dish which is so necessary a portion of every dinner, particularly during the summer months, when cool, crisp vegetables delightfully combined with meats, often supply the main dish.

Green salads are always appetizing, especially during the summer months. The housewife with an artistic bent will love to serve this one. Cut medium-sized green peppers crosswise to make bands about one-third inch wide. Through these bands insert various kinds of salad greens using as many kinds as possible to give varied shades. Cress, romaine, lettuce, endive and chicory make a good combination. This salad may be served with any desired dressing.

For a substantial salad which may be used as the main dish for a dinner or luncheon, chicken salad with vegetables is ideal. It is different from the ordinary chicken salad owing to the use of a vegetable border which makes the dish attractive and quite sufficient for an entire meal. Cut enough cold cooked chicken into dice to make two cups. Marinate in French dressing made with tarragon vinegar. Peel three small tomatoes and cut into quarters and marinats in the dressing also. Have ready a cooked cauliflower; separate into flowerets and marinate. Mix the chicken with 1 cup of finely diced celery and heap in the center of a flat dish, making a pyramid. Cover mixture with tomato mayonnaise. Around salad arrange half leaves of lettuce and on these place alternate sections of tomato and cauliflower to form a wreath.

The tomato mayonnaise to be served with this salad is made by straining a can of tomatoes and simmering on stove until it is reduced to 6 tablespoonfuls. Fold this tomato puree into ¾ cup of thick mayonnaise dressing and add ¼ teaspoon of paprike. This colorful dressing combined with the various ingredients in the salad makes it a particularly attractive combination.

To prevent the gravy soaking through the bottom crust of meat pies, brush over the crust with white of egg.

PRISONER ATTEMPTS TO SAW THROUGH FLOOR WITH WIRE

How a prisoner in the Wayne County Jail attempted to gain his escape by the long and arduous process of cutting through a concrete floor with a piece of wire was revealed to jail attaches.

The attempt failed when the prisoner, James Fairchild, 30 years old, was taken to the Federal Prison at Leavenworth, Kan., 10 days ago several weeks before he had anticipated he would be removed. Fairchild was sentenced to serve 10 years for his part in compelling E. J. Mullin, an automobile salesman, to drive a car to New York City last year. Mullin met three men on appointment to demonstrate a new car. They drew guns and a wild ride to New York followed, after which Mullin was tossed from the car.

Fairchild's laborious attempt to escape was revealed when a cot was moved in a second-floor cell that had been occupied by Fairchild and another prisoner, who told jail officials how Fairchild had worked for hours scratching a crack in the concrete with a stiff wire taken from a mop. Fairchild had penetrated the concrete to a depth of five inches when his sudden transfer upset his plans.

Fairchild had planned dropping through the hole in the floor when the loosened slab should fall and then escaping by way of an unbarred window leading to an alley.

Man 63 Gets High Diploma

Walter Trumble is 63 years old, but recently, at the St. Clair High School, he realized an ambition that has lingered with him since boyhood, that of receiving a high school diploma. Mr. Trumble, who is a grandfather, was seated with the boys and girls of the St. Clair graduating class of 1927.

"My mother was one of the first graduates of the St. Clair high school," said Mr. Trumble, "back in 1860. I attended country schools when a boy and had completed part of the high school course at St. Clair when I quit school to go to work. I had only four courses to complete for graduation. Years later, I regretted leaving school and set to work to remedy the mistake. I have always wanted to possess a high school diploma."

Mr. Trumble believes that every child should have as much school training as can possibly be provided. He is devoting his later years to the teaching of children.

Mr. Trumble is in charge of the Hathaway school, which has 45 pupils on the outskirts of St. Clair. He has been granted a leave of absence for a year by the school board and will attend the State Normal School at Ypsilanti when it opens for the fall semester. During his spare time he has studied to obtain his high school diploma at St. Clair.

METHODS TO REVIVE DROWNING ARE TAUGHT

In an effort to reduce the loss of life in water accidents this summer, the public utility information bureau has issued an appeal to the citizens of Michigan to learn the prone pressure method of resuscitation.

Few swimming and boating mishaps need end fatally if someone is present who knows this simple method of reviving persons who apparently have drowned.

"No equipment is needed to apply the prone pressure method of resuscitation," according to the statement. Employes of the state's gas and electric companies are trained to use this method, which is effective in cases of asphyxiation and shock, as well as drowning. They gladly will demonstrate the method to anyone upon request."

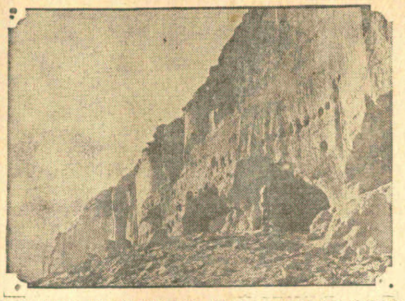
COUNTRY BOY WINNER OF HI-Y SCHOLARSHIP

For the second time in history, the Hi-Y Scholarship and Service cup has been awarded to a country boy, Merlin Stutz, of Rutland township, a student in the Hastings high school. Kendall Coats was awarded the cup last year. Stutz is 18 years old and graduates from school this year. He was a member of the debating squad and winner in the school oratorical contest at Grand Haven, he was awarded third place. Stutz also has been prominent in the Agricultural club. He is a member of the Congress Debating Club, the high school orchestra, band, and Glee club. His scholastic standing the past semester was three A's and one B.

NEW ZEALAND FALLS ARE HIGHEST IN WORLD

The highest recorded waterfall is the Stirling Falls in New Zealand, 1,904 feet high. The highest railroad is the Central Railway of Peru, which reaches an altitude of 15,684 feet, and maintains a station at an altitude of 15,665 feet.

Early American "Kitchenette" Apartments



In New Mexico, about 30 miles from Santa Fe and 10 miles from the Rio Grande river, remains of pre-historic homes are still to be seen. Cut in the pale yellow rock—known as "tufa" amongst the natives—one finds them in solid blocks, five and six acres in size, with steep sides. There are several tiers of "houses"—literally nothing more than holes in the wall—in some of the cliffs. Going inside, one notes that the inner rooms were ventilated by means of air holes in the ceilings. Access to such as those pictured above, was gained by giant ladders.

STATE PARKS AS BOY CAMPS

The Park Department of the Michigan Department of Conservation will begin the immediate construction of buildings in a number of the state parks for the accommodation of groups of boy campers during the summer.

Inasmuch as the state wishes to provide facilities only as rapidly as a need for them is evidenced, the program for this summer in the camps chosen will include the grading of a camp site, the building of a 30x45 combination kitchen, mess hall and recreation hall, the provision of sanitary conveniences, a well, an auxiliary outside kitchen, and the necessary lighting.

This layout will be completed in the following camps:

Rockwood state park, near Detroit; Dodge Brothers state park No. 10, near Highland and Detroit; Cedar Hills state park (Wampler Lake), near Adrian; Bay City state park, near Bay City; Orchard Beach state park, near Manistee; Interlochen state park, near Traverse City; Marquette state park, near Marquette.

It is planned to increase the number and improve the camp sites as interest in particular camps is manifested.

Groups from organizations or from communities may therefore secure use, without charge, of any of these camp sites and the buildings thereon by notifying the park custodian in advance of the date of their arrival. Such groups will of necessity provide their own tents, bedding, mess kits, and food.

Stoves and large cooking utensils are on hand at the camps.

MARQUETTE WOMAN GIVES WAY DOGWOOD GOT NAME

Mrs. Elizabeth R. Timberlake, of Marquette, commenting on a recent article regarding the origin of the name "dogwood," says that the dogwood tree gets its name from a long connection with butchers and not from any canine association.

"Years ago," Mrs. Timberlake writes, "when meat was roasted over an open fire, sticks of hardwood to withstand the heat were put in the meat to keep it from falling apart when done. The sticks were of dagger wood. This was later shortened to dogwood."

The explanation sounds reasonable enough.

STATE'S FIRST CENSUS OF FISH IS UNDERWAY

For the first time in history a general fish census is being conducted in the state of Michigan. Deputies of the conservation department are in charge of the work, which will determine the needs of certain fish species in different localities.

Better fishing is the aim of the department, which accounts for the census.

RUMANIANS' OLD TIRES ARE MADE INTO SHOES

The lower classes in Rumania have found a use for wornout automobile tires. They make shoes out of them. Inner tubes are considered much more chic than the rougher, tougher casings and are a sign of prosperity. A beggar or a flower peddler or street sweeper may make his shoes out of the tire, but the vegetable man is pretty sure to shuffle along in a pinkish pair of soft rubber shoes made possible by a blowout.

Ex-Train Robber--Now Mayor Of Western City

Al Jennings, former Oklahoma "bad man" and more recently an actor, is getting along right well as mayor of Crescent City, Calif. Jenning's election was official and not honorary as that of his old friend. Will Rogers, to the Beverly Hills mayoralty.

Mayor Jennings is pictured in the center of the group to the right. He's the the little fellow, wearing glasses and holding the gavel.

WOLF CAUGHT IN TRAP FRIGHTENED TO DEATH

George Shiras, the Washington naturalist, who is spending the summer at Marquette, tells of a wolf that died of fright.

A wolf was caught in a steel trap set in the water of a stream. That morning, not knowing of the wolf's presence, Shiras fired at a pair of black ducks passing overhead. Later he found the alders covered with blood where the wolf had dragged his clog in a frantic effort to get away, and on top of a bare hummock he found him dead.

The accumulating terror of the shot and his position had undoubtedly caused the wolf's death.

A man always thinks that a woman ought to be interested in the things that interest him.

If you must waste time, waste your own. Do not waste other people's.

Ottawa Indian Chief Honored

The memory of Cob-Moo-Sa, picturesque Ottawa chieftain, who remained firm to the traditions of his race to the last, is to be honored.

Cob-Moo-Sa ruled over the 17 bands of Ottawa Indians, and a monument is to be erected to his memory in Elbridge Township, Oceana County, by the Ionia Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Oceana County Historical Society. The monument is to stand in front of the Cob-Moo-Sa school built by the government for the Indians in 1860.

Grandchildren and great-grand-children of Cob-Moo-Sa will participate in the exercises.

More than 1,500 Indians, members of the Ottawa bands, lived in Elbridge Township, near the trading center which came to be known as Cob-Moo-Sa. It was in 1855 that the Indians came to this section. The tribal organization had been dissolved. The Indians surrendered their land in the Grand River Valley and were given new grants in Oceana County.

The Indians traveled overland from Ionia and other places in that section of Michigan to Muskegon and Grand Haven. From these towns they made the trip to Pentwater by boat. From there the 1,500 Indians moved to the new reservation, where they devoted their time to hunting and fishing, trapping and making maple syrup in season. They also made baskets, peeled bark and picked berries to exchange for their potatoes and corn. The Oceana county records show that the Indians in one season sold six tons of maple syrup. In one day they brought as high as 50 bushels of huckleberries, 50 carcasses of deer, 300 mink and muskrats, 15 bear skins and 20 wolf pelts to the market.

Cob-Moo-Sa remained true to the traditions of his race.

"He was an old man of most majestic appearance," says one description. "His manner of walking gave him the name of Grand Walker. When the Indians moved to the reservation he remained behind for a time, reluctant to leave the graves of his fathers and the scenes of his early days. To the last he remained an "Indian, living in a wigwam and firmly wedded to paganism."

"I am an Indian and can be nothing else," said Cob-Moo-Sa. "I wish my people and my children to be civilized. I know that your ways are superior to mine, and that our people must adopt them or die. But I cannot change. The old cannot adopt new ways. You can bend the young tree, but not the old oak."

Cob-Moo-Sa died in 1872, but his name lives in the trading post and in the history of Oceana County.

CONTRACT IS AWARDED FOR MUSKEGON STADIUM

The contract has been awarded and construction has been started on the first unit of the concrete stadium at Hackley Field, home of Muskegon High School athletes. The stadium, which will seat around 7,000, is to be completed before the opening of the foot ball season.

SILVER SET FROM GARDEN CLUB IS GIVEN YPSI NORMAL

One more gift has been added by the Garden Project Club at the State Normal College here to the long list of contributions made by that organization to the college. All of the gifts have been in the form of equipment actually needed for use in the science department.

This year the gift was a complete set of china and silverware sufficient to serve 72 persons. It was presented at a supper in honor of the event, and was accepted for the State by President Charles McKenny, of the Normal.

More than $4,000 worth of equipment has been given by the Garden Project Club to the Normal College since 1920, when J. Milton Hover, professor of agriculture at the Normal, suggested to a small group of students that it seemed a pity to waste the flowers and vegetables raised in the course of the agriculture work. He suggested that these products might be sold and the proceeds used for the purchase of certain equipment for the class. The idea appealed to the students and Miss Mary Goddard, professor of botany, gave the project her support. Vegetables produced in the club gardens were sold to boarding houses, and permission was obtained from President McKenny to esetablish a flower stand in the corridor of the men's building where cut flowers and plants were sold. These activities were carried on by volunteers from among the club members.

The weekly flower sale has become an institution. When their own supply of flowers falls short the club sells on commission for local florists.

Several other lines of activity have featured the club's work during the past seven years in their efforts to earn money for the benefit of students.

2ND MEDAL AWARDED GIRL FOR SAVING LIFE

For saving lives, Lottie M. Mikolajewski, 14 years old, Hamtramck, was presented with her second medal by the Detroit Automobile Club.

The silver medal was awarded the girl for her brave act when she rushed to the street in front of her home and snatched Paul Racincot, two years old, from the path of a speeding truck. Lottie stumbled as she swept the baby from the path of the truck, and narrowly escape severe injuries. As she fell the child was held in the air and protected from injury.

The first medal awarded Miss Mikolajewski by the auto club was for saving a seven-year-old boy.

ASKS DATA ON ALBINO DEER ON MICHIGAN ISLE

I. T. Quinn, game commissioner of the state of Alabama, has written former Senator A. B. Glaspie asking for information regarding albino deer. According to Quinn, a resident of that state has a herd of 17 pure white deer, which he things may be albinoes, such as George Shiras attempted to breed on Grand Island, many of which may now be running loose on that island preserve.

One man's greatness is due to the aid of many smaller men.

Lots of heavy weights are looking for light work.

TELLS OF BEAR SLAYING FAWN

That a violation o fthe game laws of the state may, under certain circumstances, be justifiable, is the contention of Isaac Pepin, Jr., section foreman of the Goose Lake-Cascade Junction stretch of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad in Marquette county, upper Michigan.

Pepin, a husky Frenchman, who talks with a rich accent that reminds one of chanting voyageurs, white water and soughing pine trees, offers in support of his unusual contention a vivid description of probably one of the most unusual incidents ever witnessed.

The section hands, under the supervision of Pepin, were relaying ties on their section which crosses the upper portion of a vast stretch of sand plains covered for the most part with scrub jack pines and blue berry bushes, when one of the men was attracted by the movements of several deer a short distance away. As he called the attention of his companions to the presence of the animals, a large black bear suddenly appeared, slowly circling about. At first it was thought the bear was stalking the two deer, a buck and doe, until it was discovered that two little spotted fawns were hiding out of sight in the lower limbs of a jack pine tree. At this juncture it became apparent to the men that the bear was after the fawns.

According to Pepin, the bear maneuvered craftily about, awaiting a chance to rush in and seize one of the fawns. Several times while the men watched his attempts were repulsed by the valiant onslaughts of the buck. Slowly the harassed deer family and their pursuer moved across the plains toward the east branch of the Escanaba river, finally disappearing from view. No sound marked the enactment of the wilderness drama save the occasional snarls of the bear and the frantic snorts of the buck and doe.

Pepin, who some time ago raised bears in captivity and knows their habits, declared emphatically that he believes the bear finally got one of the fawns.

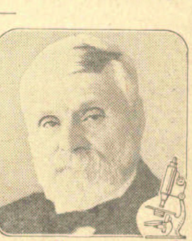
"Law or no law, I believe if I'd had a gun with me, I'd a shot that bear, right then and there," the big man confided, at the conclusion of his colorful description of the incident. "At least I'd have given him a charge of buckshot to discourage his attempts to get those fawns."

13 ONLY SURVIVE OF 1,040 MUSTERED AT GRAND RAPIDS

Of the 1,040 men mustered into service in Grand Rapids in June, 1861, as members of the Third Michigan infantry, there are only 13 survivors, and the organization's annual reunions have come to an end.

At the recent fifty-fifth annual reunion of the veterans of the regiment, only six were able to attend, because increasing age and physical infirmities make travel difficult.

Abraham Eddy, 86 years old, of Sandusky, O., has kept closely in touch with the comrades for many years. He was in attendance at the last reunion. The others who responded to rollcall were S. S. Garison, of Hastings, 91, the oldest of the survivors; former Mayor John McNabb, 87, of Grand Rapids; H. Parrish, Grand Rapids; Charles Miller 84, of Muskegon; and A. J. Webster, 83, of Grand Rapids.



Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid, a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

She has experimented with poultry production for the market and finds that the repeated culling process is too strenuous and the percentage of chickens remaining as eligible to register is too small, and the expense of raising these few, too high. Hereafter it will not be necessary to hatch so many birds to keep up the flock.

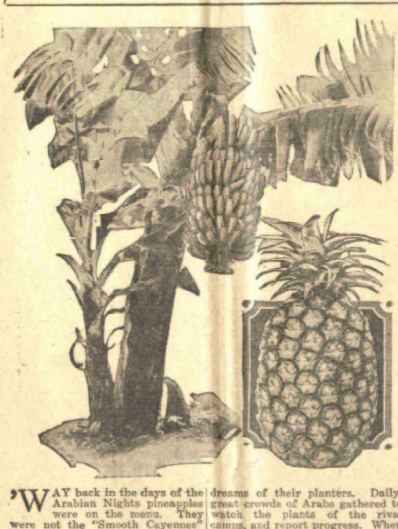
Caliph Serves Fruit To His Favorite Wives



'WAY back in the days of the Arabian Nights pineapples were on the menu. They were not the "Smooth Cayennes" which Hawaii offers today, but if we are to put faith in the tale of a pineapple grown for Haroun-el-Raschid, Caliph of Bagdad, "bigger and better" pineapples were even then in demand.

As the story goes, at certain holiday seasons it was the privilege of loyal Mohammedans to present rare and costly gifts to the Caliph. Two horticutural geniuses of that day, Hassan and Abdul, entered upon a bitter rivalry when each started to grow, as his offering, a fruit which would be larger and better than any fruit ever known in Persia or Arabia.

Hassan was a banana specialist. He set out to grow a giant banana which would outclass all other bananas on entry. Abdul was the only man in all Arabia who could grow pineapples. He sought to please the Great Caliph with the biggest pineapple ever beheld in Bagdad.

Nature was kind, and both fruits grew even beyond the fairest dreams of their planters. Daily, great crowds of Arabs gathered to watch the plants of the rival camps, and report progress. When word was brought to Hassan that the pineapple of Abdul was expanding to an alarming extent, Hassan became troubled. Abdul, however, was serenely conscious that he had the battle won, for was not the pineapple Monarch of Fruits?

It was the eve of the great feast. Imbued with a secret plan to steal a march on Abdul, Hassan crept into his garden, cut down his choice banana, and leaping upon his fleet dromedary sped away into the night.

Arriving at the castle, Hassan presented his giant banana. The Caliph took one look at the fruit and fell into a rage horrible to see. For that day Haroun-el-Raschid was suffering from a frightful attack of indigestion.

"The unfeeling wretch," cried the enraged Caliph, "Shove his banana down his throat."

The attendants grabbed the astonished Hassan and started shoving the fruit down his throat, when one of them pulled it out suddenly and asked:

"Why do you smile, Hassan?"

"Because", replied Hassan, "My enemy, Abdul, is tomorrow arriving with a huge pineapple."

But Hassan's hope for Abdul's punishment was unfulfilled for when Abdul arrived the following day, the happy Caliph caused the huge pineapple to be cut and served to him and his favorite wives.

The moral of this tale might be that pineapples are good for indigestion — but happily Arabian Nights tales have no morals. A physician, however, diagnosing the case of a Caliph's digestive disturbances, would no doubt have agreed that pineapple was the one fruit which the great Haroun-el-Raschid needed.

Hawaii grows a pineapple, "the Smooth Cayenne", which would make Hassan and even Abdul envious, for it is not only the largest pineapple produced, but the juiciest and sweetest. Were the Caliph alive today, he would have a can of this Hawaiian pineapple, ripened in the fields, rushed to Arabia to him, fresher, perhaps than the one which made the journey via "The Camel Route."

For in Hawaii the canneries are right on the edge of the plantations and thus the fruit is allowed to linger in the fields until the sun has bestowed on it the very last ounce of flavor and health-giving properties. It is then packed into cans within twelve hours after it has been picked.

And since pineapple, the newest canned fruit, is second in popularity only to canned peaches, the oldest canned fruit, it is now packed in a variety of ways for the convenience of its ever increasing number of consumers.

The market affords both Fancy and Standard grades of pineapple packed in the following styles:—slices for serving plain or in desserts and salads; crushed, especially adapted to culinary purposes; tid-bits for salads or dishes where the slices are to be broken; and juice for delightful drinks.

The ancient Arabian custom of enjoying choice fruit at holiday seasons is a custom which can be followed today, all year round. Hawaiian canned pineapple suggests luxury and delicacy, although it has rich food value, and its sunny color makes it an addition to so many dainty desserts. It is also delicious in meat, salad and in the vegetable dishes which we serve every day, and because of its dietetic importance, as well as its appealing taste, it bears the distinction of being the Monarch of Fruits.

Listen To This

I want to call the attention of our drinking friends to a little job up at St Clair Michigan which is of interest to them we are sure. It concerns that age old custom of making a strong and spirituous liquor and imbibing same and we understand some folks are still doing that very thing. Captain Cleghorn of the State Police over in St Clair county received a tip that a certain chap was hitting it up very near the place mentioned; in other words this son of iniquity was "rushing the worm" so the Cap. took a hike out to the farm and what do you suppose that officer found?

There in a dirty disreputable farm barn he found the animal in full action and such a mess! Some heathen bootlegger had dug a hole under a barn and made a large vat by concreting the sides of the bank and the top was not any too well covered as some floor beams were laid across for temporary. Into the hole was dumped the worst slime it had been this officer's fortune to witness in many a day. The tank was filled to a depth of four feet with mash made mostly of potatoes but containing a lot of other incongruous substances such as empty milk bottles some old newspapers, a pasteboard box, a little straw, and a few sticks of wood presumably to give the mess a true "aged-in-wood" flavor. The whole thing was filthy in the extreme and looked more like a cess pool filled with garbage than anything else. The tank was 24 feet x 10 feet and about 7 feet deep. At the house the searching party found two more vats of smaller size built with cement blocks in the cellar and filled with the same verdigris, altogether containing 14,000 gallons of mash.

In the barn was the largest still ever found in the region which yielded seven hundred pounds of perfectly good copper when junked and which was sixteen feet in height together with hose and fittings reaching to the ridge pole of the building. Charcoal was stored in the place for fuel and all the appliances necessary for distilling liquor. Outside a well was supplied with a new gasoline engine attached to the pump and piped underground to furnish water. The conservative estimate is that every 24 hours this poison plant could turn out 500 gallons of rot all ready for the victims, and 3,500 gallons per week approximately, and counting Sundays which of course would not be a fact if the proprietor were a Sunday school lad who didn't believe in working on the Sabbath. Captain estimates the profits ot such an institution at present prices of "hooch" would be about $12,250 per week—that is if the stuff went into the insides of a bunch of fools as fast as turned out. Now boys, this liquor you know of course was transported hundreds of miles and nobody knows but that some of it may have found its way to North Adams. This is probably sold as genuine "aged in wood (pure?) Canadian whiskey How would you like a horn of it? Yum! Yum! You say your mouth waters for it. This is a fair sample of the operations as carried on all over the country.

Down South the corn crackers and hill billies manufacture a vile compound oalled "order gent" and its miraculous anybody lives after drinking it. The fermented mash is placed in a common wash boiler and over this a heavy folded blanket is spread. After sufficient steam has condensed, the blanket is put through a wringer, and Presto! we have order gent which is considered mighty "fetchin" in Florida cognomen.

There is a certain chemist in Paris who has invented a process of copper plating a man's inside works so he can indulge in this asphyxiation without burned out bearings, and we predict most of boys will be going across soon.

The Hawaiian Flight

You read about that venturesome and nervy young lady Miss Mildred Doran, of Flint who is about to hop off from the Golden Gate, California, for a flight over the Pacific to Hawaii in company with Auggie Pedlar who hails from the same city. Well, we've got more news for you. Miss Doran is not a stranger to North Adams but has been on our streets more than once. She is a friend and schoolmate of Miss Ruth Williams of this place and has often visited here when both young ladies attended the State Normal at Ypsilanti, and Ruth is at present filling Miss Doran's position in Flint during the latter's absence. Miss Doran and Pedler have flown to the coast and will soon depart for Honolulu if nothing happens to prevent, and this young woman hopes to be the first lady to make the trip.

Why the Sheetrock way is the quickest way
QUICK construction is one of the important advantages you get in using Sheetrock, the fireproof wallboard.
For Sheetrock comes all ready to use. You simply nail the wide, ceiling-high sheets to the supports. The trim and decoration can follow without waiting for the walls to dry.
Besides being ready for immediate decoration, Sheetrock walls are proof against cold and damp, fire and sound. They are non-warping, non-buckling and permanent.

CAMP COOKING NOW SCIENCE

To put vitamins into the campfires of the nation is one of the reasons for a course in out-of-doors cooking at Michigan State College.

Millions of Americans this month will start on summer vacation trips. Care will be used in the matter of spare tires, fishing equipment, proper hiking shoes, tents, road maps, and, as a last consideration food.

"The time has come when we must vitaminize outdoor life" laughed Prof. Irma Gross, instructor of the class that does its lessons in the woods. "The average camper—and there are now millions of them in the country—pays little heed to food values. We hope to correct that."

When the "old sea dog," Billy Bones, came to the Admiral Benbow Inn, his demand in the way of things to eat was simple—"bacon and eggs, and plenty of rum." And such—minus the rum—is the demand of the average camper of 1927, says Miss Gross.

There is no excuse for it, she declared, because with the modern methods of drying fruits and vegetables one may camp for months at a time and never miss a vitamin.

"Take an average fishing party," she cited. "Breakfast bacon and eggs, toast and coffee. If the anglers are fortunate, maybe fish is added to the noon luncheon of bacon and eggs and coffee. The evening meal is about the same, with no thought whatever for vitamins. It's a simple matter to carry along some prunes, some dried vegetables, or, if one is not too far out in the wilds, fresh vegetables are easily obtained. And they're important."

WED 53 YEARS AGO IN BIRTHPLACE COUPLE NOW LIVE

When Charles Shipman came to Shiawassee county with his parents in an oxcart, from Holly, in 1857, his father bought 180 acres of land for two dollars an acre. It took him ten years to pay for it, and then he succeeded only after selling 40 acres.

Shipman recalled his early experiences on the occasion of the fifty-third anniversary of his and Mrs. Shipman's wedding recently. They are still living on the farm which his father bought when he went to Owosso. Near the farm house stands what is left of the log hut that was the family's original home.

It the early days, according to Shipman, there was little money in circulation, and nearly every family lived on what it produced. He recalls that his mother kept geese, made a big mattress from the feathers, and traded the mattress for five sheep. The family clothing was home-made, from cloth woven from the wool from these sheep, he said.

It would have been virtually impossible for the family to have made a living from the farm, he declares. All that saved them was the money earned by the father making flour barrels, which were sold in lots of 100 at the mills in Owosso, Newberg and Corunna.

Acid Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides, it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon "Phillips." Twenty-five cent and fifty cent bottles, any drug store. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

FATHER, CHILDREN REUNITED AFTER 16 YEAR SEARCH

A double search in which a father and two children have sought for 16 years to find each other, was concluded when George Gordon Hoag, 34 years old, and his sister, Leonora Louise Hoag, 19 years old, of Pontiac, were reunited with H. S. Hoag, the father. The reunion took place in Grand Rapids, where the elder Hoag has been living for some time.

Sixteen years ago George and his sister, with another sister, Sarah, were left by the mother in a Davenport, Iowa, orphanage, following separation of the parents. Soon afterwards the mother took the children to Omaha, Neb. The father, who had not been told of the move, roamed about the western part of the country trying to locate his children, and finally drifted into Michigan, where he lived in South Haven for four years. During the years that have intervened he engaged the services of private detectives and sought assistance from police in many cities to no avail. Similar efforts were made by the children.

Recently George and his sister heard their father was in Michigan and came to Pontiac. While here they learned that he was in Grand Rapids and a formal missive, sent the man they believed to be their parent, brought about the reunion.

FARM ROUNDUP DATE IS FIXED

The ninth annual Upper Peninsula Farmers' Round-up will be held at the Upper Peninsula Experiment Station at Chatham August 13, it was announced by G. W. Putnam, superintendent of the experimental farm.

The experimental station has recovered completely from the fires of 1924 and 1925, which, by destroying the principal barns, seriously handicapped officials at the time of staking the annual mid-summer rally. All new buildings have been completed, including a new poultry plant and new barns.

Each department of the station will present a complete program on round-up day, allowing ample opportunity for study of any special phases of farm work.

The following experiment station officials, in addition to Superintendent Putnam, will be in charge: Robert L. Mackie, livestock; Boyd R. Churchill and C. E. Skiver, farm crops; Howard McPherson and L. Arnold, poultry; George Amundson, agricultural engineering; Margaret Harris, home economics; E. G. Amos, extension activities.

AIRPLANES BRING PROSPERITY HOPE TO "DREAM CITY"

A comparatively new industry, that of the Buhl Aircraft corporation at Marysville, promises to revive faded hopes that the "Dream City," as it was known a few years ago, may in the near future bring to a culmination the prognostications made when the Wills Ste. Claire automobile factory first opened there.

Within a few years Marysville residents have seen the rise and fall of a good many promises. When the automobile factory was constructed and the first product was tested on a private track, real estate values were boomed and clusters of houses soon filled vacant fields. Then came the streets and avenues and the stores. But the Wills Ste. Claire plant finally ceased production and the contemplated metropolis failed to materialize.

Now once more the hopes of many have taken greater meaning with airplane production well under way. At the present time the Buhl plant, producing about one plane a week, is supporting the greater portion of Marysville's population.

CAMPING GROUND SOLD TO CITY FOR MUNICIPAL PARK

The old Methodist camp grounds of Reed City, where Methodists have gathered from far and wide each August during the last 40 years, is no more. The Reed City council has decided to buy the camp grounds from the Big Rapids district of the Methodist church for a municipal park.

At the April meeting of the district conference, the Methodists voted to discontinue the camp meetings and to sell the grounds, as lack of interest in the meetings did not warrant their continuance. The automobile is responsible for the falling off in attendance at the week-day sessions, as people who formerly spent the entire 10 days on the grounds in tents or cottages, in recent years have traveled back and forth, failing to return for most of the services.

The first Methodist camp meeting of the district was held in 1885, in what is now Holdenville, a village on the edge of Reed City, and the following year a meeting was held on a hill south of Reed City. In 1887 meetings were conducted on the present grounds and they have been held there ever since.

DIZZY TOWER ONCE DREAM

Darius Green dreamed of a flying machine, and Jules Verne wrote pages of imagination fiction anticipating the submarine and other scientific achievements. So it has been with high buildings, of which Detroit expects to have one of the world's loftiest in the new Book tower, which is to be 873 feet high.

George H. Barbour, with Thomas W. Palmer and others from Michigan, was a member of the joint committee on ceremonies for the World's Columbian Exposition which opened at Chicago May 1, 1893. This exposition received the popular title of "World's Fair," and its glories filled the thoughts of many a lad and lass since grown to less impressionable maturity.

It was for this famous exhibition that a "World's Fair Tower" was planned. At least it got as far as the prospectus stage, with its wonders and possibilities set forth in a 16-page booklet.

In the first place the tower was to reach the dizzy height of 560 feet, with a width of 230 feet. The world had a right to gasp at such audacity in design. The World's Fair tower was to have a track winding spirally around the structure, on which five-car trains were to carry passengers to the observatory floor, 500 feet above the surface. Lights and searchlights were to illuminate the tower. A restaurant was to be on the "grand floor" at the base just above the landing platforms for passengers.

"The marvelous sight that will be presented at night, with 400 cars circling down the tower track, and 400 ascending at the same rate of speed," says the prospectus, "causing 5,000 incandescent lights to be flitting past each other in rapid succession, added to the hanging lamps around the spiral and the incandescent lights coming out of the ornamental and gilded stars fixed at every point where the bracing rods cross each other, can certainly not be equaled by the fabled visions of Aladdin."

BARTLETTS, SECKELS FAIL WHEN POLLEN FROM OTHERS LACKS

The old practice of interplanting Seckel pear trees with Bartletts for pollination purposes is responsible for the light crops of these fruits in orchards set solidly to these two varieties. This is indicated in experiments conducted by Dr. V. R. Gardner, of Michigan State College, and Stanley Johnson, superintendent of the South Haven Experiment Station.

The tests showed the Seckel and Bartlett varieties are not only self-sterile but also sterile to the pollen of each other.

To determine this the pomologists built a screen cage over two Seckel and two Bartlett trees and placed a colony of bees with these trees at blossom time. The Seckels set a very light crop of fruit, while the two Bartlett trees set one pear, and there is some question whether it will stick until maturity.

Other tests were made to determine what varieties are best to interplant with Bartletts for pollination. Where two Bartlett trees were caged with two Bose trees, both varieties set heavy crops. These trees were only a short distance from the cage inclosing the Bartletts and Seckels.

The experiment was conducted in the pear orchard of James Nicol, of South Haven, former president of the Michigan State Farm Bureau.

Despair is the undertaker that carts off our dead hopes.

Long Fingernails--Sign Of "Brains" In China

Tradition always gave us to believe that all Chinese grew abnormally long fingernails, to be used as weapons against their enemies. The supposition is erroneous. Only those among them who are gentlemen and scholars and do not have to work allow their fingernails to grow to extreme lengths. And then only on the right hand. The photo pictures one of that class.

CLUBS FORMED AT EVERY WOODED LAKE IN LOWER PENINSULAR

Remarkable as it may seem, there is hardly a valley of lakes in the northern part of the Lower Peninsula that has not been taken over by sportsmen who are rapidly forming clubs. Wherever there are chains of lakes with well-timbered surroundings, rolling hills and running trout streams, there you will find the club forming. But the country must be more or less wooded with second growth or there is no demand for the property. Another thing has been noticed in this connection. Those clubs that have been formed for a year or more are making every effort to protect their game, not with a view to killing it necessarily, but for the mere pleasure of bringing back to this north country the game that once swarmed.

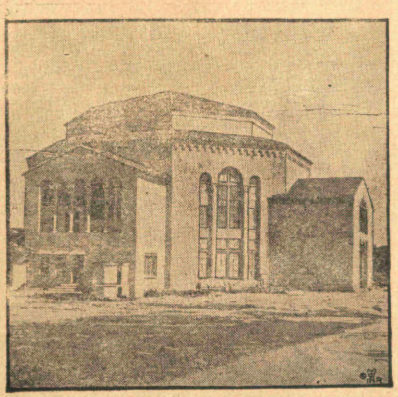
Old-timers tell of early days when deer went about in herds. Professional hunters killed for the lumber camps both does and bucks and even fawns. Later, as the country settled up, population increased and outside hunters poured into the country from down below every fall. There was little regulation in numbers killed for several years and this, coupled with the local kills, about depleted the deer in many sections. The professional hunters were kept on the pay roll of the lumber companies and were required to keep the camps in meat as the men tired of salt pork and beans. In time they tired of venison, and often only the more choice portions of the deer were taken to camps.

But now there is a different feeling abroad throughout the north. Men who become converts to the gospel of the outdoors.

MAJ. ABRAHAM SENT FOR DUTY TO THE SOO

Major Clyde R. Abraham, graduate of the war college of Fort Leavenworth, will relieve Major Carry I. Crockett as Fort Brady battalion commander at Sault Ste. Marie. Major Crockett leaves to enter the Washington, D. C., war college.

"Commoner's" Memorial Temple



The city of Miami, Fla., has had a new beauty place of interest added to its attractive scenery. It's the William Jennings Bryan Memorial Temple, erected in honor of the great "Commoner" and exponent of peace. The artistically designed edifice, just dedicated, is pictured above.

STATE RICH IN BIRD BEAUTY

The fact that this Michigan of ours is rich in scenic beauty is a foregone conclusion which is becoming better known day by day, as we of the state see more of it and as the stranger in our midst spreads the tale of our desirability from coast to coast.

Another fact, not so generally known, perhaps, is that Michigan is equally rich in a large and varied bird life. This is well demonstrated by the observations of the Kent Scientific Museum's expedition during its spring work of this year.

With the first of May came the great wave of migrants—swallows: bank, barn, cliff and tree swallows—and the warblers: cape may, palm, myrtle, prairie, black and white, and magnolia warblers. Every day brought new ones; Baltimore orioles, veery, and the thrushes. In the marshes the call of the rails were added to those of the blackbirds, and the doleful "pumping" of the bittern.

By mid-May the grassy prairies were alive with bobolinks, the common and black terns were flying over the bay and creeks, diving for small fish here and there. Mallards and black ducks were building nests. The end of May brought the last wave of migration. In this large movement of bird life we had many that we had previously seen and also the late migrants: black-poll warbler, nighthawk, whippoorwill, and many others. The waders were increased by the addition of the red-backed sandpiper, the piping and black-bellied players, and a few sanderlings.

While many of these migrants pass further north to nest, an equal number remain in Michigan during the summer months to enliven our woods and waters with bird songs and calls.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE PERFECT FOR 5 YEARS

Perfect attendance for five years at school is the record of Alma Adele Blumerich, 10 years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Blumerich, of Almont township. There are 180 days in the school year in rural districts, so five years makes Alma's total 900 days, on every one of which she was neither absent nor tardy. Her home is only 20 rods from the school and she always hustles home for dinner and back again before the bell rings. That makes about 1,800 chances that Alma has had to spoil her record.

THREE DUTCH LIVING 50 YEARS IN TOWN BORN AS NEIGHBORS

Three Fremont men, Jacob Lankhorst, Arthur Van Emst, and Hendrick Nieboer, all of whom are over 90 years of age, were all born within six miles of each other in The Netherlands, but until coming to Fremont were unacquainted.

While none of them took part in the secession in Holland, each knows intimately of the affair. The country, noted for its religious freedom and to which inhabitants of persecuted nations fled, underwent a severe persecution of its own and many fled to America. The families of these men came with the Van Raaltes, who landed in New York, came up the Hudson to Albany, where part of them settled, and continued the journey with the majority to establish the settlement at Holland.

The men tell how their boat was stopped in mid-ocean, and their captain was asked what cargo he carried. He replied: "Ballast."

The oldest of the three is Lankhorst, who was 94 years old June 23. He was born in Brummen, Gelderland, Holland, in 1833, came to America in 1872 and settled on a farm near East Saugatuck. He moved to Fremont in 1882. He has always been a member of the First Christian Reformed Church. He walks to church twice each Sunday, stays for Sunday school and enters into the discussions of the men's Bible class.

Arthur Van Emst was born in Vierhouten, Gelderland, Holland, on April 18, 1836, being 91 years old. He came to this country in 1868, also settling at East Saugatuck, working in the lumber mills there. He moved to Fremont in 1888, and he and his wife live on the old farm east of this city. Mr. Van Emst is a veteran of the Dutch army.

The third of the trio is Hendrick Nieboer, who was born at Armerloo, Gelderland, Holland, Aprli 5, 1937, being 90 years of age this spring. He came to America in 1870, settling at Grand Haven and coming to Fremont in 1877. Mr. Nieboer is a charter member of the First Christian Reformed Church.

RECORD KEPT BY MUSKEGON

Muskegon county for the second year has captured the Michigan record in planting trees this spring, according to announcement by R. F. Kroodsma, extension specialist in forestry at Michigan State College.

Through co-operation with the college and with the board of supervisors, Carl Knopf, county agent, has aroused community interest in the planting of trees. Many of the trees planted were obtained from the State College nursery.

The second county in number of plantings this spring was Barry, with 94,000. Paul J. Rood is the county agent. Most of the trees set out in Barry county were white pine. Next year, it is planned to increase the number to 200,000.

With 70,000 trees planted this spring, Van Buren county was third. William F. Johnston, the county agent, had arrangements made for more trees, but was unable to obtain them.

This is the third year that Muskegon county has been interested as a community in reforestation. The other counties have just started the work within the past year or two.

It doesn't require much practice to acquire the art of being lazy.

FARMERS' DAY TO BE AUGUST 4

Thursday, August 4, has been set definitely as the date for the annual summer Farmers' day at Michigan State college, and the committee in charge is at work on plans for the entertainment of between 8,000 and 10,000 farmers and their families.

New entertainment features are being added this year. The Farmers' day has come to be the one outstanding agricultural meeting of the state held during the summer months, and each year sees a bigger attendance.

In place of the horse-pulling contest which has been staged for the last two years, the committee this year plans a plowing contest which should attract many farmers. The State Grange will play off its baseball tournament finals on the same day. The morning program is scheduled to include the town and county church choir singing contest, a horseshoe pitching tourney, and a tour of the crops department experimental plots, the orchards, and the livestock lots.

For the big general meeting in the afternoon, a platform will be erected on the campus, equipped with amplifiers, so that all of the 8,000 or more visitors may hear the speeches. At noon there will be a band concert.

Farmers' day will come during the Country Life week, when more than 17 different organizations will be meeting on the campus.

"The STRONTIUM CRYSTAL"

By L. V. HARVEY

It is unnecessary to mention here the disasters which had overtaken the American army at the beginning of 1813, but there was little cheer in their camp since General Winchester's command had been badly worsted at the River Raisin, nearly the whole force being wiped out by bloodthirsty Indians under Chief Tecumtha and General Proctor, who is said to have made special inducements for the braves to hunt American scalps. Suffice it to say the spirit of the American army was then at a low ebb, and it remained for the men of the lake navy—though it could hardly be called a navy since it was not yet born—to strike a blow which would beard the British lion in his den and redeem the fortunes of "Brother Jonathan."

Congress saw fit to select for this important work a young man not then twenty-eight years of age, who had never smelled powder—Oliver H. Perry of Rhode Island, formerly midshipman in the navy—and we open this narrative with the hero before us, a remarkably good-looking officer, scion of naval officers—for his father, peace to his ashes, had served in the Revolution. At this time young Perry was in the flower of his manhood—a man of dashing appearance, brown-eyed and prepossessing—and one who could grace any drawing-room in Washington as well as the quarter-deck, though such was not his mission. Neither did he believe in drawing-room officers, and the uniform which he wore meant action and results, rather than pomp and gilt lace.

He had improvised a shipyard at Erie, a favorable harbor a few miles east of where now stands the city of Sandusky, Ohio, on the shores of Lake Erie, and on the morning of the 5th of May, 1813, this little harbor was the scene of activity such as only the throes of war can afford. As an overwhelming climax to the many trials of the Commodore, it was found, that after launching his largest vessels, they drew so much water that strenuous means were required to get them over the sand-bar at the mouth of the harbor; and so we find Perry, and the second in command, Lieut. Kemble, U. S. N., working like beavers, shoulder to shoulder with sailors and roustabouts. And it was yet several days before they had the satisfaction of seeing the entire fleet riding at anchor outside.

But the laborious effort was more than repaid by the fine appearance presented by the squadron, dressed in fresh paint, newly rigged, with snowy sails, and looking in fact quite formidable, with everything shipshape—except a sufficient quota of men to man it. Then the Commodore groaned inwardly, for well he knew their impotence to cope with Barclay's towering ships of war, and seadogs boasting of a hundred fights. With the undisciplined crews and insufficient armament, the outcome could be little short of disaster for Perry—but he was "game."

At this opportune moment, sails hove to in the offing, the American fleet beat a hasty call to quarters, and clumsily addressing themselves to the guns, waited for the expected annihilation; but it didn't come. As the Commodore had surmised, the new rivals were the lesser lights of the British flotilla, under Capt. Robert H. Barclay, who had been lying at Malden for the winter. The Americans, of course, weighed anchor, and stood out to meet the enemy; but to their surprise Barclay crowded on all sail possible, and stood north-west—the affair becoming a chase, which drew the Americans well up in the Detroit river—for the British commander had simply reconnoitered, but had no stomach for fighting, inasmuch as his largest boat, the "Detroit," was still on the stocks at Malden.

Perry, in the "Lawrence," his flagship, set every stitch of sail, but with her low masts and fat bows she was no match in speed for the British frigates. Barclay had no desire to engage just then, and he "hot-footed it" in order to get under the protection of batteries at Malden.

During that night a desultory firing was kept up between the batteries and the Americans, without much effect, though the stand today, below Detroit, the venerable mansion bearing scars of some of Perry's well-directed shots fired from "Long Toms" at an approximate distance of perhaps two miles. And perchance, if you would take a stroll up to the city-hall, you would find the same staunch old cast-iron piece which planted that shot; or, if you visit the wharf, perhaps deeply imbedded in the mud, you might find another of those old heroes. What ignoble uses we make of our relics!

The next morning was bright and clear, and the American ships presented a gala-day appearance, with flags snapping in the breeze, sails being unreefed, ropes swishing through blocks mingled with the brusque commands of officers, and above all the glorious blue skies of summer. On the forward deck of the "Lawrence," a regiment of marines stood at attention, while the Executive Officer passed through on inspection, and the band played "Yankee Doodle." Perry's eagle eye took in all these details with a sweep, and knowing the squadron could accomplish nothing by bombarding the batteries, he resolved to retrace his steps. With considerable disappointment he gave the command "weigh anchor": and the fleet headed south-east by south. Shortly before the noon hour, the high promontory of Gibraltar came in sight from the mast-head. "Reef mainsail" came ringing down the wind from ship to ship, as the sloping decks yawed, and the wheelsmen ground the spokes to change the course. At 3:30 p. m., the flagship dropped anchor in twenty fathoms of water, and within three hundred yards of the shores of Put-in-Bay.

The Commodore and his second in command, Lieut. Kemble, immediately put off in the long-boat to explore the island, which was well wooded. They had hoped to find a spring where the water-butts might be replenished, but nothing of the sort was seen until sundown, when Perry and Kemble had wandered by themselves some distance inland through the tangled creepers, festooned wild grapes and heavy undergrowth with which the island seemed to be covered. Presently an opening was observed a few hundred feet in advance, and soon they emerged from the surrounding timber into a rocky amphitheater, where no shrubbery or vegetation could grow—nothing but a few half-strangled creepers in the crevices of the rock here and there.

From the opposite side of this amphitheater, a stream entered and wound tortuously between the rocks, echoing as it flowed along—not unlike a purling meadow-brook—and the Commodore, being thirsty from his long tramp, stooped and drank, finding the water clear, and cold as ice. Kemble followed the stream some distance, and was surprised to find, not, as he had anticipated, a spring, but instead, the little rivulet seemed to lose itself beneath a large boulder, which gave forth hollow sounds when struck with a pistol butt. Night was upon them, however, and they hastily left the place and returned to the boat. During the short interval of returning to the flag-ship, neither Perry nor Kemble broached the subject of the spring to the men, but stated that they had found plenty of water for drinking-purposes. There the matter rested.

The wind had lulled with the sinking of the sun, and the water in the little bay was as smooth as a mill-pond. Perry ordered the ship's lanterns lighted, and at the signal, the outlying sloops weighed anchor, and moved close in. The stillness of the late summer night was broken by the clanking of chains grinding through hawse-pipes, and the creaking of newly-slung blocks. Dark, wet-looking clouds overspread the heavens; in the forests ashore, millions of tireless katydids piped their ceaseless lay.

Perry and Kemble remained on deck until nearly midnight, discussing the probabilities of an encounter with Barclay, which they knew must come soon: for the British Commodore had also strained every sinew to complete his flag-ship, the "Detroit." She was to be a powerful man-of-war when finished, manned with Britain's best, and the outcome looked dubious indeed for the American fleet, hampered as it was, with a motley array consisting of a few disciplined officers, and crews of "land lubbers" mostly, who were having their first dose of seamanship—and a sorry job they made of it.

After a particularly discouraging argument, Kemble turned in, and soon snored heavily, but not for long. He was aroused by the clank of heavy boots on the hatch, over his head—the watch had rushed to the companionway bellowing like a loon: "Light on shore, Sir." Kemble stepped into his slippers, and hurried above, where he found Perry talking excitedly and the first officer, Mr. Johns, straining his eyes to peer shoreward.

Being so suddenly aroused from heavy sleep, Kemble had to wait some seconds before he could get his vision adapted to the distance. Then he saw a brailliant ball of light, which seemed as large as the ship's lantern, moving slowly about among the tree-boles near the water—now emerging—now disappearing—apparently at a height of five feet above the ground. Gradually it traveled to the left, moving as though carried by some invisible hand, and glimmering on the trees. Outside its zone, all was black as Erebus. By this time the whole crew of the "Lawrence" were clustered forward, watching the strange beacon and talking in husky whispers. Kemble crossed over and stood by the Commodore's side, trying hard to speak: but his tongue was dry. At last Perry broke the silence.

"What in God's name is it?" he said, huskily. "Surely no human hand is carrying that lantern, and besides, this island is uninhabited, is it not, Lieutenant?"

Kemble did not answer at once, though he was not superstitious in the least, and under any other circumstances would have scoffed at such a statement.

"You might hail him, Commodore, and see what his errand is this time of night," said Kemble, with a laugh meant to be sarcastic, though somehow it did not sound quite natural.

"Hail him yourself: my throat is dry," said Perry, rather impatiently.

Promptly enough, Kemble mounted the rail, clutching the back-stay, and in stentorian tones threw his voice into the night. The cry awoke the echoes from far and near, and they seemed to repeat a dozen times from shore to ship alternately, and from island to island, dying at last far out in the Lake. Directly, the prolonged rumble of a distant approaching thunder-storm seemed to start in the south quarter, and rolled away in the dark skies, followed by a stray rain-drop here and there; then all was quiet again. Twice and thrice he hailed the pallid flickering thing out there, but only the mocking reverberations against Gibraltar's rock answered, and Kemble swung himself t othe deck with a creepy feeling. Perry uttered a low "Humph" or an imprecation and said, "Perhaps he didn't hear you, Lieutenant."

Meanwhile the voices of the crew swelled into a loud rumble, as they conversed among themselves. The light moved slowly and steadily to and fro, and seemed to grow larger: or was it coming nearer? It advanced to the deck with a creepy feeling, perhaps for five minutes, shining brightly, throwing ghostly shadows on the near-by shrubbery, and a brilliant phosphorescent track downward into the limpid shallows.

Presently it moved again to the right, and vice-versa, all the time coming nearer; till not over fifty fathoms from the "Lawrence's" starboard quarter, it paused and burned with a bluish light, throwing sharp reflections and black shadows on the white faces of the crew. Kemble turned his gaze forward, just in time to catch the gleam of muskets and cutlasses—the crew had armed themselves.

Suddenly the "will-o'-the-wisp" winked and went out—leaving the darkness black as tar. Their faces were puckered and eyes blinking from gazing at its brilliance, and for several minutes not a word was uttered. Finally Perry broke the rather painful silence, with the command, "Tumble below, men, and retire; there is no harm done. This light is nothing but the 'ignis fatuus.'"

What the "ignis fatuus" was, none of the crew had the least idea; but they obeyed as to going below, though there was no sleep for them. They sat on bunks and lockers, smoking, and speculating upon the "ignis" till the breakfast-call sounded.

At the close of morning muster, calling Kemble into his cabin, Perry laid before him on the table a sparkling stone crystal, transparent, six-sided, and as big as your finger; the facets or sides of which were regular as though fashioned by some clever artisan—altogether a remarkable object to Kemble, who had never seen its like.

"What do you make of it, Lieutenant?" said Perry.

After a lengthy examination, Kemble was forced to admit he would have to be shown.

"That," said Perry, seating himself comfortably opposite the Lieutenant and lighting his pipe, "is a stalactite crystal which was given to me by my father's life-long friend, Anders—Zacharias Anders, of Providence, Rhode Island; and it has a history. Anders was born in Berne, Switzerland, in 1759 or thereabouts, and came to this country to escape the press-gang, that sought to draft him into the service, which, as you know, is compulsory in that country. Previous to this, he had traveled much in Austria and Italy in pursuit of his favorite study, geology, being considered an authority on such matters. During one of his trips in the Austrian Alps, he visited a beautiful mountain lake of high altitude, whose shores were thickly wooded, and inhabited by an abundance of game of the large type, such as deer, bears, etc., and the curious mountain goats known as chamois, but no human being within many miles. Anders was so charmed with the region and its facilities for his study, that he decided to remain indefinitely, and built a rude cabin, also a boat, from the straight cedars which he cut near by. The boat he used in visiting the numerous islands of the lake. One of the islands seemed to be especially low and marshy, interspersed with little wooded knolls, and contained perhaps a hundred acres, more or less. Chamois were numerous there, and easy to capture, never having been frightened by the hunter. Aside from shooting these curious animals, Anders had discovered strange formations of rock on the knolls; in fact, the whole upland portion of the island seemed to be nothing but shaly rock, covered with soil of great richness.

"One day he was chasing a deer through the timber, when he fell feet-foremost into what appeared to be an abandoned burrow of some wild animal, but upon investigation proved to be a the mouth of a cave extending back into the hill hundreds of feet, thence down and down till the gloom and loneliness of the thing actually frightened him from making further examination. However, he determined to see more of it, and returned the next day with a liberal supply of provisions, and dry pine-knots suitable for kindling. A torch was the most desired article: and by a dint of ingenuity one was improvised.

"The entrance to the cave was so small that he could barely squeeze through, but once in, the pasage widened gradually into a high gallery, descending at an angle of 45 degrees. Following the gallery for a distance of four hundred feet, he came to a great cavern, whose sides he could not distinguish at all, and the roof was so high that nothing but the points of stalactites hanging in great clusters from the ceiling could be seen. These stalactites were of the same formation as this crystal lying before us, only vastly larger—some of them as much as ten feet in diameter. The air was pure and dry, and no animal or insect life was in evidence.

"Anders passed on, going, as he thought, straight ahead, but really in a large circle; for he was later surprised and disgusted to find he had returned to the identical opening where he started. Fortunately he rummaged his clothes and found a small pocket-compass, and with it managed to keep a fairly straight course, coming at last to the further wall of the cavern, only to find it sheer, and no possible exit in sight. Here the stalactites came down low enough to be broken off by hand. Keeping close to the wall, Anders found another opening, after traversing a quarter of the circumference, probably ten feet high, which seemed to be the end of another gallery. At this point he pulled out his watch and was surprised to find that fifteen hours had elapsed since entering the cave; in other words, he had started at six o'clock in the morning and it was now nine o'clock at night.

"Feeling tired and hungry, he spread a blanket upon the rough floor and regaled himself with venison and biscuits. But one torch remained, and since the life of a torch was at best only about eight hours, it was necessary that he hastily retrace his steps lest he be left in total darkness deep in the bowels of the earth. Hurriedly he started on the return trip, picking his way around the roughest and rockiest parts of the floor. Soon it dawned upon him that getting out was vastly harder than getting in—besides, he was fatigued. The watch indicated eleven o'clock, and still no side wall was reached. What if he had misjudged the direction and was lost? The floor of the cavern was rougher at every step and now nothing could be seen above—all was blackness. Plainly he was not in his former path. Great stalagmites sprang from the floor; some of them as high as a man, some as high as a church, their thousand-and-one pinnacles glistening like diamonds in the light of his pine-knot torch.

"Thoroughly frightened at his predicament, Anders' love of the beautiful would not be stilled, and he could scarcely tear himself away from such a galaxy of Nature's jewels. Meanwhile the torch was nearly consumed, and as yet no signs of the outer world were apparent. Gradually the floor became smoother, and progress easier; the surface began to ascend, and stalactites appeared above. Following these hopeful signs, he came to a hole in the side wall, thence into a narrow gallery which led to the open air, and not a minute too soon; for at this juncture the torch spluttered and went out, burning his fingers.

"Daylight was just breaking over the mountain-tops, and Anders was dumbfounded to find himself, not, as he had expected, on the island, but seventeen miles from the nearest shore of the lake, nearly dead from exhaustion, with nothing to eat but berries, and such game as he could bag.

"Next day he made the return-trip to his cabin, and found that in addition to seventeen miles, he must travel half the circumference of the lake. This crystal was all that he possessed as a souvenir of the experience—he had broken it off with his hammer early in the adventure.

"Ill-luck still pursued him; before he could again visit the cave, the government learned of his whereabouts and he was obliged to flee to America. In New York City he met my father, and a close friendship sprung up between them. Father spent many happy days in Anders' company, often beseeching him to come to Newport to reside, which he finally did, and his demise occurred there three years ago, but he always maintained to his dying day that if the government had not interfered he would have given to the world one of the greatest discoveries of the age—a gigantic cave composed of almost pure strontium calcium, worth its weight in gold, and hard to get at that.

"Anders always talked of the day when he would return to the scene of his adventure, and unravel the mystery of that might cave. During his residence in this country he visited Niagara, and took a trip on the Lakes, coming to these islands—in fact it was he who called my attention to this harbor. He also said that the formation of these islands convinced him that strontium rock-caves existed, and to be frank with you, I believe that is the explanation of the disappearing stream we saw yesterday."

Kemble was fascinated with the tale, and enthusiastically proposed that they visit the island at once and search for the hidden cave; but Perry declined, saying that he had promised shore leave to a portion of the crews that day, and he did not wish to take them into his confidence.

However, as soon as possible, they again visited the island, this time fully provided with a small lantern and compass, also a few feet of fine stout rope, which they managed to conceal under their blankets. The boatswain looked suspiciously at the blankets, as he swung their boat on the davits and lowered away, but discreetly said nothing.

Safely ashore, they lost no time in discarding their coats and waistcoats, and donning oilskins and sou'westers; thus they sallied forth. After several hours of fruitless search all around the rocky amphitheater, they were discouraged and hungry, and Kemble proposed that they return to the boat for refreshments; but he noticed a dead tree some litle distance away. The whole side of its trunk from top to bottom was riven as though by a thunderbolt, and the tree stood at a sharp angle to the westward. Indeed, it appeared to be poised so delicately, that a breath of air would send it crashing to the ground. Upon investigation, it was found that the roots on the east side were high above the soil, and looked as though an undermining process had been begun, either by some wild animal or the elements.

They had fetched a boat-hook having a handle some ten feet in length; Perry threw the hook into the half-decayed trunk as high as he could reach. The hook held, and Kemble took hold. Together they tugged—once, twice—and the third pull brought the tree to earth. And would you believe it? Right under the roots was a dark hole, going down indefinitely. Some soil had been dislodged, and sifted slowly into the opening; otherwise it was clear.

Quickly lighting their trusty lard-oil lantern, they let themselves carefully into the cavity, stepping from rock to rock. Soon they struck bottom: and going a few paces, emerged into a large cavern, whose sides were a mass of conglomerate crystals, sparkling and scintillating like a thousand stars. They kept on, coming to the end of this hall, whence another passage led to a room much larger. Stalactites and stalagmites were numerous here, some of them forming beautiful pillars—perfectly round and white as snow.

Perry was delighted with the outcome of his surmises, but somewhat disappointed at the small size of the cave. Carefully they searched the surrounding walls for signs of another gallery: but none existed, save where they had entered. Near the wall was a large flat boulder thirteen inches thick, and possibly three feet in diameter. Kemble struck it with his pistol-butt, and was surprised at the hollow metallic ring; they tried to move the stone, but it was too heavy. Finally they went above and cut a stout boxwood lever, with which a "bight" was secured sufficient to hoist the boulder. It had lain over a fissure large enough for a man to work his body through. They tied several feet of rope to the lantern and payed out gradually.

The light showed the shaft to be much the same as the former one, and at a depth of ten feet, the lantern struck bottom. Kemble stepped in and clawed his way down gingerly, followed by Perry.

Only 5 Years Old--He Crossed Ocean Alone!

Smiling a friendly greeting to America here, is five-year-old Andreas Osida, who arrived just the other day at New York City. The last thing his grandmother told him prior to his departure from the old country was to keep safely guarded the passport that would gain him safe entrance to the United States, and not give it to anyone.

So well did the youngster live up to the instruction that when he arrived here and the immigration authorities asked to see his passport, he refused to show it to them. The lad was about to be sent to Ellis Island when a stewardess gained his confidence and learned the passport was sewn in his clothes. That cleared him and they sent him on to his waiting mother in Chicago.

Some strenuous hunters make a specialty of hunting easy jobs.

Even a tall man may not be above criticism.

SWEET PLEADS FOR SEAL PACT

If the United States had paid $7,200,000 for only the Pribilof Islands, which were given it when this nation purchased Alaska for this amount from Russia in 1867, it would have obtained a bargain, in the opinion of Edwin F. Sweet, of Grand Rapids, who was acting secretary of commerce during part of the Wilson administration.

The Pribilof Islands, the summer rendezvous of Alaskan fur seals, which establish their rookeries there, fell under the care of Sweet, who is now a city commissioner, and it is his contention that the purchase, ridiculed as "Seward's folly" and "a waste of money on rocks and ice, fit only for a polar bear garden," would have been a good investment if the money had been paid only for those two barren little islands, which lie off the coast of Alaska.

St. Paul Island, which was first discovered, is only about 14 miles long and seven miles wide. St. George Island is about 40 miles away and somewhat smaller than St. Paul Island.

The source of Uncle Sam's seal fur industry is on these islands, which are inhabited by a few natives. Reindeer have been introduced, but the food supply limits the number. There are also blue foxes.

The male seals, coming from what is yet an undiscovered place, begin arriving about the first of May. After they take up their places on the shore, their harems begin to arrive.

LEARNS FROM GIRL SHE TAUGHT IN RURAL SCHOOL 20 YEARS AGO

Two decades have turned the tables completely for two women on Western Normal campus. For three months Mrs. Belle Skidmore, of Coloma, who graduated from Western Normal, has been studying principles of teaching under the tutelage of a young woman who more than a score of years ago was her first grade pupil.

It was back in Blanchard, Mich., that Miss Katherine Mason, then a timid little girl, entered upon her school life, and found as the teacher of her chart class a kindly young woman, Mrs. Skidmore. Years elapsed and Mrs. Skidmore went to other schools to teach. Katherine finished high school, went on to college, and finally became a member of the faculty of Western State Normal.

Early in this spring when Mrs. Skidmore enrolled for principles of teaching, the name of her instructor brought back to her memories of a little tow-haired girl who was in her chart class back in Blanchard more than 20 years ago, and the friendship was renewed.

PETOSKEY PREPARES FOR WINTER OF SPORTS

Replies to invitations from the Michigan Winter Sports Committee are pouring in on Chairman W. L. McManus, Jr., of Petoskey, in numbers to indicate clearly that nearly every city and town in the State is interested in helping form and carry out a definite program of winter sports and pastimes.

Petoskey last winter started building ski jumps, toboggan slides, sled slides, snowshoe woods, skating rinks and other things for enjoying the winter out of doors.

Let's Drive the Poultry Thieves out of Michigan

Stealing chickens, ducks and turkeys from the farms of this State has proven so profitable that we are fighting an organized gang of bandits who use motor trucks to rush their spoils to city markets. It has got to stop.

The Michigan Business Farmer has set aside ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00) to be paid in rewards to anyone, including state and county police officers, who secures the evidence and conviction of poultry thieves who steal chickens, ducks, turkeys or guinea fowl from its subscribers.

FIRST REWARD PAID

Frank Watkins, R. 1, Holly, Michigan, was paid the first reward under this offer. The thief he caught served 30 days in the Oakland county jail and paid $65 fine. Frank has $50 to show for ridding Michigan of one poultry thief.

"Prohibition: its Economic and Industrial Effects"

A distinct contribution is being made to prohibition history by Professor Herman Feldman of the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance of Dartmouth College in his survey of the economic and industrial effects of prohibition, which is being published in a series of articles in the Christian Science Monitor.

It is to be hoped that Professor Feldman or the Monitor will publish this survey in book form.

The statement was made by Professor Feldman that his study was ventured upon with no bias or prejudice and that he would record whatever was reported in answer to his series of questions and queries. To date, there have appeared eleven articles; and the testimony is overwhelmingly in favor of the proposition that the effects of prohibition have been beneficial to industry.

Since it is not possible to include the full text of the articles, a brief outline of subject and summary is here given.

1. The first article is introductory.

2. Productivity of the wage earner improves.

3. Opposition of industry to liquor shown to be gradual but definite.

4. Fewer discharges for drunkenness reported by majority of concerns:

"With all the defects of information based chiefly on the observation of executives, there is considerable in the fact that so large a majority of concerns report a reduction in discharges for drunkenness, and that those who see conditions in their plants worse are the exceptional. If industry is having less and less trouble with intoxication, it is reaping the results of a strict prohibition policy of its own that it inaugurated within its walls many years ago. For as shown in a previous article, quite irrespective of the Volstead Act or legislation, industry has been growing more and more generally severe and the industrial euvironment was becoming more and more repressive on the man who overindulged."

5. "Blue Monday" and the saloon went out of business together: "That industry has been suffering a good deal less from irregular attendance caused from overindulgence than it did in the past is the general testimony. Taking into consideration the emphatic statement by executives everywhere, that workers generally are steadier because of prohibition, one is justified in regarding a part of the marked reduction in absenteeism by male wage earners as one of the important industrial advantages to be chalked up in favor of the Eighteenth Amendment."

6. Accidents due to drunkenness show decline during prohibition: "Nothing more definite emerges from the large amount of labor put into the study of this question than the observations of the official organizations and industrial executives. The most significant fact on the issue as to whether liquor has become less of a factor in industrial accidents or more is that fully one-third of all the industrial executives and practically all official authorities credit prohibition with reducing accidents due to liquor, while not a single person encountered, whether personally against prohibition or not, claims that it has made accidents more frequent. In any event, as against the attention which was given the liquor factor in accident prevention a decade ago, as a subject for discussion today it has become passe."

7. Pay envelope now goes into home where once it went into saloon: "The various evidence presented leaves little doubt that for the working population as a whole prohibition has had the effect of increasing the available income. For the great mass of wage-earners drinking as a matter of routine has ceased. Many workers have quit drinking entirely; a very large proportion drink less frequently; and those who make it at home and consume it there are relieved of the costly incidents of overindulgence.

"With the abolition of saloons and the diminution of treating has come the bringing home of the pay envelope. That, as a consequence of this change alone, drink is not depriving the working-class home today of many of the things for which a pay envelope should be used seems to be the quite general observation of industry and of those familiar with conditions of homes."

Jewry's Victory Short-lived

Through out the length and breadth of Michigan the readers know of the recent lawsuit against Henry Ford propagated by the Jews with Aaron Sapiro as chief complainant. Said readers know how Mr. Ford for several years past has attacked the Semitic element (not without good cause) and in his Dearborn Independent he has fathered articles against Jewry which were a long site more amusing than complimentary. Mr. Ford's denunciation especially of Aaron Sapiro leader in farm Bureau deals has caused world wide comment. At least Mr. Ford has succeeded in showing up the Semitics in a way which is entirely new and we might say novel. After this had been going on for awhile the Jews protested but without result; they waxed wroth, and at last a proceeding at law was instituted to recover damages for the "busted" reputations which it was claimed Henry had built for Sapiro and his followers. With vast sums of money on both sides of the suit it looked for awhile as if it were a battle of the giants and there was little if any odds between them, but ere-long a jury had to be summoned; upon this jury were women and as sure as there is a woman in the case something is going to happen—and happen it did. Charges were put up that a member of the jury was unduly influenced, and 'tis no wonder she was; since her sole reason for wanting to be on jury was notoriety. The public is now informed that the great Sapiro-Ford lawsuit involving millions, is settled out of court much the same as a couple of farmers would do in Hillsdale Circuit Court—or out of it. Mr. Ford evidently has found as have many an other publisher that it pays to know what is going into his columns. Further it pays to carefully edit most of this extemporaneous literature before it greets the eye of a critical public.

While we have had it pushed at us for years that the Jew was an outeast—a man without a country, yet it does seem he has something to buy a country with even if he has not the country. We have been told the world hates a Jew; and that begins to look very uncertain since most any one with plenty of money has friends if he has to buy them. Of course in a lawsuit in the State of Michigan we would not expect to see very much sympathy expressed for the lowly Jew, in fact it is a safe bet if Mr. Ford had stayed with his cause he could have drubbed the earth with Aaron Sapiro, but with his usual sense of fair-play he did not care to be victor even if entirely right. Mr. Ford will hereafter let Semitism entirely alone, Mr. Sapiro will let Henry Ford entirely alone and thus the world waggeth on.

Report Of The Sheriff's Office, Week Ending July 16th, 1927

Sunday July 10th, Fremont Donnelly was arrested at Bird Lake. After investigating an auto wreck in Wright Township, to which he was a party, he was charged with driving while intoxicated. To the charge he plead guilty and Justice Aldrich fined him $100 and costs and 2 days in jail.

John Hutchins, Moscow Twp. was arrested in a raid on his farm on the night of July 11th. A quantity of alleged beer, wine and liquor was confiscated. When brought before Justice Aldrich, he waived examination and was bound over to the Circuit Court. Bail of $1000 was not furnished. He's in jail.

Sam Jones, of no place in particular, was arrested Thursday nite July 14th in Hillsdale, and charged with disorderly conduct. Sam turned out to be a "dope" addict of the first water, and when he couldn't have his way, he tried to destroy the Jail, with poor success. Sam is now undergoing a cure at the "red brick hotel".

Burr Wilbur, of Hillsdale was taken to the Kalamazoo State Hospital by the Sheriff on Friday.

An Oakland Roadster, belonging to the Indiana State Police, was recovered by the Sheriff's Department and turned over to its rightful owner, the State of Indiana on Saturday afternoon.

Members of the Sheriff's Department equipped with Search Warrants, raided the farms of Lee Thompson and Claude Wilson, Wheatland Twp. farmers, yesterday evening. A quantity of alleged beer, wine, and "hard likker" was confiscated and returned to Hillsdale, together with the owners and operators of these cases.

Sam Lawbaugh, who lives near Churches Corners, also suffered from a visitation last night. The Sheriff has long been suspicious that Sam engaged in a nefarious business, but Sam managed to stay clear, if not clean. However, Saturday, July 16th, was his unlucky day, for he sold a Deputy Sheriff 2 gallons of colored water, while representing it to be "high power" moonshine, In an hour the Depqty was back with another Deputy and a warrant for Sam, charging him with fraud and misrepresentation. The old game failed to work, and Sam landed in jail after all.

Leroy Mergy, of Hillsdale, reported to the Sheriff that he was held up on Hillsdale St. north of the City at about 11:30 Saturday night and his car, a gray Dort Touring, with black fenders and trim, and his pocketbook was taken from him. The job was done by three men, all of them armed, according to the victim. No traces of the robbers could be found by officers who scoured the vicinity.

No. of prisoners in the County Jail 10. No. under sentence 2. No. awaiting trial 8. Total 10.

NUN DEFENDS MODERN GIRL

Dr. Molloy Says Flapper Is Sound at Heart Despite Her Faults

A defense of the modern girl was made by Sister Mary Aloysius Molloy, A. M., Ph. D., dean of St. Theresa's College, Winona, Wis., during the recent conference of the National Catholic Educational Association, in Detroit.

"The girl of 1927," said Dr. Molloy, "is more genuinely likeable than her sister of 1907. With all her faults, and she has many of them, her sophistication and her pose of worldly-wiseness, she is absolutely frank. Strange as it may seem, she is more idealistic than her sister of earlier and more romantic days. The girl of today has a deeper appreciation of the things of the spirit, and a genuine craving for what may be called, for lack of a better term, the religious sense.

"She wears dresses that are too short and too transparent; she is pert and slangy; she is sadly deficient in the general graces that in an earlier generation characterized the gentlewoman. But she does most of these things because she is without the understanding sympathy and special direction which is her greatest need."

Nuns who are charged with the instruction of the modern girl must neither shirk the duty of discipline nor fall short of their pupil's ideal, Dr. Molloy declared. Consecrated to the service of religion and education, these women cannot afford to compromise the standards to which they themselves are committed, she said.

"The greatest compliment I could pay to the girl of 1927, and at the same time the truest thing that could be said about her, is that down deep in her heart she approves of discipline when it is administered without fear and reacts readily to inspiration."

CATHOLIC CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL ESTABLISHED

Will Relieve Strain on Individual Parishes, Says Bishop Gallagher

Establishment of the first Catholic central high school in Michigan was announced recently by the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit. The school, which will be the first of several units, will open Sept. 7.

The new plan, according to Bishop Gallagher, was adopted in order to relieve the individual parishes of the financial burden of operating their own high schools. Centrally located, it will be accessible to several downtown parishes now maintaining high schools of their own. Transference of pupils from these schools to the new central school will, it is said, release many teachers for work in the grammar grades.

"The central school is not intended in any way to interfere with the larger parish high schools" the bishop said. "But it will provide higher educational facilities for grammar school graduates of those parishes where the maintenance of a high school is not practicable or is a burden beyond the strength of the parishioners. Pupils from any part of the city may enroll in the new school."

The building of the former Cathedral Parish grammar school will house the new institution. It is fully equipped with chemical, physical and biological laboratories and facilities for teaching domestic science and other specialized subjects.

SAGINAW NUNS TRANSFERRED; SUCCESSORS ARE APPOINTED

Saginaw.—After 30 years of service at St. Mary's hospital, the last of which were spent as superior, Sister Eugenia Gill, has retired to the motherhouse of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, at Emmitsburg, Md. She is succeeded here by Sister Vincent, who for 12 years has been at Providence Hospital, Detroit. Sister Eugenia's request for retirement was granted because of ill health which in the past year has grown increasingly serious.

Sister Marie, for 12 years head of St. Vincent's orphan asylum, Saginaw, has also gone to Emmitsburg, where she will receive a new assignment. Her successor is Sister Delphine, who for some years past has headed an orphanage at Troy, N. Y. The transfer was necessitated by a recent law of the order fixing three years as the term of a superioress with six years as a maximum at the same institution.

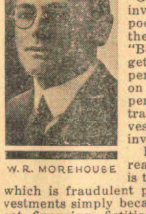
WHY WIDOWS ARE THE SPECIAL PREY OF CONFIDENCE MEN

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

WOMEN are often easy victims for the high-pressure promoter. Widows are especially sought out by the confidence men. Even before their deceased husbands, protectors and counselors are buried the wolves of high finance are waiting outside their doors. They know the defenseless widows will be easy prey. Many a woman today is penniless as a result of making poor investments. "Getting rich quick" for the widow without investment experience is in reality getting poor quick. Once a sharp promoter gets the confidence of a rich widow he has a "Bonanza" as he calls it. Eventually he gets the estate and the widow gets the experience. Widows with estates should be on guard every minute. They are marked persons, with promotion crooks hot on their trail. The best thing that every woman investor can do is to consult her banker before investing.



W. R. MOREHOUSE

Properly cut and set, crystals sparkle in realistic imitation of diamonds. The same is true in the field of finance. There is that which is fraudulent parading as the genuine. Don't buy investments simply because they sparkle. In the realm of wildcat financing, fictitious credentials, testimonials, and references are employed to give setting and genuine appearance. Some are such rank imitations that they are easily recognized, but others defy detection except on the closest investigation by an expert. The only safe procedure is to investigate under competent advice.

Literally millions of dollars are lost to American savers annually as the outcome of buying into something—a fraudulent farm promotion, a business or a job that is nothing more or less than a set-up to catch suckers.

Often the savings of a lifetime are lost by buying unimproved farm lands with the understanding that the seller, or a service company promoted by him, will plant the farm to trees or vines, care for them, market the crop and turn the profits, which, it is promised, will be big, over to the owner. But this dream never comes true. The so-called guaranteed big profits are never realized. If people would only stop long enough to consider all angles of an offer like that before investing they would see the folly of plunging blindly into such a proposition. Let them ask themselves only this one question: "If it is true that such big profits are to be made, why is the seller so eager to part with his property, even to the extent of making it easy for a new owner to farm it?" The answer is that the land is not worth the selling price, nor will the profits derived from it be anywhere near as large as promised.

Buying into the fox business, the poultry business, the dairy business or any kind of business is risky unless you deal with reliable persons or firms whose word is as good as gold. Watch the seller who is insistent in forcing a sale upon you. Look at his proposition from every angle. Just because he makes glowing promises is no assurance that he is not the world's champion exaggerator Extravagant and exaggerated claims are the earmarks of the fake investment. If you want to go into farming or buy into a business, investigate before you invest. Write to the National Better Business Bureau, New York, or consult your local banker. If they are without information on your proposed investment, wait until they can get the facts and report to you. They have no interest at stake except to forestall crooked games.

PINEAPPLE CREAM FROM COWS

"WELL, I see you have canned pineapple for breakfast," said a guest in a Honolulu home.

His hostess looked at him in astonishment, as there was no pineapple on the table.

"It's in this delicious cream," explained her guest. "The dairyman who supplies your cream feeds his cows on pineapple bran."

This is one of the by-products of canned pineapple. Practically all parts of the fruit are used for something in the Hawaiian Pineapple Company's cannery, and pineapple may appear on the table in any one of many forms. The thick, corrugated shell of the pineapple still holds juice and sugar after it has been cut off, and the pie fruit shaved out. These shells go to a department of the cannery where the juice is squeezed out and concentrated for canning syrup.

But some sugar remains in the squeezed shells, for ripe Hawaiian pineapples contain twelve per cent of sugar, and also a percentage of starch. Sugar and starch make excellent food for dairy cows, and for laying hens. So these shells are dried, and become "pineapple bran." This is used not only by Hawaiian dairymen and poultrymen, but a great deal of it is exported to the mainland, for similar purposes. There are many people in Hawaii who like pineapple bran in biscuits and bread.

However, most Americans prefer the juicy fruit meat itself. It imparts a delicate but distinct flavor when mixed into a cake, pudding, ice cream, or candy. As many people like this fruit as an accessory rather than an integral part of a dish, however, the following recipe, suitable for a dessert for a special occasion, is given.

Gala Pineapple Dessert: Use a round tube pan for baking plain sponge cake mixture. Add one-half cup of sugar to one can of sliced Hawaiian pineapple. Boil for fifteen minutes; cool. Arrange cake on serving platter. Pierce with a fork and gently pour syrup into cake until it is permeated with the syrup. Arrange pineapple slices around cake, overlapping the slices. Pile whipped cream on top and serve.

As a "motif" in punch, pineapple affords a distinct and rare flavor, as will be found by anyone trying either of the following recipes.

Mint Pineapple Punch: Chop fresh mint leaves to make one-quarter cupful and rub into them half a cup of powdered sugar. Add three cups syrup drained from canned pineapple, one-quarter cup of lime juice, and three cups of cold water. Let stand in ice-box one hour before serving.

Grape Pineapple Punch: Mix together three cupfuls each of cold water grape juice, the juice of one lemon and juice drained from canned pineapple. Serve with crushed ice.

The sliced pineapple remaining from these recipes may be served in various ways in another meal.

Electric Current Makes Plowing Easy

Science has again lightened the labor of the farm. In England, at the famous Rothamsted Experiment Station, Dr. W. B. Haines and Dr. B. A. Keen have developed a plowing apparatus which moistens the soil to the proper consistency for plowing, as the plow moves through the earth, by means of an electric current. The process was explained and an apparatus for recording the resistance of the soil to the plow exhibited at the recent International Congress of Soil Science, held in Washington from June 13—22.

The plow passes more readily through a moist soil. Moisture, as is well known, acts as a conductor of electricity, effecting a circuit between the positive and negative poles of a charge and producing a condensation of moisture on the negative pole.

Slightly moist soil will also conduct electricity. Thus by attaching to an ordinary plow a small electric generator and by the use of a metallic electrode in the form of a coulter, rigidly suspended a short distance in front of the plowshare to create a positive pole, an electric circuit may be brought about between this coulter and the steel plowshare, which is made the negative pole and receives the film of moisture. This acts as a lubricant to reduce the friction between the blade of the plowshare and the soil and makes the soil slide over the moldboard of the plow more easily

Such a process is simple, and the generator does not greatly increase the weight of the plow.

The old English system of mole drainage for compact and poorly drained sub-soils may also be facilitated in this way. The shell-shaped borer which pushes the soil away from a circular drainage way from 18 to 30 inches below the surface of the soil in this case is made the negative pole and accumulates the friction reducing moisture. This method of making an underground drain is much cheaper than tile drainage, and the circular drainage ways are said to remain open in the earth for 10 or 12 years.

Potato Tour Visits Many State Growers

Many visitors from other states will take part in the state-wide potato tour scheduled from August 8 to 18, according to the statement of members of the farm crops department of M. S. C.

This will be the first time many of the members of the tour have seen the fields which produce the potatoes that they buy yearly. The potato crop of Michigan now finds its way to the markets of most of the States east of the Mississippi, and the buyers of these potatoes are interested in the men and the cultural methods that produce their seed and table stock potatoes

The tour starts with an inspection of the State College experimental plats at 1:00 p. m. August 8. The line of march will then be to Greenville, Big Rapids, Reed City, Tustin, Cadillac, Manton, Traverse City, Kingsley, Bellaire, Alba, Gaylord, Burt Lake, Petoskey, Leyering, Van and Mackinaw City.

At Mackinaw City arrangements have been made to divide the tour so that those desiring to visit the potato areas of Upper Peninsula may do so while the rest of the party continue on to Onaway, Rogers City, Posen, Cathro, and Alpena.

The route through the Upper Peninsula will be St Ignace, Newberry, Seney, Munising, Chatam Skandia, Marquette, Crystal Falls, Champion, Sagola, Iron Mountain Hermmansville, Dagget, Wallace. Bark River, Escanaga, Cooks Mills Manistique, and St. Ignace.

The potato producing sections of Michigan lie in the area where the scenic beauty draws thousands of visitors each year. Side trips to many of the most noted beauty points have been arranged for members of this tour. H. C. Moore, farm crops department, M. S. C. will furnish detailed information to any one interested.

Dairymen To Hold Four State Meets

Dairymen of Michigan will have an opportunity to inspect excellent herds of dairy cattle, to see these cattle judged for type, and to hear nationally known authorities on dairying give brief talks at four special Dairy Days this month, according to the announcement of J. G. Hays, extension specialist in dairying at M S. C.

The Dairy Day meetings will be held at Pontiac, Tuesday, July 26; Kalamazoo, July 27; Ionia, July 28; and Traverse City, July 29.

The first event on the program at each of the meetings will be a judging demonstration at 10:00 a. m. by Prof. John E. Burnett. The animals will be placed as their merit warrants, and then the judge will give an explanation of the points used in determining the placing of the cattle.

R. S. Shaw, dean of agriculture at M. S. C.; O. E. Reed, professor of dairy husbandry at the same institution; E. J. Cooper, extension director for the Holstein-Fresian Association of America; and D. D. Aitken, ex-president of that Association, will appear on the afternoon program each day.

The committee in charge of arrangements for these meetings states that the weather will not be allowed to interfere with the events as it will be possible to carry out the entire program indoors if necessary. Crowds of several hundred are expected at each of the four meetings.

Corn Borer Moths Are Now Emerging

Specimens of this year's corn borer moths have been collected in a field near Erie, Michigan, by federal entomologists, and also at the Monroe experimental station, according to Professor R. H. Pettit, entomologist at M. S. C.

Under average field conditions, corn borers which have escaped destruction during the campaign waged against the pest, are now rapidly changing into moths and taking to flight. It is expected that this process will continue for several weeks.

Corn borer moths measure about three fourths of an inch across the extended wings, according to Professor Pettit, and are yellowish to brownish in color. The insects are normally night flyers. When disturbed during the day, however, they make short flights, close to the ground, for distances of 10 to 20 feet, and eventually seek cover again.

The female moths usually lay their eggs in clusters upon the undersides of the host plant. The eggs of the clusters are deposited in irregular rows, each egg overlapping the adjoining one in the manner of shingles. In four to twelve days, the eggs hatch out into larvae which soon develop into mature corn borers.

It is the young, growing larvae, explains Professor Pettit, which feed upon and seriously damage the corn crop. The finding of the corn borer moths is not to be looked upon with alarm. It is expected that there will always be a few of these moths present. The number however, will undoubtedly decrease after a few years of careful clean-up according to Professor Pettit.

He Saw To It

Bandits are apparently operating in Hillsdale county according to the Hillsdale Daily, which says that a young couple were riding on North Hillsdale street at mid-night Saturday when they noticed a couple of cars parked cross-wise of the road. As they came up a couple of masked men jumped on the running boards with drawn guns ordering them out of the machine. The young man, Leroy Mergy, deserves special commendation for his presence of mind, for he deftly slipped his pocket-book to his companion, Miss Doris Woodruff, unseen by the bandits.

They searched Mergy and were swearing mad because they found nothing. They again menaced the couple with the guns and ordered them to move on toward the city, as the thugs wanted the car. Arriving in Hillsdale Mergy called the Sheriff's office and the scene of the hold-upwas visited. Next day the car was located on Mechanic street but no trace of the robbers. And we must not forget there is honor, even among thieves, as the hold-ups did not even try to molest the young woman. Such gallantry as this harks back to the days of Sir Walter Raleigh.

New Machine Shocks Wheat

While the combine has swept into widespread use in the great plains wheat region, the Northwest farmer is not compelled to go without the labor saving means of his southern brother. A practical grain shocker is being manufactured and sold in large numbers this year, so they say This machine takes the bundles from the binder, collects them in proper position and deposits them on the ground in a well formed shock. One man or boy is required to operate the shocker while one extra horse furnishes all the additional power necessary. It is estimated that this machine will save the services of at least two hand shockers. In addition, it collects and saves scattered grain and broken heads, which were formerly lost on the ground.

FAMED SHIP TO VISIT DETROIT

Old sailing vessels that once braved the gales of the Great Lakes may see another day of glory for "Old Ironsides" may come to Detroit.

If possible, ancient vessels will be taken from their moorings, and with canvas spread, will assist in the general reception for the Constitution, Uncle Sam's most historic vessel. If these old hulks are too far gone, the memories of their days of thrilling voyages will be fittingly recalled.

In history the exploits of the frigate and that of Commodore Perry's Lake Erie fleet of sailing vessels have been linked closely, and Detroiters behind a movement to welcome the Constitution have a half formed plan of observing the Lake Erie victory and the rebirth of "Old Ironsides" at the same time.

The Constitution was one of the six ships authorized by Congress on March 27, 1794. President Washington rushed the construction of the American fleet because of the Union's weakness on the seas. Joshua Humphreys, of Philadelphia, was the designer. The launching was at Hart's Shipyard, Boston.

The first success of "Old Ironsides" and her sister ships effected almost a revolution in the design and armament of foreign war vessels. Her first battery was built in England and bore the stamp "G. R." (George Rex.)

During the recent war great vessels were launched within 30 days after the keel was laid. But in the days of "Old Ironsides" the building of a great ship required more time. More than three years had elapsed from the Congressional authorization to the launching of the Constitution, Oct. 31, 1797.

From the day of her maiden voyage, the great old ship began a record of achievements that has never been outdone by any ship in any navy in the world. Virtually she became a whole navy herself and made famous the commanders who issued orders from her bridge.

STATE'S FINANCES NEAR MARK FOR YEAR AGO

The fiscal year ended with the state's financial condition about equal to that of a year ago, according to O. B. Fuller, auditor general. The general fund has about $1,200,000 on hand, while last year there was in cash $1,5000,000.

The funds now on hand will last only a short time, as a payment of $1,400,000 for interest on state bonds soon will be due. Governor Fred W. Green said he will run the general fund in the red until August, when money from the corporation tax will cover the deficit and supply a balance, rather than borrow money from other state funds.

Fuller will begin checking up on the numerous state funds to determine how much of the $4,600,000 deficiency appropriation will be necessary to cover the deficits, state auditors said will exist.

VETERAN DETROITER TELLS OF HUNTING ON GRAND BOULEVARD

Sportsmen and tourists from the East who journeyed to Detroit in the days of reconstruction following the Civil War, needed to go no further than Milwaukee Junction, now just North Grand Boulevard near St. Aubin Avenue, to plunge into a wilderness teeming with game.

At least, so says William H. Smith, 3432 Baldwin Avenue, who pulled a throttle for the Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee Railroad in 1860, and now at the age of 87, has fond memories of Detroit as it existed in the days following the Civil War.

Many a time flocks of wild turkeys soared up from between the tracks as his train sped north from Milwaukee Junction to Royal Oak.

However, the game life of lower Michigan was by no means confined to turkeys, partridges, deer and squirrel.

The St. Clair Flats at that time teemed with wild duck and all varieties of fish, and was a favorite spot with sportsmen.

Belle Isle in those days was an eyesore, the only tenable portion of it being the lower end. East of the site of the Detroit Boat Club, marshes, flags, bullrushes and muddy sloughs made the island most unattractive, and its rattlesnakes discouraged boatmen from landing upon its shores.

BOOK HOSPITAL USES OLD WAY

Adepts at a book art older than printing itself—bookbinding—are employed by the Detroit library commission, which maintains a department whose sole duty is to keep the library's thousands of volumes in repair.

Rare old volumes, of which the library has plenty, are not entrusted to machines, when they need new covers or rebinding, but to dexterous hands that ply a needle in and out between their leaves with veneration for their age. It was thus that the folios of ancient times, the first books after Gutenburg's discovery and the rare old tomes so laboriously printed by the hands of monks were bound; stitch by stitch with exacting care. It's an art, this sedulous task, requiring knowledge and a love for the work such as was possessed by the members of the guilds.

Its instruments look simple. Just a wooden rack, much like a miniature loom, a needle and binding thread. From the top of the rack are strung pieces of heavy twine, fitting into notches already made in the volume's back. The weaving of the finer threads through the pages of the book and securing them to the heavy string in such a fashion that the book is held intact, is the difficult part.

More than 6,000 volumes find their way into the library's bindery each month on an average, but many of these are handled almost entirely by modern methods; not all of them are treated with the thorough but costly procedure accorded old volumes.

WIND AND RAIN LACK INCREASE HAZARDS OF FIRES IN NORTH

The absence of rain and the continued high winds have greatly increased the danger of forest fires throughout the district, and co-operation is urged by Warden Edward Thalman. Numerous small fires have already been located and suppressed without very great danger or loss of property.

Smokers, campers, fishermen, tourists and other people in general are asked to take special precautions with fire. Anyone locating forest fires is requested by Warden Thalman to report it at once to any conservation officer, towerman, fire or game warden, or, if nearby, telephone central.

All towermen throughout the district have been ordered by Warden Thalman to remain on duty much later than usual through the ensuing dry spell.

Renewing of the 54 miles of fire line constructed in 1926 in district number 12, which includes Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Benzie and Wexford counties, has just been completed and work of constructing a new 15 mile line, averaging 14 feet in width, from East Lake to what is known as Hoppers' Swamp, running east and west through Stronach township, Manistee county, has been started. The purpose of this line is to help protect the growth of jack pine and second growth oak in that part of the county.

HOLLAND FAIR SLATED FOR LATE NEXT MONTH

Secretary Arendshorst, of the Holland Fair association, announces that work has already begun on the annual fair to be held August 23-26. The committees and division superintendents have been appointed. Night fairs will be a feature of this year's program.

Wife Of Detroit's Most Famous Auto Magnate

Henry Ford's likeness appears in the public prints quite frequently—due, of course, to his prominence and frequent mention in the news dispatches.

But it is very rarely, if ever, that you folks glimpse a picture of Mrs. Ford, whose retiring nature has kept her out of the limelight. Many of you, no doubt, wondered "what she looks like." Above is the latest and a most pleasing portrait of her.

$500,000 ASKED FROM FORD IN SUIT INVOLVING PATENT

Suit for $500,000 against the Ford Motor Company has been filed in Detroit by Christian D. Frederiksen, former Ford worker. Frederiksen claims that the motor company used several of his inventions, and never paid him a cent for any of them.

Frederiksen, who worked as a laborer for the Ford company in the tool and diemaking department from May, 1923, to May, 1927, claims that for the past ten years he has been a skilled diemaker. While working for the Ford company, he asserted, he developed a guide for punch presses, suggested the use of different steel in certain types of dies, improved the quality of coil springs, installed a record and reference system, and devised two direct reading indicators.

All of the improvements were put in use by the Ford company, Frederiksen said, with the promise that he would be paid for them, but, he contends, the company never paid him for the extra service.

ASK $10,000 RETURNED FOR MANISTEE ROADS

After a heated controversy between factions representing the northern and the southern townships of Manistee county, the board of supervisors voted to ask that $10,000 on deposit with the state highway department be returned to the county. The money was appropriated by the county board three years ago as the county's share of the cost of improving M-55, the Manistee-East Tawas highway across Michigan.

There was a condition placed upon the fund, that the Brethen route through Manistee county be chosen, while city supervisors and southern townships prefer the route through East Lake and Wellston.

The state and federal governments will determine the route from Cadillac to a connection with U. S. 31.

FIVE HONORS WON BY GIRL IN KENT COUNTY

Five honors were obtained by Miss Eva Hesling, 18-year-old Union high school graduate, who will enter the Grand Rapids Junior College next fall to prepare for a course in journalism at Northwestern University. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hasling of this city.

Among the awards received by the west side high school girl was an inscription ribbon for the highest scholastic record in her class, 95.4 per cent.

Other honors were a school key for extra class leadership in activities outside the class room; the Dillingham memorial award for scholarship and general excellence; a public speaking medal; a gold pin for work on the Unionite, the school publication, and a $50 scholarship given by the Women's University Club for scholarship and general record.

NAILS TRAP AUTOISTS WHO IGNORE DETOURS

Nails are being scattered on dirt coverings of new lime finished concrete pavement in Marquette county to keep motorists off until the curing process of 21 days is finished.

Road employees are instructed to arrest all owners of cars found with punctured tires from special nails easily identified.

Cars have been running around barricades and using the uncured cement roads instead of driving over the detours.

FARM VALUES MORE STABLE

The value of farm real estate in the United States is showing an apparently steady approach toward stability, according to a report on the farm real estate situation for 1926, which has just been issued by the bureau of agriculture, division of land economics. There has been considerable regional variation, however, both in the amount of change since the peak farm real estate prices of 1920, and in the rate at which the change is still taking place.

The bureau's findings are from direct correspondence with farmers, appraisers, farm real estate dealers, land bankers and others in close contact with conditions in the farm lands market. The sampling method has been the only one so far available to the government statisticians.

The bureau's statement bears out directly the situation found by the last annual survey of the farm land situation made by the National Association of Real Estate boards, which reported prices, though having a tendency to advance, fairly stable, at a level below that of 1920, but higher than that of 1914.

A steadily lessening rate of decline is shown by the bureau's information. Index for value of all farm lands with improvements stood on March 1, 1926, at a point slightly greater than 70 per cent of the high point reached in 1920.

Farm values have actually increased in a number of regions.

In current dollars, the March 1, 1926, value of American farm lands was indicated to be slightly above the value total recorded for the same period of 1917, or about 25 per cent above the 1912-13-14 average; but in terms of pre-war dollars this total was approximately 20 per cent below the base period.

In a number of areas this factor has probably already expended most of its influence, the bureau states.

"The rise in farm taxes has been seriously out of proportion to the movement in the prices of farm products," the bureau's report states. "Since taxes form one of the principal costs in farm ownership, the proportion of income required for payment of taxes under post-war price levels has been and will continue to be a factor of no small importance in determining the level at which farm land values will reach readjustment."

"WATSON'S FOLLY" IN GRAND RAPIDS IS TO BE RAZED

The old Major A. B. Watson home in Grand Rapids, erected in 1882 and 1883, a mansion of the past and a historic landmark, is to be razed that the site may be utilized for commercial purposes.

There is a tradition that Major Watson, after having spent such a large sum in erection of the home that he was embarrassed to mention its cost, told one visitor who admired the place that he could see there was only one thing lacking.

"And what could that be?" inquired the guest.

"A parrot," explained Major Watson.

"What use would you have for a parrot?"

"I'd place it right here in the hall, where, every time I walked in the front door, it could look at me and say, 'You damned fool!'" was Major Watson's reply.

The home has been unoccupied for several years, but its quaint charm attracts the attention of thousands who pass by it daily. Among its features was a fountain on the Fulton street front and the profusion of flowers which adorned the front lawn about which ran an iron picket fence.

For many years the widow of the builder continued to reside there and each Memorial day the Civil war veterans were accustomed to gather in the yard and listen to the strains of martial music. The brick barn, in which the Watson horses were quartered, was as arresting as the house.

STATE NORMAL PLAYER GOES WITH WACO TEAM

Lawrence Neuman, second baseman of the Michigan State Normal base ball team for the past year, will report to the Waco team of the Texas League. His home is in Jackson.

Neuman is the second member of the Normal team to report to Manager Derrill Pratt at Waco, the other being Zahn, a pitcher, with the team two years.

COUNTRY LIFE, PARLEY TOPIC

The Michigan State College campus will be turned into a tourist camp to accommodate several hundred visitors from Michigan and other states, who will attend meetings of the Country Life Week, July 31 to August 6.

The college campus is a natural park. Part of the ground in the drill field and near the studium and new armory will be set aside as a tourist camp.

State college officials will make arrangements to provide lighting and water for the tourists. Invitation are being sent out by the hundreds to farmers, urging them to take their vacation at State College.

Most of the motorists will not be the delegates to the some 17 conferences scheduled for Country Life Week, but farmers interested in rural problems and in the college. Farmers' day will be held August 4.

HERE'S WHAT ONE OF US SAYS OF WEATHER IN 1875

The weather? Pooh, you should have seen it in 1875. According to a correspondent of the Indianapolis News that weather froze ice a quarter of an inch thick over the hopes of June and they went to the Fourth celebrations in overcoats. Mentioning "the untoward weather condition this year," he recalls:

"Fifty-two years ago, on Wednesday morning, June 2, 1875, ice more than one-quarter inch in thickness formed in the horse troughs in Southern Indiana. My father cradled wheat July 3 wearing a heavy coat, and went to the July 4 celebration in an overcoat. Ground in August was so soft from excessive rains that we had to carry wheat shocks to the fence and load on to the wagon."

AVIATION HAS STYLE SWAY

The young Parisiennes are wearing the little felt helmets still more since the Trans-Atlantic feat. These are most attractive in all the prettiest pastel shades and intricately cut. Some have wings on either side, others are the regulation aviation cut—one might have one ear-tab—another an ear-tab on either side, and so many bear the stamp of patriotism in the form of an aeroplane ornament, which is smartest in marcasite.

Summer time, and vacation time—and quite time to think of one's resort wardrobe!

Later afternoon calls for a slightly more formal type of gown, yet not quite as formal a one as the afternoon gown for town wear. Lace, printed crepe and chiffon, georgette, all are suitable for the afternoon frock for resort wear.

Evening expects a frock of the dinner gown or party frock variety, and a light informal wrap, squares or shawl, or coat or cape. Seldom is a more formal ensemble than this permissible for resort wear. But, of course, one ascertains the type of clothing that is worn before going to any resorts.

With just a few variations, this outlines the vacation togs pretty well. The variations occur with the choice of a resort, of course. For a mountain resort, for instance, one would probably take a riding outfit and hiking togs.

Every resort has its swimming pool at least, if it is not a beach resort. For the swimming pool, one requires but a chic suit, wrap, two bathing caps—one useful, one to be worn under a more decorative one—and beach slippers. A rubberized bag is indispensable, in which to carry towel, handkerchief, sunburn lotion, comb, powder and money.

But for the beach resort, one requires a more elaborate beach ensemble, which may include even a beach mat, pillows to match, and umbrellas. Here is where the beach costume is useful, not only for Milady who "does not go near the water," but also for Milady who does, but wishes something a bit more comfortable and modest for lounging after the plunge than the type of suit necessary for the swim.

It may be the fad to look like an American Indian, but don't please forget that this fad is liable to be a dangerous one. A deep sunburn injures the skin permanently, coarsens it, and causes freckles, which are more serious than ordinary freckles, to mar it forever. A bit of caution in the way of cocoanut oil on your arms and legs, and vanishing cream on your face before going into the sun will save this, and in no way interfere with the more delicate coat of tan that will be just as effective.

Neckpieces, collars and collarettes have assumed an importance that is interesting. Truly the fox scarf is the ideal finish to a costume, but summer time and certain frocks are more artistically finished with a feather boa, or ruching.

The newest is the black velvet collar of wide ribbon artistically puffed, with a rose stuck in it somewhere. These give such a pretty finish to an afternoon dress, especially one having neither lining nor collar. Several soft panels fall from the collar to the shoulders or the back, and float carelessly down as far as the hips.

WOMEN ARE GAINING GROUND ON STATE UNIVERSITY CAMPUS

The University of Michigan's most treasured tradition is in danger of extinction. For nearly a century the proud boast of Michigan men that few women were to be found in the student body and fewer still were numbered among the faculty has, in recent years, been met with strong opposition on the part of the fairer sex, as evinced by the enrollment figures of the last year.

It was not until the latter half of the nineteenth century that "co-eds" were accorded any sort of recognition, and it was 1900 before they were permitted to engage in any organized form of activity.

Enrollment figures of the university from its inception to the start of the present century show a marked absence of girls, but in the last few years co-ed attendance has grown.

According to figures released at the close of last semester, women constituted approximately two-fifths of the student population. Of the total enrollment of 10,000, more than 3,000 were women, while on the faculty women now hold 45 positions, ranking from professors to instructors.

SLEEPY DRIVER WHO HIT STORE PAYS $100 FINE

State troopers arrested Edward Organof, of Ludington, who pleaded guilty in police court to reckless driving. While driving through the village of Bear Lake at night, he became sleepy, he said, and crashed into a store front, causing several hundred dollars damage. He drove away before the night watchman could identify him. A lost hub cap led to his apprehension. He paid a fine of $100.

Dr. Caldwell's 3 Rules Keep You Healthy

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time regardless of how much one tries to avoid it. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not a habit forming preparation. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it. It does not gripe. Thousands of mothers have written us to that effect.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when a medicine like Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly, more cleanly and gently, without griping and harm to the system.

Keep free from constipation! It robs your strength, hardens your arteries and brings on premature old age. Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to a druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Take the proper dose that night and by morning you will feel like a different person. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Always have a bottle in the house, and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open.

AT AGE 83

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

LOGGING LAGS IN GHOST TOWN

Dollarville, a small lumber village east of Munising, after years of extensive logging operations, is doomed to join the band of ghost towns left behind in the upper peninsula as memories of a waning industry.

All that remains for the little village is a brief revival while the last stand of marketable timber is being cut, and then—oblivion, with the undergrowth springing up to choke the streets and front yards of desolated homes.

The recent purchase by Brewster Loud, of Detroit, and Sam McPhail, of West Branch, of the old mill at Dollarville, together with the village and timber and the holdings of the South Shore Cedar Company, is believed to have sounded the knell of the little town's existence.

A portable sawmill will be installed to slice the timber into lumber. Operations already have commenced. After three or four more years' work for the men, all of the timber will have been removed, and the history of another famous lumbering town will be brought to a close.

Romance has bloomed and faded in the little village during its 55 years of life. Twenty-five or thirty families still live there, but everywhere there are unmistakable indications of stagnation and decay. The new logging operations will be but the Indian summer of its existence, and when the new concern has pulled stakes, Dollarville will vanish, as dozens of other lumber towns have vanished in Northern Michigan after the timber was cut.

The history of Dollarville started in August, 1872, when the land on which the village now stands was purchased by David Preston and John L. Harper. This was when Luce county was still a part of Chippewa county and a decade before a tree was cut at Newberry. The Preston-Harper company later disposed of its property to the American Land Company, a Scotch concern, of which Robert Dollar, formerly of Marquette and now a ship owner, was a member and manager.

When the large saw mill, built on the Tahquamenon river, was completed and ready to run, it was found that there was no timber to cut. The trees belonged to another concern, which refused to do business with the American Land Company, and the firm failed. The Peninsular Land Company of Detroit, of which Palms and McMilllan were members, then took over the concern.

This company rebuilt the mill and platted the village in 1887, and was ready to start operations when it was discovered that its charter did not permit it to cut timber. The Dollarville Company was organized and the village began a prosperous era.

NEW CONTRACT IS PATH TO FREEDOM FOR PARIS SERVANT

The Paris house servant is in a fair way to becoming spoiled. A labor contract just drawn up, signed and sealed, reads:

"The lady of the house engages herself to treat with all the desired solicitude her new domestique, Mademoiselle Emma. She will accord her two hours every day to go to her courses in clothes-cutting, stenography, piano playing and singing.

"Her wages will be 350 francs (about $14) a month for the first three months, with an increase of 25 francs every month at the end of the fourth, up to the limit of 600 francs monthly. The new servant shall have the right to use the bathroom twice a week.

"Mademoiselle Emma will not be called by her first name, but 'Mademoiselle.'

"She must be aided by a chambermaid or char-woman, according to the needs of the household."

9 MICHIGAN YOUTHS DUE AT WEST POINT

Nine Michigan youths are due at West Point, for admission to the U. S. military academy, under congressional appointments. They were: Donald B. Webber, Ewald Sheiwe, Jr., Terence R. Hickey, Kenneth A. McCrimmon, Andrew Meulenberg, Harry K. Wakeley, Phineas H. Adair, Leo P. Kreus, and Edward J. Timberlake, Jr.

SOVIET LEARNS FORD METHODS FROM FILMS

A moving picture film of the Ford motor plant in Detroit is going the rounds of Soviet factories, under the auspices of the commissariat of education. The film illustrates the labor saving devices and the system of production of the motor manufacturer, which are held to be models toward which Soviet industry should strive. Several Russian workmen who were permitted to visit the Ford plants and who spent several months there as workers, accompany the film and deliver explanatory lectures.

TWO BOYS HOME FROM WORLD TOUR ON $100 BANKROLL

Carl Boerhringer and Robert Powers, two Michigan State college graduates, who started out April 2, 1926, to see the world with $100 each, have returned to East Lansing with the information that the biggest thrill of their tour was when the car in which they were riding skidded into a ditch just outside of Toledo, O.

"Being threatened by Chinese soldiers in Chantung province, subsisting on stale beer and Chinese rice for four days, being jobless in Shanghai for two months, arrested as suspicious characters in Borneo, broke in Singapore, and deported from England, all haven't very much on the continual hazards of American highways," they said.

"About the worst trip we made was a steerage passage on a French ship from Alexandria, Egypt, to Marseilles. The blue Mediterranean was rather rough, our bunks occupied by seasick soldiers, and our meals consisted of bread, stews that contained everything but the ship's cat, and cheap red wine. We attempted to sleep on the luggage stacked on deck, but found it densely occupied with all the creeping and biting things that are known to botanists and frequenters of cheap lodging houses."

FORMER KENT MAN IS HONORED IN MINNESOTA

Through its Women's Relief corps, Worthington, Minn., has erected a memorial in honor of George N. Stoddard, Civil war veteran, a former resident of Kent county.

The Worthington post of the Grand Army of the Republic is named after Stoddard, who was born in Vermont in 1810, who enlisted with the New York troops and who, following the war, took up residence in Kent county near where Rockford is now located. He died April 23, 1872, in Worthington.

The memorial is a shaft of Rainbow granite taken from the Sacred Heart, Minn., mines.

Stoddard was instrumental in selecting the name of Nelson township, Kent county, and is said to have walked 30 miles to Grand Rapids with a petition to designate the township by that name.

Of his five children, George S. Stoddard, now residing in Big Rapids, is the only survivor.

ANTRIM EAGLE SCOUTS IN REFORESTATION PLAN

Eagle Scouts of Michigan are carrying on the largest reforestation project in Antrim county. With the addition of 60,000 pine trees recently, the plantings on the grounds of Camp Hayo-Went-Ha, on Torch lake, total 200,000 white, Norway and Jack pine trees. The number is to be increased annually until all the cleared lands of the 300-acre camp site are growing new pine forests.

The hills and frontage on Torch lake already are covered with natural second growth.

POTATO MEN TO TOUR STATE NEXT MONTH

Representatives from all over Michigan, as well as from other states which furnish markets for Michigan potatoes, will make a tour of the state, starting from State college August 9.

A committee representing various interested organizations has been appointed to take complete charge.

The tour will include principal cities in the potato growing section, including Greenville, Big Rapids, Cadillac, Traverse City, Petoskey, Cheboygan, Alpena and a number in the upper peninsula.

Represented on the committee will be the state department of agriculture, Michigan Potato Growers' exchange at Cadillac, Michigan Crop Improvement association and independent potato growers.

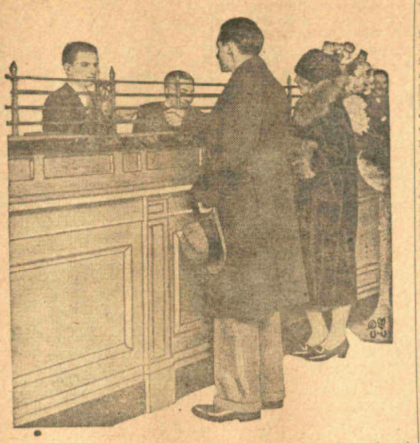
Tellers No Longer "Caged" In New York Bank



The new branch of the Hamilton National Bank in New York City, housed in a new building, has something new in the way of banking equipment. It has posted its tellers behind counters, rather than follow the old established custom of having them work in so-called thief-proof cages.

As the photo above shows, there is nothing between the teller and customer now but the width of the counter and a plain ornamental grille. Its designers decided that there was no protection from holdup in the old-style cages, hence, hit on this idea.

CROP PERILED BY ARMY WORM

Precautionary measures by Michigan farmers now will save serious losses from the inroads of a threatened invasion by the army worm.

Farmers will be able to discover the presence of the army worm in their fields by examining the oats in low spots. The army worm is a cut worm and prefers to have its food wilted before eating it. It cuts the leaves from the oat plants during the night and hides under clods or rubbish during the day.

If oats show that army worms are present, the area where the damage is being done should be plowed immediately to keep the worms from maturing and spreading to a larger area, according to entomologists. Although the loss of leaves from the oats may not appear serious at first, specialists say the worm later will eat the top of the oat plant. Unless the worms are brought under control, the field may be lost, according to specialists.

Preparing now will stop the worm before the myriads are ready to start their devastating march through Michigan crops. When once the march is begun, control measures are difficult and expensive, and the crops are completely destroyed.

PROTECT BLUE GILLS IS PLEA OF O'LEARY

D. E. O'Leary, conservation officer of Marshall, Mich., urges anglers to stay away from the blue gill beds until when, he believes, they will have finished their spawning.

"Owing to the fact that this is an unusual summer," O'Leary writes, "the blue gills are late in spawning. I have made a survey of the lakes in Calhoun county and find that the blue gills have just started to clean the beds.

"If this is the condition in Calhoun county, it is more than likely to be the same all over southern Michigan. To conserve and protect our blue gills, fishermen should keep away from the blue gill beds. If they insist on fishing the beds and catching the limit it will take several years to overcome the loss."

HEAD OF LAKE ODESSA HOLDS 3 OTHER JOBS

The Village of Lake Odessa has for its president a man who perhaps holds the most offices in any town of its size in the state. Ermil Garlinger, 32 years old, recently elected president for the third time, also is deputy sheriff of Ionia county and is a member of the board of education.

MUSKEGON HIGH SCHOOL STAGE LARGEST OF KIND

The largest high school stage in the United States.

That is one of the many outstanding features of Muskegon's new Senior High School and Junior College building, completed less than one year ago at a cost of $1,000,000. Today the new building, located on the Central Campus of 14 acres near the heart of the city, is one of the show places of the country from the educational standpoint.

The building itself, covering one and one-half acres and providing 44 rooms in addition to corridors and small extra rooms, attracts favorable attention. Yet, it is the many new features included in the school which makes it stand out as the last word in educational buildings.

POTATO PARADE TO MARK RETURN OF SPEED AS KING

The return of King Spud to Greenville, the potato capital of Michigan, will be celebrated next fall with a big potato parade through the business section of the city Armistice Day. The pageant will be a feature of the Greenville Potato Show Nov. 10 to 12.

A special chariot will be constructed to transport King Spud at the head of the parade. Progress of the potato industry in Michigan and in particular, will be illustrated in the pageant.

Special floats will be in line showing old and new types of potato machinery. Horse and tractor drawn planters and diggers will be in contrast with the old hand methods of planting and harvesting.

No earthly tax dodger need hope for a clear title to a mansion in the skies.

SAPIRO TRIAL SEPTEMBER 12

Retrial of Aaron Sapiro's $1,000,000 libel suit against Henry Ford and the Dearborn Publishing company, publishers of the Dearborn Independent, was ordered to begin September 12 by Judge Fred M. Raymond, of Grand Rapids.

This date, Judge Raymond explained, is subject to change, pending efforts of Sapiro's counsel to have the retrial before Judge Edward J. Moinet, who will be sworn as the third federal judge of the eastern district of Michigan.

Judge Raymond, in answer to request of Williams Henry Gallagher, Sapiro's attorney, for an early trial, explained that his judicial duties in the western district will keep him busy all summer. He expressed willingness, however, to have the trial heard before another judge.

Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, chief of the Ford counsel, offered objection to any change in judges on the ground that much time would be lost by such a move. He also objected to trying the case too soon, saying that his physical condition was not such that he could stand trial work in the heat of the summer.

A verbal encounter occurred when, in answer to Gallagher's statement that the mistrial was declared on unfounded accusations, Senator Reed replied that the charges were filed in good faith.

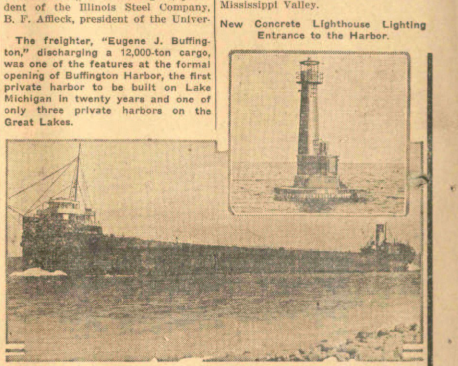
Vice President Dawes Opens New Lake Michigan Harbor

Vice President Charles G. Dawes.

Vice President Charles G. Dawes last week, following the official vice-presidential salute of 19 guns, raised the flag over Buffington Harbor, Indiana, thus signifying the formal opening to navigation of the first private harbor to be built on Lake Michigan in twenty years, and one of only three such harbors on the Great Lakes. In addition to the vice president, William R. Dawes, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, E. J. Buffington, president of the Illinois Steel Company, B. F. Affleck, president of the Universal Portland Cement Company, and a number of other notables took part in the ceremonies.

This new deep-water harbor, located at the plant of the Universal company, is said to be one of the most modern on the Great Lakes, there being a large boat-unloading bridge, a million-ton storage yard for raw materials, an electrically operated conveyor nearly a mile long to carry material from dock to cement plant, and an all-concrete lighthouse with one of the brightest beacons on Lake Michigan.

The new improvement adds impetus to the deep-waterway movement and the further enlargement of lake traffic, and enables the cement company to receive by boat and store large quantities of raw materials and to ship cement by water as well as by rail to all points on the Great Lakes and the Mississippi Valley.



The freighter, "Eugene J. Buffington," discharging a 12,000-ton cargo, was one of the features at the formal opening of Buffington Harbor, the first private harbor to be built on Lake Michigan in twenty years and one of only three private harbors on the Great Lakes.

New Concrete Lighthouse Lighting Entrance to the Harbor.

OVER in Hawaii, where morning-glories bloom all day long and the night-blooming cereus lives but one glorious moonlight night to die with the first rays of the morning sun, spring-time is a very different affair from our northern spring.

In a land of perpetual summer, naturally the role of spring seems a bit difficult. To the Northerner, who has left the land of tiny buds and pale green grass to get off the steamer at Honolulu, some April morning, it seems that all Hawaii is in bloom. Large trees are dotted with the brilliant red of African tulips; golden-shower trees vie in splendor with red and white ginger blossoms; red and purple bougainvillea cover the high fences, and the salmon and white of oleander is everywhere.

Yet to the Hawaiian this is spring—a promise of greater fullness to come.

The native guide cautions the tourist not to pick the flaming red lehua flower for then the day will be rainy. If the temptation is too great and the tourist plucks the flower, the shower inevitably follows, according to the guide, and it is then necessary to return to the tree and take another blossom to avert more rain.

The rainy season has just ended and the natives have no desire to prolong it, knowing that May, June and July constitute the fairest season. The mango, the avocado, the pineapple and the guava are already ripening. Making the most of these sunshiny days, Hawaiian boys are weaving the big hats that are to protect them from the summer sun to follow. Girls with baskets of fragrant ginger blossoms and lavender jackaranda string leis which they will take to the beaches to sell.

There they will join the jovial, jostling lei-women vending armsful of vari-colored flower wreaths. The beaches are a glorious place in May. Brown-skinned Hawaiian boys ride the surf boards alongside of sugar-kings and coffee-magnates. Women from all parts of the world sport in the surf with Hawaiian maidens, whose lithe bodies are the envy of all. A charging platoon of native girls, standing erect on racing surfboards, propelled shoreward by no other power than the force of a giant wave, is a sight worth watching.

Life everywhere seems to be lived in the open. Even the dancing, with native orchestras is outside on the broad lanais or verandas. Here tables are set at teatime and one enjoys delicious foods strange to most visitors, such as the papaia, a delicious golden-meated melon that grows plentifully on trees the year around. There are, in season, luscious mangoes, passion fruit and avocado, and pineapple every day in the year.

Out on the hills of Oahu and Maui, the new crop of pineapples are ripening in the sun. On the distant slopes the plantations resemble magic carpets whose perfect tapestry patterns stretch away to the sunset. Closer inspection reveals these patterns to be symmetrical rows of spike-edged plants—armored to protect a rare treasure within. This treasure, a few weeks before, was a blossom, not unlike our purple thistle. But the magic of April breezes, and tropical sunshine are slowly transforming it into fruit.

By July, the treasure which has been so stoutly protected by the spear-pointed leaves and so carefully tended by brown-skinned workers, will be transformed into a golden pineapple, such as only Hawaii produces. Eighteen long months of ripening, unhurried, nurtured by tropical sun and salt-laden breezes from the sea, have stored away a wealth of health-giving riches. To retain these riches the pineapple will be quickly put into cans and shipped to ports in every part of the world.

It is only at the harvest season when the fields are golden and the verdure densely green that the Northerner can realize, as the Hawaiian does, that spring-time in Hawaii with all its foilage is, after all, only a promise of the fullness of summer.

State Farmers Get New Crop Varieties

A new variety of barley, an improved wheat, and a promising strain of biennial sweet clover, have been developed at M. S. C. are ready for trial by Michigan farmers, according to announcement of J. F. Cox, professor of farm crops.

The barley is a smooth-awned white variety that is the result of 14 years of M. S. C. experimental work. Michigan black barbless barley also has smooth awns, but the color of the grain made the variety unpopular with some farmers.

The new barley, which will be called Spartan, is two-rowed and has a stiff straw which resists lodging. The heads in this variety stand erect on the straw, thus avoiding any loss of heads in cutting the grain.

To meet a demand from the Michigan Millers Association, State College has worked with O. A. C. wheat and has a high yielding strain ready for release to the seed growers of the State. This wheat produces a flour especially adapted for pastry making.

A strain of sweet clover that promises to be better than previous sorts for a pasture crop is the result of a discovery of a single plant by a Cheboygan county farmer. The increase from this plant has been carefully grown on the College plats, and is now ready for trial on Michigan farms.

INDIANS FEARED CURSE ON FIELD

One of the most interesting places in the vicinity of Imlay City is a field just over the line n St. Clare county known as 'Stony Corners". A large field is so filled with rocks of varied size, shape and color that no attempt has ever been made to till the tiny patches of soil between the stones.

There is an old legend, handed down from the dim and misty past to the effect that once, long before the coming of the white man, a tribe of Indians then inhabitating this section was at war with the tribe just south.

A band warriors became separated from their fellows and took possession of the field of stones, hiding behind the big boulders, each man with a sharp piece of stone in his hand. . There they waited for two days and two nights, when the pursuing foe overtook them, but were unaware of their presence.

Without a word being spoken or a sound being made, the Indians who were hiding in the rocks jumped out, taking the on coming warriors by surprise, and in that fraction of second each man struck another down every member of the on coming party being killed..

This so displeased the 'Great Spirit" that a curse was laid on the field and the words were proclaimed from the sky that henceforth nothing but stones should grow in the field.

And it is a noticeable fact that even the usual vegetation in the field is very spare.

Whether there was any truth in the old legend the Indians shunned the place as though a pestilance haunted it. making wide detours to avoid passing near it.

It is said, too, that wild cries came from the region in after years though many who did not believe in the story said the weird sounds that seemed to float over the place came from wolves.

Although the Indian name "Wekonistan', meaning the place of death, it gradually grew into "Stoney Corners" by which name it is still known..

VOLUNTEER GUARDS AIM AT "NO DEATHS" AT PT. HURON BEACH

With the seventh summer season of its activities now under way the Port Huron Aquatic club which claims the credit of keeping the municipal bathing beach free of drownings for the past six years is about to enlarge its scope of activities which, according to Richard H. Wilder, president, already have been called to the attention of Governor Fred W. Green. .

The organization was effected in the summer of 1921 when a number of fatalities took place at Lakeside beach, where just the city life guard was on duty.. Mr. Wilder, John Gaines, and Glen H. Davis, former secretary of the Y. M. C A. began the first organization which was known as the Por t Huron Swimming Instructor's club. With that much of a start a number of youthful swimmers were attracted into the organization and trained in life saving methods.

These boys act as a volunteer guard to assist the city guard.

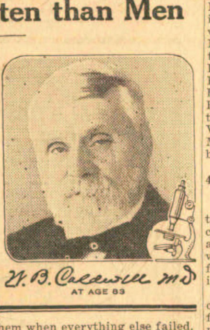
Doctor Finds Women and Children are Sick More Often than Men

As a family doctor at Monticello Illinois, the whole human body, not any small part of it, was Dr. Caldwell's practice. More than half his "calls" were on women, children and babies. They are the ones most often sick. But their illnesses were usually of a minor nature--colds, fevers, headaches, billiousness — and all of them required first a thorough evacuation. They were constipated.

In the course of Dr. Caldwell's 47 year's practice (he graduated from Rush Medical College back in 1875 he found a good deal of success in such cases with a prescription of his own containing simple laxative herbs with pepsin. In 1892 he decided to use his formula in the manufacture of a medicine to be known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and in that year his prescription was first placed on the market.

The preparation immediately had as great a success in the drug stores as it previously had in Dr. Caldwell's private practice. Now, the third generation is using it. Mothers are giving it to their children who were given it by their mothers. Every second of the working day someone somewhere is going into a drug store to buy it. Millions of bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin are being used a year.

Its great success is based on merit, on repeated buying, on one satisfied user telling another. There are thousands of homes in this country that are never without a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and we have gotten many hundreds of letters from grateful people telling us that it helped them when everything else failed.



W. B. Caldwell MD

AT AGE 83

While women, children and elderly people are especially benefited by Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin it is promptly effective on the most robust constitution and in the most obstinate cases. It is mild and gentle in its action and does not cause griping and strain. Containing neither opiates nor narcotics, it is safe for the tiniest baby. Children like it and take it willingly.

Every drug store sells Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsn. Keep a bottle in your home, where many live someone is sure to need it quickly.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin", Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

2 FAITHS WORSHIP 50 YEARS IN SAME ARGENTINE CHURCH

Through more than half a century, two religious denominations of Argentine, Mich., have conducted services in the same church, and in later years under the same minister.

The first settlement in that locality was made in the fall of 1835 when James Murry and his wife located on land where the village stands and built a dam across Orr creek. Eight years later, the first religious services were conducted in the private homes of the settlers by Rev. Sutton, a Methodist Episcopal minister. A Methodist Epiccopal class was organized in Februrary 1869 by Rev. J. W. Holt with B. C. Whitney as the class leader.

In 1877 the church building was erected wherein religious services have since been held each Sunday. A large number of settlers belonging to the Presbyterian sect were pioneer residents of the township, and the two religious denominations joined forces.

From the beginning the same chuch was used, under two ministers one of each denomination who held services alternately. In church attendance, in contribution to the welfare of the church and of the community the two sects were as one.

LAPEER PLANS TO OUST HOBOES FROM HAVEN

Elimination of "Hobo Camp Leven", famous haven for 'knights of 'the road," is under discussion by the Lapeer Commercial club, which is co-operating with the Michigan Central freight department and Captain Max of the Michigan Central police force.

Camp Leven first came into being many years ago when the late Oliver Wattles eccentric banker and philanthropist, owned the land where it is located. He helped build a shack where the "Weary Willies" might rest unmolested. Oftentimes he would load a basket with sandwiches and walk over to the camp, sit around the fire and listen to the tales of adventure as related by these "globe trotters" many of whom came year after year to Lapeer.

The shack burned down ten years ago, but the site is still used.

BAY CITY MARKS ITS OLDEST HOUSE

The motorists who passes thru the streets of Bay City the Gateway of the North," will spurt through the manufacturing districts of Water street, dotted mostly with sawmills, and notice a dull colored house, large and square, set high from the ground at the intersection of Twenty-fourth street.

Above the first floor windows of the house on the water street side, a sign reads; "Oldest House in Bay City, Erected in 1836, Marked by Anne Frisbe, Fitzhugh, Chapter D. A. R.

The name 'Center House" is on the building and carved nearby, the date "A. D. 1836." As a further proof of its age is a sign tacked above the front door showing the house was insured by a New York firm which left the city many years ago.

Part of the wood that entered into its construction back in 1836, was hand hewn by Nathan Case, of Saginaw, who contracted for building the house. The doors having long narrow panels and heavy brass locks. Though it is said that a part of the lumber for the house came by water from Detroit and that the freight cost only $4, while the wood itself cost $16 per 1,000 feet some of it was cut in front of the house.

Some of the stone for the foundation, originally underground, but now exposed due to grading for Water street came from the reef of shale at Charity island, whence fishermen brought it in their sail boats. Other stones came from Grindstone city in Huron county. The front steps which led to the double front door have been torn down as has a side porch.

In June, 1917 Bayne a son of the late James Bayne of Grand Rapids. sailed for France, where he hoped to become a members of the Escadrille in which Campbell was already fighting.

Information relative to Cotey's fall and his death was conveyed to Bayne before the latter mastered the air craft. The death of his pal served only to accelerate Bayne's determination to get to the front, where he hoped to avenge Campbell's fate. He trained at Tours and then at Avon took a course in the acrobatic school at Pau and won his way into the aerial gunnery school where only the most proficient were admitted. He was at the front by March 1, 1918, and soon became noted for his daring

Offices in the city hall occupied by the Boy Scout organization and the secretary of State's motor vehicle bureau will be utilized for the alarm system..

This is known as the Canadian National Exposition and represented an expenditure of more than $21,000,000 on permanent building and plant. There are some eighty permanent buildings, mostly of brick or stone occupying a 350 acre site with a mile and a half frontage on Lake Ontario with wide board walks, driveways and beaches. The exhibition itself attracts more than a quarter million persons a day during the height of the season, of which many thousands are Michigan motorists taking their vacation at that time.

Wayne enjoyed 18,330.000 person days of automotive safety. Trailing close behind, Davenport, Iowa, has made a record of 15,325,000 person days without an auto fatality up to and including June 27.

Q.— Dear Dr. Dunn: If I loan my car to a friend, and the friend while driving it negligently injured someo ne else, can the injured person hold me liable for the damage?

A.— Yes. There is a statute in Michigan which makes the owner civilly liable for the negligent operation of the car if it s driven with the owner's knowledge and consent..

Q.— Dear Dr. Dunn.: Under the circumstances stated above, would my insurance ordinarly protect me?

Yes.— The ordinary standard insurance policy would protect your liability under such circumstances

Q. — Dear Dr. Dunn: What causes fuses to blow out frequently?

A.— The fuse is a safety valve for the electric circuit. When the circuit is overloaded, that is, when too many lights and appliances are connected to it, the fuse blows out, shutting off the curret and prevent ing the wires from becoming overheated. With the 110 volt circuit used in most homes no fuse of more than 10 amperes should be used. If the fuses blow out frequently there is something wrong with the instal lation. Do not use larger fuses but have the wiring inspected.

Q.— Dear Dr. Dunn: About how many of the victims of automobile accidents are children under fifteen years of age?

A.— Approximately 31 per cent of all persons killed by automobile are children under 15 years of age.

BROWN CITY DIGS FOR TREASURE WHEN GIRL FINDS MONEY

The discovery of a cache of small bills and currency on a lot in back of the bank has given Brown City 'buried treasure" was discovered by its first tohch of gold fever. The 11 year old Ethel Schause, who stumbled over a piece of wooden moulding on which was written;,

"And under this board you will find a little hole. Dig down and you will find some gold. It is yours

Ethel, her sister and a little friend started to investigate and after a few minutes digging uneathed about $150 in curerncy.. Subsequent efforts on the part of Ethel mother resulted in the finding of several one dollar bills and currency which brought the total to about $15.00 mo.re.

The money does not appear to have been buried long, although the ground nearby is packed tight, as if undisturbed for a long time. It is buried in widely-separated spots with a few coins here and there.

Brown City now spends most of its time digging in the lot in the rear of the bank.

STUDIES SMELT TO LEARN WHAT BAIT TO USE IN SUMMER

Prof Charles W. Creaser of the College of the City of Detroit, has been conducting experiments in Crystal Lake to determine just why the imported smelt, that congregate by the millions in Cold Creek during their spring run, refuse to respond to the baited hook of resident fishermen.

Prof. Creaser, believes that the smelt can be caught in the summer months if the proper bait is used and the habits of the fish were known.. However, while the fish have been caught through the ice in the winter in great numbers and removed b ythe ton during the spawning run up Cold Creek in the spring, no success has been reported in catching them during the summer months.

It is hoped that as a result of Prof. Creaser's investigation smelt fishing may become one of the summer sports at Bulah. According to Prof. Creaser the idea that smelt stay in deep water during the summer is erroneous as is proved by the fact that early in the fall he netted many of them in water only 15 feet in depth and close to the shore.

When Prof. Creaser has finished his study on the smelt in Crystal Lake he will turn his attention to smelt in Lake Michigan. It is known that the smelt are in Lake Michigan and it is believed that they were carried over the outlet by the current from Crystal Lake and down Bestie River to Lake Michigan. If the fish multiply as rapidly in Lake Michigan as in Crystal Lake t will be onl ya short time untill smelt will become an important commercial fish with an annual run up the various streams on the same scale as those of the Atlantic and Pacific coast..

The question of the effect of the rapid increase of smelt on the other finsh is one causing the state conservationists much study. In previous investigations by Prof. Creaser itwa s found that more than 97 per cent of the food of the smelt in Crystal Lake was shiners. In Lake Michigan the young of the lake herring seemed to be the favorite food.

CHICAGO COPS DRANK BOOLTEGGER'S PROFITS

Charles Coffey alleged slayer of Corporal Samuel Mapes of the state police, requested a change of revenue when taken from the Kalamazoo jail and arrainged before Circuit Judge Clayton C. Johnson at Centerville..

He entered a plea of not guilty to a charge of murder. He declared he had no funds with which to employ a lawyer to defend him.

Coffey said he would have had enough money to pay for his defense if the Chicago cops had not drank up $3,000 worth of my whiskey.

FISHERMEN'S PARADISE IS FOUND IN LAKE COUNTY

Every once in a while something new happens under the sun. For instance, somebody finds a wonderful new fishing ground in a place where it wasn't even suspected a fish lived. Such a place is an unnamed little lake near Baldwin, in Lake county. One such place recently was found there, fisherman catching the limit in a short time. Lake County has several wellstocked lakes, some comparatively unknown.

You can't bet foot notes out of the shoehorn.

FORT WAYNE SOON TO BE ABANDONED

Fort Wayne, on the west side of Detroit, the camping grounds of United State[illegible]ldiers since the early part of 1800, is to be abandoned and the property will be sold by the government. Where Indians once roamed and Yankees fought Red Coats, as well as the Indians, manufacturing plants no doubt will rise and the smoke from huge stacks will replace that of earlier campfires.

According to unofficial information received from the War Department, the troops of the Second Battalion, Second Infantry, Sixth Division, under the command of Maj. Max B. Garber, now stationed at the fort, are to abandon it by June 30.

The Fort was named after Gen. Anthony Wayne—sometimes called "Mad Anthony"—and its site was the camping ground of the troops gathering for the Black Hawk War, and also of the forces engaged in the Patriot War of 1838.

The first appropriation of $50,000 for its construction was made on Aug. 4, 1841; in 1842 the Government purchased 23 acres, and in 1844 an additional 43 acres was procured. The fort was begun in 1843 and completed about 1851.

A detachment of quartermaster troops will remain at the fort long enough to pack and ship government property to other stations. Then the fort will be locked up. Pending its sale by the Government it will undoubtedly be in charge of civilian caretakers, Maj. Garber said.

In the early days of Detroit, Fort Wayne was the center of the social life. The officers of the garrison entertained their friends in Detroit who drove out to the fort for dinners and ceremonies. Although it was only said to be four miles from the city hall, it was quite a drive with a horse and buggy then. A number of officers' wives stationed at the fort came from Detroit's best families. They are all old ladies now and their husbands, if alive, are colonels or generals.

Maj. Garber, the last commanding officer of the fort, will write finis to the record begun by Lieut. U. S. Grant. During the construction of the fort the troops were housed in Detroit under the command of Lieut. Grant, who later became a famous Civil War general and President of the United State[illegible]

NOTED NOVELIST QUITS STATE DUE TO ILLNESS

W. J. Muilenberg, whose novel, "Prairie," published in the United States and England in 1925, was heralded by literary critics in both countries as a powerful story of farm life in the middle west, has been forced to retire from his position as instructor in the English department at Michigan State College because of ill health.

Professor Muilenberg, on the advice of his physician, has gone to his home at Glennie, a farm in northern Michigan near Lake Huron, to rest and recover from an illness characterized as a "nervous breakdown."

Several of his classes will be taught by Miss Katherine Hume, of Lansing, graduate of the college.

ENGLISH STARLINGS ARE REPORTED IN MICHIGAN

Evidence of the existence of English starlings in Southern Michigan is presented by W. C. Starck, of Detroit. Although this exotic was introduced into America several years ago, its presence west of the Alleghanies has seldom been recorded.

"Last year," says Mr. Starck, "my brother and myself saw 12 starlings near Jack Miner's. We saw two at Grosse Isle just recently. We are both from the East and are perfectly familiar with this bird, and our identifications were positive.

"As to their habits, we have never observed them as being quarrelsome as they nest in Bronx Park, New York, together with the warblers, bluebirds, grosbeaks and sparrows. In the spring their food is similar to our robin, and they pick up innumerable worms and grubs from lawns."

ALLED TOOL IN FIRE FACES ACCUSED MAN

With Earl Childs appearing as the state's chief witness, at Allegan, James L. Eckert, charged by the state with complicity in the Macatawa park fire plot, was confronted by his alleged tool in his preliminary examination. Eckert was bound over to the circuit court and his bail was raised to $8,000.

Childs' evidence substantiated the main point in his confession made to Sheriff Ben Lugten in the Allegan county jail, that Eckert had employed him to burn the cottage and had made a "match" for him to use in setting the fire. Testimony of an insurance man who owned two cottages which were destroyed in the conflagration was introduced in support of the state's contention that collection of insurance was the motive in the fire plot. The present worth of the Everett cottage, it was claimed, was about $1,000 to $1,500, while insurance carried totalled $4,500.

HORSESHOE COLLECTION GIVEN TO KENT MUSEUM

Horseshoes are regarded as such curiosities nowadays that a large display has been arranged in the Kent County Scientific Museum by the director, Henry L. Ward.

The exhibit contains 35 horseshoes, showing all varieties of the blacksmith's art in fitting horses for the road, the race track and hauling, as well as a variety of corrective shoes warranted to aid nearly every defect of gait.

The collection was given the museum by John Grootemat.

SECOND DIVORCE GETS WOMAN DOUBLE ALIMONY

When Mrs. Clara Norris obtained a divorce from Edward Norris, in 1922, she was given $30 a month alimony. When she obtained a second divorce from him before Judge Vincent M. Brennan in circuit court she was awarded $60 a month alimony. After the first divorce the couple were remarried September 13, 1925. According to her testimony, the only good that came of remarrying Norris was that the alimony was doubled.

NATION GIRDS IN WAR ON BORER

The United States is at war. In Mexico? China? Nicaragua?

No, the United States is engaged at home, in a war of defense. Relentless war upon the most destructive insect pest ever to invade this continent. Desperate war to save a $2,000,000,000 corn crop, to keep lush and green the fields where ruin is threatened. War to save the prosperity of whole states and great cities. War to save the food supply for hungry people instead of hungry worms.

Here, in tabloid form, are the principal facts about this war:

The enemy—The European corn borer.

Allied with the United States against the enemy—Canada.

The battlefield—More than 30,000 square miles around Lake Erie, in Western New York, Northern Pennsylvania and Ohio, Northeastern Indiana, Eastern Michigan and Southern Ontario.

Fighting for the United States—Hundreds of thousands of farmer volunteers, and more than 5,000 "professional soldiers," employed by the Government.

Weapons used by the United States—1,240 tractors, 800 stubble pulverizers, 800 plows, 64 field burning machines, 64 oil tank trucks, 74 stalk pile burning outfits.

Auxiliary equipment — 100 heavy trucks, 100 busses, 65 tank trucks, 500 semi-trucks, small articles too numerous to mention.

The sinews of war—$10,000,000 appropriated by Congress and additional sums voted by the several states.

The "secretary of war"—Dr. A. F. Woods, director of scientific work for the United States Department of Agriculture, appointed as special representative of Secretary William M. Jardine in the borer fight.

The "field marshal"—L. H. Worthley, in active charge of the campaign.

General headquarters—Toledo, O.

This vest-pocket summary, however, does not begin to give the real picture.

Imagine, if you can, the hundreds of miles of farm lands lying brown in the warm May sun, with leaves and grass just beginning to show green.

Clouds of black smoke puffing up here and there and moving slowly across the quiet countryside.

Men plodding slowly ahead of these columns of smoke, and flashes of searing flame beneath.

Fields of corn stubble, where machines with thin pieces of steel whirling 1,800 times a minute, reduce the stubble to powder and send dirt and stones flying in a fine spray 100 feet to the rear.

Tractors pulling gang plows, rakes gathering up old stalks, piles of stalks burning like funeral pyres.

Caravans of heavy trucks crawling along the highways.

Busses full of "shock troops" hurrying from farm to farm, from county to county, from state to state.

Imagine all these things, and you will have some faint conception of what is going on in this 30,000-square-mile battlefield, of how the farmers in this area have been stirred to action as never before.

What about the cohorts of the enemy in all this? Where are they? What are they doing? Are they fighting back? Or are they fleeing pell-mell, an rmy in utter rout?

The truth is that the borers are being taken unawares. All winter they have been asleep in the old stalks and stubble, or under scraps of refuse, safe from storm and cold.

And now, before they have had time scarcely to think about bestirring themselves and breaking their winter's long fast, they are being killed without warning—roasted, ground up or buried alive.

It is well for man that they are dying now. If they were allowed to live they would soon enclose themselves in thin cocoons of silk, from which they would emerge two weeks later as full-grown moths. In their 18 days of life as moths, they would mate freely and each female would lay several hundred eggs on the leaves of the new corn plants.

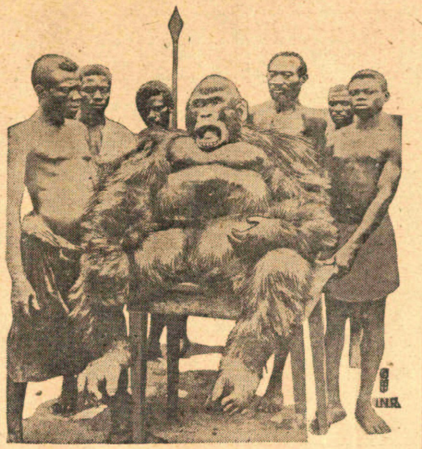
And then, all through June and July, these eggs, billions upon billions of them, would hatch out into tiny larvae, each one-sixteenth of an inch long, which would begin to feed on the corn.

3 FARM GROUPS MEET IN WASHINGTON IN OCTOBER

Three national farm organizations, purporting to represent 3,000,000 farmers, will meet in Washington in October to frame a farm relief legislative program for the next session of congress.

Beside the Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange, the Farmers' Union also will be represented at the conference.

Largest Gorilla Ever Captured



How would you like to be loafing around in the middle of a jungle and suddenly run into a hairy man-crusher like that critter in the center above? He's the largest gorilla ever captured→ taken after ten months of tracking through the wilds of Africa. His arm reach measured seven feet in breadth and his height, crouched, was 5 feet 4 inches.

BOY, 11, WHO GAVE LIFE IS HONORED

Two residents of Michigan have been cited by the Carnegie Hero Fund commission in recent awards for bravery.

Montie A. Dunham, of Pulaski, Mich., will receive a silver medal in recognition of a citation for his son, Lester, who was drowned three years ago while attempting to rescue Dolores Clifton, a small girl, who had fallen through the ice of a pond. Lester then was 11 years old.

The second award will be made to Janice B. McMahon, 12 years old, who also attempted to save Dolores, but who broke through the porous ice and was herself rescued by Lester Dunham.

The official resume of the attempted rescue of Dolores and the saving of Janice are in part as follows:

"Lester Dunham, 11 years old, schoolboy, saved Janice B. McMahon and died attempting to save Dolores Clifton from drowning at Pulaski, Mich., March 12, 1924. Lester, who could not swim, ran 30 feet on the ice and then crawled to Janice. Grasping her hands, he arose and pulled her from the hole and 12 feet nearer to the bank. He then crawled back 15 feet to Dolores and grasped her hand. The ice broke under him and he and Dolores were drowned."

The official account by the commission of Janice's act of heroism tells that she attempted to save Dolores, who had broken through porous ice on a pond into deep water 40 feet from the bank. Janice, although unable to swim, hurried across the ice, breaking through within a few feet of Dolores. Both clung to the ice until the boy, Lester Dunham, ran from the bank, pulled Janice to safety, and made his attempt to save the other child.

Janice will receive a bronze medal.

HOW IS THIS FOR LUCK?

Think you are unlucky? Then consider the story which a well known New Yorker tells of a frail little man whom he defended in a murder case down in a small southern town. The prisoner was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged.

Convinced of his client's innocence, the lawyer besieged the governor and the judge with pleas for mercy. The night before the scheduled hanging, the jailer told the condemned man that he could have anything he wanted. The man was delighted. For 20 years, being a semi-invalid, he had dared eat nothing but liquid food. So, he ordered a monster meal, and ate, and ate, and ate.

At 8:30 he had finished eating; at 9 o'clock a telegram came from the governor, commuting his sentence; and at 11 o'clock he was dead of acute indigestion!

BOY, 9, SAVES BROTHER FROM BENEATH TRAIN

Showing rare presence of mind, Walter Radtke, 9 years old, of Detroit, saved the life of his brother Joseph, 11, by grabbing him by the feet and drawing him from beneath a moving freight train at the Detroit Terminal Railway and the Six-Mile road.

Joseph is in the Receiving Hospital in a serious condition, his left arm having had to be amputated above the elbow.

Varying stories are told as to how the accident occurred.

OLDEST SPORTSMAN IN LAPEER CAPTURES FAMOUS BIG FISH

Lapeer's biggest fish has been caught by her oldest fisherman.

For years a great northern pike has defied capture in the Walker mill pond. Many anglers have seen the big fish while fishing for bluegills, and not a few have hooked it, but the giant always got away. A twist of its thick head and a flap of its strong tail and the line was broken or the hook straightened into a piece of ineffectual steel.

In late years the big pike became a sort of legendary figure, and Lapeer's best fishermen vied with each other in attempting to land it. It was John Rowden, 86 years old, who, despite his age and infirmity, succeeded where the others failed.

Bowden, equipped with an old cane pole he has used for 20 years, tossed a worm-baited hook into the pond the other day, hoping at the most to land a half-pound bluegill or a big sunfish. Zip! the pole bent into a semi-circle and the line started sawing the water as if possessed. Knowing he had hooked the big fish, the old man held on for all he was worth, despite the fact that he was nearly pulled into the water.

After a 20-minute fight the old man landed the fish—a 15-pound pike, and the largest taken from Lapeer county waters in many years. The pike, held with its tail touching the ground, reached to its captor's waist.

"I've fished for more than 70 years, but never before have I caught one as big as this," said Rowden. "I'm ready to quit now."

BIGGEST TURKEY FLOCK IN STATE IS IN JACKSON

George and Frank Layler, electrical contractors, are believed to be the owners of the largest flock of turkeys in Michigan.

One thousand turkeys were produced on their farm near Napoleon last year. Most of these birds were trucked to Detroit at Thanksgiving and Christmas, netting their owners more than $5,000.

Seventy hen turkeys and gobblers were retained. The Layler brothers hope to raise 2,000 turkeys this year.

The poults are hatched in incubators and reared in a specially constructed, steam-heated brooder house. They are housed in the brooders until ten weeks old, when they are removed to a range in the orchards.

AGE FAILS TO MAR PIANIST'S CHARM

When croquet was the latest thing in outdoor sports, when every hand organ was playing "Call Me Pet Names" and Abolitionists were all the rage, when waists measured 15 inches and skirts 50, and Saratoga Springs was the "great American Spa," a girl of eight used to sit on one of the uncomfortable seats of that resort's opera house and listen to music.

But always after the performance, her father escorted this child from the opera house with an air of importance. The two would drive home in state, and enter the parlor of their hotel suite where stood a huge ebony square piano. Then the father would open the instrument and call :

"All ready, mother!"

Then the two fond parents of Abbie would listen while their child played for them the songs she had heard that evening.

This was the beginning of the 75 years of music for Mrs. Abbie Davis Ford.

Today Mrs. Ford, long a resident of Detroit, is 78 years old, although she usually refuses to admit more than 75 years. She is a great-grandmother, yet she has her soft, white hair bobbed. Forty of her songs and ballads have been published. When most old ladies are knitting in their favorite chair, she is playing a repertoire of 350 musical compositions. She is the composer of the well-known "Juno" and "Frappe" waltzes and they may be found in the library of thousands of mechanical pianos and phonographs. She has played for thousands of audiences, and she does not read one note of music. Mrs. Ford is the aunt of Carrie Jacobs Bond, author of "The End of a Perfect Day," and scores of other well known tunes. She was an inspiration to her niece during the latter's early struggle for success.

After 75 years of piano playing, Mrs. Ford's fingers are as supple and alert, as able to bring harmony and beauty from the piano keys, as in the days of '66 when her first waltz was published.

12,000 TREES PLANTED BY KAZOO STUDENTS

Twelve thousand trees are being planted by the students of Western State Normal School on a tract of denuded land in the biological reserve of Western State Normal, known as the Kleinstuck reserve.

This is probably the biggest piece of reforestation work to be undertaken by any institution or group in Michigan outside of the state forestry department. The trees include 8,000 Norway pines, 2,000 white pines, and 2,000 Jack pines.

YOUTH REPLACES SCHOOL "MUM"

Where is the old-time teacher—the stern-jawed woman made memorable through comic valentine cartoons with her hair skinned back, an angular nose supporting a heavy pair of spectacles with a ruler ominously posed in one bony hand?

She has been handed down from time forgotten to represent one of the thorns in the path of learning—as representative in her way as the old man with the bestarred spike and familiarly known as Uncle Sam. But today this caricature has no meaning; the old-time teacher has been relegated to the limbo of forgotten things and in her place might be pictured one of the most up and coming young women that you could find anywhere. She is young and therefore attractive; her skirts are short and her haircut reveals the last word in the fashionable bob. She would probably be driving her own car.

A most interesting part of the public school system is the Detroit Teachers College which turns out a large percentage of these youthful teachers.

"Prohibition: Its Economic and Industrial Effects"

8. Saloon's recreational substitutes prove benefit to home and industry: "If the widespread observation of people who have been interested in this problem is worth anything at all, movies, autos, touring, radios, and other forms of recreation having an economic basis have been satisfying a good part of the desire for relaxation which the 'poor man's club' met."

9. Non-drinking, non-treating salesman is new order of big business today: "While violating the law when transacting business is still all too frequent, there are indications that the practice will become much less of a problem, just as the drinking or coming to work drunk is practically gone from factory operation. Already numerous concerns have taken a firm stand on the question. In spite of the difficulties of securing observance for a new law among a generation of buyers and salesmen accustomed to the old practices, the liquor evil in selling seems gradually to be passing."

10. Drink on increase, not decrease before dry era Federal data show: "The reports of licensing boards show that saloons were by no means losing out, though in many jurisdictions less numerous than before. The liquor industry was not only a vast and profitable one when prohibition came but had been showing a consistent growth."

11. Breweries have generally adjusted themselves to other business "We should like to be able to report the good news that through some miracle all the huge plant and equipment was profitably converted to other uses without waste, and the workmen all better off or taken care of by other industries. This is not the case. Prohibition has had the not-unexpected result of reducing some of the breweries to junk, and made it difficult for some of the workers to adjust themselves to other occupations.

"The favorable side of the picture is the success of the more capable and fortunate minority in readapting their business to new conditions, and also the fact that a good deal of the property made available through the closing of the saloons was secured at a bargain by other industries, serving as a subsidy to many concerns requiring industrial property cheaper."—The Union Signal.

Report of the Sheriff's Office, Week Ending July 23rd 1927

Lee Thompson and Claude Wilson, alleged Wheatland Twp. bootleggers who were "pinched" in raids on Saturday, July 16th, were released on $100 bonds, each pending an examination on August 2nd.

Sam Lawbaugh, Wheatland Twp. who was arrested for fraud in connection with the sale of some alleged liquor on July 16th was released under $200 bonds on Monday, to appear at examination on August 2nd.

On Sunday, Sheriff and Mrs. Kerr took Mabel Wood to the State Farm Colony for Epileptics at Wahjamega.

Murray Ewers of Homer and Bertus Wirebaugh of Litchfield, were arrested last week by members of the Calhoun and Hillsdale County Sheriff's Offices and have confessed to the burglary of a restaurant in Homer and Marsh's Grocery Store in Litchfield. They will appear in Court here sometime this week.

Ralph Bruce, of South Bend, was arrested Saturday afternoon July 23rd, on U. S. 112 at Allen, enroute with a Chevrolet Coupe loaded with beer and Canadian Whiskey.

The Sheriff's Department has been busy this past week serving Dog Warrants in various parts of the County. This is an expensive business, both for the owner of the dog, also for the Sheriff's office, besides making all concerned feel uncomfortable, to put it mildly. No one likes to have a warrant served on him, and we hope that in the future it won't be necessary.

Geo. Wilcox, who ran away from the Washtenaw County Farm was caught in Allen on Friday and will be returned early in the week. This is the second time that Geo. has come through Hillsdale County on one of his "trips."

Henry Martin, the South Bend bootlegger, was taken to Ionia to begin serving sentence on Monday.

No. of prisoners in the County Jail 6. Under sentence 1. Waiting trial 5. Total 6.

Consolidated Churches

Rev. Burley Lamb addressed a large audience at the Methodist church last Sunday morning on the subject of "Consolidated Churches" and his work in Ohio where much of the work has been brought to a finish during the past few years. He is secretary of the Federated Churches of Ohio and his work takes him to many parts of the state. He introduced his son, a young lad, who gave a real sermon and read a text from the Bible as a starter. Mr. Lamb deplored the fact that so many cities and villages in Michigan are overchurched, that is, there are so many denominations and so many different pastors of different opinions there is no real harmony of action or united results. He spoke of a certain town in Ohio where the members of a couple of churches on opposite sides of the road were so bitter that neither would enter the other's church even on a funeral occasion, but would linger on their own church steps. He insinuated there should be more funerals in such communities, and he says he was much surprised to find several agreed with him. Mr. Lamb has proven it over and over again that a few united people of all denominations could accomplish more in the vineyard than a whole army of dissentors of various churches As an illustration he said when a boy he played in the wheat bin and if he dipped his hand into the wheat with fingers spread apart and brought them up again no wheat remained but should he compress his fingers tightly together a large handful of grain came up each time. This he compared to the united church work. In his opinion in a large city of thirty churches in Ohio the whole number were not exalting the Kingdom with any degree of success but should the thirty consolidate into six big community houses and hire a staff of five trained workers along the various lines for each, a vast harvest of souls would be the result. He compared this theory to a herd of wild donkeys which were menaced by lions. One donkey alone if away from the herd could not resist a lion, but when he scented danger he would join the group which arranged themselves in a circle heads together and heels outside, and as the lions prowled around the circle each donkey gave him a whole-souled kick with the result the lion usually retired completely beaten but he said as a rule it developed most of the churches were doing the exact opposite—they were kicking each other with heads apart! His idea of a propitious community church would be to consolidate and hire specialists for every department of work or in other words experts who could sell religion and salvation to the masses and get results. Mr. Lamb mentioned the conduct of ministers who never visited the people of their neighborhood, adding that he one day drove with a local pastor in Ohio who disparaged most attempts to fraternalize with the neighborhood. They came to a splendid farm home where the local pastor insisted there was absolutely no use of trying to interest the proprietor in religious matters stating this family held religion in contempt. As they drove into the dooryard a little red-faced man came out and almost before anything was said began his blasphemous tirade against churches and religion in general. After he had finished Mr. Lamb merely reached out his hand and pleasantly asked the fellow if he would come to church that evening and hear their side of the question. Much to the ministers' surprise he cheerfully answered "Yes" adding that was the first time a preacher had been in his dooryard in many years, and they found others who told the same story. Mr. Lamb says he had the pleasure of seeing this man converted. Mr. Lamb's remarks from start to finish indicated he believed that much of the failure of religion in all communities was the result of too much contrary strife and sectarianism. In other words a Methodist would never work the Baptist way; a Baptist believed the Methodists were dead wrong; a Presbyterian would have none of either and a Congregationalist was positive everybody but him was on the wrong track. In regard to Juvenile work in the Sunday school he said this: Too many failures to awaken interest in the Sunday school are undoubtedly the result of depending upon a class of teachers and officers who were not congenial to the young. He said these principals should be experts along their line, and older people as a rule could not reach the young with the right ideas necessary to win them.

Wet Casualties

Already this summer there have been several needless drownings which involved good swimmers and which took place in plain view of people who might have gone to the rescue if they had realized that lives were actually in danger. There is less reason for such dreadful catastrophes in these days than ever before because there is more widespread knowledge of rescue and resuscitation methods.-Owosso Argus Press.

The fact remains however, that lots of people in this country are so confident to their ability in deep water they take very long chances. Very few are not able to swim these days and often it happens good swimmers are overcome by unseen troubles as cramps or heart failure but as usual the large majority of deaths are the result of pure carelessness on the part of young people who so far forget their previous training as to "rock the boat" and do other cute stunts which haye the same decisive and swift result. When will the folks leave off their "play stunts" and take life seriously where there is danger?

Winners of fifth prizes will each receive $250.

Musical, civic and women's clubs in each community in each state will be invited to hold local contests to select the best young man and best young woman singers of their towns. These winners will then be certified to a state audition, which will be broadcast by a radio station in each state. A state winner of each sex will be chosen and will receive a silver medal.

The next step is a district audition. The young men and women who have won state honors will be taken to a central broadcasting station in one of five districts, where an audition will be broadcast to select the two winners—a young man and a young woman—from that district.

The two winners in each district will receive gold medals and the ten finalists thus selected will be taken to New York for the final National Audition, to be broadcast over a national network of stations. All expenses of contestants in the district and final auditions, including railroad fare, hotel bills, entertainment, etc., will be paid by the Atwater Kent Foundation.

The spirit and purpose of the National Audition are indicated in a statement by A. Atwater Kent, president of the Foundation, who said:

"The discovery of one of those rare voices, of which each generation produces a very few, seems to me an event of profound national importance. Even when such a voice could give pleasure to only a few thousand people in a year it was a national treasure. Now that millions may enjoy it on the same evening through the medium of radio, such a voice has become priceless.

"The National Radio Audition, supported by the Atwater Kent Foundation, is an undertaking to search the entire country for beautiful voices and to offer these singers an opportunity for full development, recognition and reward."

The principal qualifications for contestants are as follows:

Must not be over 25 years old; must never have been associated with a professional theatrical or operatic company; must never have been a paid principal in any concert held outside their own states; must declare an intention to follow a musical career and must be free from theatrical or musical contracts

This limitation permits choir singers to enter the auditions, even though they may have received financial compensation for singing in churches. Other groups from which entries are anticipated are students in musical schools and locally prominent singers in high schools and colleges Musical organizations in each state are also afforded an opportunity to participate.

MARYGROVE FACULTY PICKED BY DR. DERRY

Many Schools Represented by Teachers Who Will Open Girls' College Next September

Approximately 35 Sisters Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, assisted by a corps of professors, both lay and clerical, with Dr. George Hermann Derry, probably the most distinguished educator among the Catholic laity of the United States, will form the faculty of the Marygrove College when it opens in Detroit next September.

Educational institutions in all parts of the country will be represented by this faculty, all of whom hold high degrees in their particular fields. Among the universities represented are: The Catholic University of America, Notre Dame, Fordham, University of Detroit, Holy Cross College, Stonyhurst, England, the Catholic University of Paris, Johns Hopkins University, the University of Michigan, the Ypsilanti State Normal School, the University of Kansas and the University of Pittsburg.

This is the faculty which will cooperate with Dr. Derry in making real what he has published from coast to coast as the "Marygrove Idea", Dr. Derry's conception of what the degree of bachelor of arts from a Catholic college should signify. In a recent interview Dr. Derry said:

"In our Catholic culture, an art means the right way of doing a thing and the degree is granted, not for a mechanical accumulation of credit hours or miscellaneous points, but for the proved possession of these right ways of doing things, those keys to success in life, those positive and distinctive personal powers that always have characterized the authentic bachelor of arts."

LOCATING THE FINANCIAL LEAKS THAT TAKE THE PROFITS OUT OF FARMING

By DAN H. OTIS

Director Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association

INDUSTRIAL lines suffer because of inefficient firms, whose officers cling to old methods and place goods on the market, even at a loss, to compete with the more efficient institutions.

D.H.OTIS

Agriculture, too, has this problem to face. We find farmers who fight new methods. They retard the prosperity of other farmers by throwing on the market poor quality products, frequently produced at a loss.

The nature of the banker's business places him in a position to help this type of farmer as well as the more progressive farmer. At the same time the banker can assure himself of good loans based on the farm as a going concern.

A study of the investments, sources of income and expenses of the successful farmers in his community will give the banker a measuring stick by which to gage the hazard entailed in furnishing loans to other farmers. This study is readily accomplished through the use of summaries of farm records. In the absence of good records, survey blanks which can be obtained from the agricultural colleges, may be used for collecting the information.

A banker in a dairy district would use data similar to Farmer A's summary in the following table as a measuring stick to judge the condition of Farmer B:

	Farmer A	Farmer B
Farm receipts	$5,465	$2,214
Farm expenses	2,122	1,079
Rec'pts above expenses	$3,343	$1,135
Interest on total investment @ 5 per cent	1,070	989
Net income after deducting interest	$2,273	$146
Acres	127	130
Total investment	$21,400	$19,773
Operating capital (machinery, live stock, equipment)	5,862	4,473
Number of cows	18	11
Investment in cows	$2,302	$1,205

The total investment of Farmer A is moderate with a large percentage (27 per cent) of operating or working capital. Farmer B is low in operating capital. The number of cows is also low, which is reflected in the farm receipts, these being $3,251 less than those of Farmer A. The expenses of Farmer B, although about one-half of those of Farmer A, are, nevertheless, nigh in the ratio to receipts.

The only way to safeguard a loan to Farmer B is to consider assets and not income. Before any loan should be considered at all the banker and the farmer should go over the situation, uncover the leaks and outline a definite program of improvement.

Diversity of Business Good Sign

	Farmer A	Farmer B
Income from crops	$1,476	$851
From dairy products	2,343	752
Sale of livestock (including increased inventory)	1,656	280
Miscellaneous income	327	181

A good diversity of income serves to protect the farmer against years of over-production of any one farm product. Farmer A has a good diversity of income. Notice that the leading source of income, dairy products, constitutes less than one-half of the total income. The various enterprises that make up Farmer B's diversity of business all show marked decreased income.

Quality of Business Shows Leaks

	Farmer A	Farmer B
Receipts per cow	$130	$68
Receipts per livestock units other than cows	94	32

Under the heading, "Quality of Business," Farmer B shows that his cows are bringing in $62 less per year than Farmer A's. The $68 a year which they are producing is undoubtedly below the cost of feed and keep. The income per live-stock unit is still worse, and while this farm needs more cows to increase its volume of business, it would be financial suicide to invest in the same type of cow. This poor farmer must weed out his poor cows and feed the balance properly to get results before money is loaned to him to increase his herd with good stock.

An analysis of the farmer's records will bring out many other leaks which the farmer may not have noticed. He may be paying high prices for feed when less money spent for fertilizers and lime may enable him to raise the right kind of feed on his own farm and stop this drain on his pocketbook.

Barring temporary emergencies, farm loans handled on the basis of income, indicating a going concern, would hasten tremendously the day of a permanent and prosperous agriculture.

The Difference is The Odds

How the world does change! It is not an original remark but is copied from the Literary Digest. We are not referring to the old round Glebe which has stood here revolving in space for so many millions of years; it is quite possible the physical changes on the Globe during the past ninety millions of years have not been very noticeable, excepting what has been wrought by the hand of man, but we do refer to customs and habits of the inhabitants. About 40 years ago social affairs were conducted in a different way.

What were the public bathing beaches in 1887? Well, let's see. Lots of people went just as they do now; they took their wives and their kids and grand-dad and grandma just as they do now, and there they puddled around in the sand and splashed in the wavelets which came lapping, lapping up from the far-off bosom of Old Ocean or Lake as the case might be, and they rollicked and frolicked in balmy airs; they drank in nature's beauties and gathered coral pebbles on the shoring sands. They found brightly colored shells and fetched them home to repose on the center table They went out on the surf that comes roaring and ripping in across the shingle and foams and chafes like a run-away horse about to over-ride and crush; they grabbed the life line yelling and screaming and dashed water over one another—in short the whole bunch went prepared to play and play they did. This was in 1887.

Back in the wild and woolly days we knew nothing of Gray Goose Beach, we knew little of Manitou; it was a small unimportant station. We wanted to go to Birdsell's to see the big steamboat come puffing around the bend and we liked her fat bows and flat keel, we wanted to ride the old tub and watch her grind and roar and wallow up the channel pushed by the mighty arm of steam, not very fast it is true, for a modern gas cruiser of 40 mile speed would have been super-natural in those days.

Those were palmy and virtuous days, but up to the minute in this year of our Lord 1927, what have we gained? Well, let's see again. Here we have wonderful bathing beaches most anywhere there is a respectable body of water—in fact the old "swimming hole" has been commandeered, not excluding Gray Goose Beach: we have gasoline launches that travel so fast they resemble an aeroplane but the romance has gone: the water has receded and where the big steamer once tied up is dry land.

They are carrying on to-day just as happy and producing more joy to the square inch than the old puffing Billie of a tub did back in 1887.

Here is the big toboggan slide which catapaults you into the water at a fast clip; here are the lads and lasses in their modern bathing costumes mostly what old Adam and Eve wore and nobody cares. We have recovered from one spell of prudery to emerge into a barbaric age. We are going back to the days of the ancient Romans and Greeks. We are cultivating a love for the symmetrical with its sensual left out. In 1887 the young ladies wore skirts and stockings and slippers if you please in the water, and a damsel who would exhibit so much as an ankle to the public in those days was a lost soul—at least that's what the old Grannies said—and didn't they have the papers to prove it? You bet they did, Now there was Samantha Jane Lightfoot who used to teach the "deestrict skule" and what'd she do? Samantha was a little wild and she thought it cute one day at a picnic of the sewing club to go in bathing sans stockings, and say! The old harpies talked her off the planet—at least she went somewhere; some said Chicago and others said Toledo; anyhow—she's a burning shame and a disgrace to her family. and they'll have none of her. But now, Laws! Old wrinkled, gray-haired and bobbed Grandmas take off everything but the smile, array themselvea in bandanna girdles and splash in! All go in for a sinful time together—and Brother Liskum Laster of Podunk church is there to see 'em do it.

By the way where's Aunt Sarah Peabody and Old Mother Grunt, who soaked poor Samantha Lightfoot into a life of moral abandon?

Horror of horrors—Cast your eyes away! They're out a bobbin' in the water. The Saints presarve us!

State is Set For Summer Farm Day

Michigan farmers and their families, to the number of several thousand, will gather at M. S. C. Thursday, August 4, for the annual summer Farmers Day. This meeting has come to be the largest annual gathering of its kind in the state, more than 8,000 attending last year.

The program will combine entertainment and educational features with the state championship plowing contest, the horseshoe pitching and milk can throwing contests, and the usual inspection of the college experiment station and farms, showing the results of the latest experiments with livestock and crops, during the morning; the big picnic dinner and band concert at noon; and a brilliant list of speakers for the afternoon.

Michigan's best rural choirs will compete in the annual singing contest, and the Grange baseball tournament finals will be played off during the day.

The leading Farmers Day speaker this year will be C. W. Pugsley of Brookings, South Dakota, president of the South Dakota State College and former assistant U. S. Secretary of Agriculture.

Particular interest will be added by the presence of hundreds of delegates to the Country Life Week conference July 31 to August 6, from all parts of the United States and from many foreign countries.

Dad is urged to bring mother and the children, as the program has been planned in such a way as to furnish something of interest for every member of the family.

We note the huckleberry season is now on and straggling lines of autos laden with happy pickers both old and young, travel the roads very early in the morning two days of the week bound for the swamps. In fact huckleberry time in Southern Michigan is a sort of festive season of basket lunches, much jollity, and a general outing for the whole family after the harvest season. However, this year the harvest is later than usual and the result is a mixture of hard work and berry picking. Since the advent of automobiles hundreds come to Michigan from remote parts of Ohio where huckleberries do not thrive, and these pickers work the patches to exhaustion, hence it behooves the local housewife if she expects to get a quantity of berries to be on the job, early, high wide and handsome.

Country Life Week at M. S. C.

A score of special associations and groups interested in rural life and its problems began gathering on the Michigan State College campus this week for the Country Life Week July 27—August 6th.

That the various meetings will make up the largest and most representative gathering ever held is the opinion of country life authorities who have studied the advance program. Practically every group which is at all active in a study of country life problems will be represented.

An International touch will be given the Conference by the presence of many delegates from foreign countries attending the meetings of the International Country Life Association. These distinguished visitors will take part in the discussion at many of the other group meetings. A conference of college students interested in the rural life will bring delegates from 16 different colleges and universities in one of the interesting new groups. Master Farmers from mid-western states will make up another new section, bringing intensely practical farm viewpoints to the general discussion.

The American Country Life Association, the American Farm Economics Association, the World Agricultural Society, the Michigan Farm Woman's Institute, a citizenship conference, a national Catholic Rural Life conference, and many other important sessions are included in the program.

Michigan farmers and their families have been given a special invitation to attend the various Country Life meetings. Copies of the detailed program are being mailed out from the office of President Kenyon L. Butterfield, of M S. C. general chairman for the conference.

Somebody has asked "What has become of the Pheasants which the state planted here?" Well, we have been led to believe they were being thinned out and were not increasing as fast as they should like quail and partridge, but this theory does not hold water. In a drive along country roads in Moscow and Adams townships it is quite common to see a flock of these beautiful birds cross the road a few feet ahead of your machine, in fact they are about as tame as chickens half grown which they resemble. There is no doubt that the extremes of climate in this locality effect the Pheasants to a large degree and often in the dead of winter the farmer will perceive the birds in his farm yard closely associated with his poultry, sneaking here and there a little food. This is largely caused by an absence of proper food in the fields and woodlots, and by the tendency of Michigan farmers to "clean up" every vestige of standing timber and underbrush which might afford protection to wild life. Unless these birds are far better protected and the act of killing them made a criminal offense, punishable by heavy fines, and even imprisonment, there will never be much success in propagating them here. As stated before they are too much exposed to the elements and the snipers guns. Quail and partridge are also not propagating as they should. If the protection which is supposed to be on them were a fact, there would be by this time literal thousands of them in the hedges and woodlots. They are preyed upon by natural enemies as well as the human kind. Cats and dogs wander at wide range in the fields and finding the nests of the birds destroy both the eggs and the young, as these nests must be invariably built on the ground. Thousands perish in this way.

OWOSSO FINDS ITS FIRST CABIN HIDDEN INSIDE OLD HOUSE

Not every town can show visitors the first house built within it. But not every town finds, as Owosso did, its first house perfectly preserved within the larger house later built around it.

The Comstock cabin was erected in 1836, by Elias Comstock. Its site was on the bank of the Shiawassee River. Later, as the Comstock family increased, a larger house was built over the original. Then, not long ago, the Standard Oil Co., searching for a gas station site, decided on the piece of ground where this larger house stood. Wrecking operations brought to light the forgotten cabin within—a kernel within the shell.

The city bought this kernel, and the Daughters of the American Revolution have equipped it with furniture suitable to the period.

DEFORESTED LAND REPLANTED IN TEST BY MANISTEE AGENT

Land which once grew Michigan's heavy forests of pine and hemlock can be made to do it again, in the opinion of Wayne I. Crampton, Manistee county farm agent, who is directing an experiment in reforestation in Manistee county.

A plantation of 2,800 Norway pines has just been started in cut-over lands near Kaleva, and more will be added each year until 40 acres have been planted.

The Kaleva Commercial Club, an improvement organization composed of merchants and farmers, is paying for the baby pines, and students of Kaleva high school botany classes are doing the planting.

Norway spruce will be intermingled with the pines, for they will develop to marketable size as Christmas trees in a few years. They will then be cut and sold to finance more pine plantings.

This method, if successful, may be carried out over a large area of land now lying unused and therefore unproductive.

There are thousands of acres in the eastern part of Manistee county, but jack pine, scrub poplar and other valueless vegetation has grown since the native white pine was slaughtered by the Michigan lumbermen.

PHEASANT EGGS GIVEN WEST STATE GAME GROUP

Carl Zech, secretary of the West Michigan Game and Fish Protective Association, has been notified by the state conservation department of a shipment of 2,000 ring-neck pheasant eggs to his organization.

Secretary Zech stated the association has received requests for eggs far in excess of the number the state is expected to furnish, and it will be impossible to fill additional orders.

The eggs will be distributed through the county as generally as possible.

PUBLIC SPEAKING HEAD NAMED BY UNIVERSITY

Prof. J. M. O'Neil, of the Department of Speech at the University of Wisconsin, was named to head the publis speaking department of the University of Michigan. Prof. O'Neil, whose acceptance was received by the Board of Regents of the University, will take up his duties next fall.

He succeeds Prof. Thomas C. Trueblood, who retired.

5-LEGGED FROG FOUND IN MEADOW AT ALMONT

You've heard of the two-headed snake and the calf that barked like a dog? Almont has something equal to these apocrophal wonders in the local garage, and carefully preserved in a pasteboard box. It's a five-legged frog. Yee Johnson captured the frog in a meadow near Almont after his interest had been excited by its queer locomotion. He discovered the frog's singular style of hopping was the result of the fifth leg, which grew out of the knee of the left hind foot. The leg grew at right angles to the knee and was fully developed. Save for the extra appendage the frog is perfectly normal.

LYONS NAMED IN 1831 FOR FIRST MICHIGAN SENATOR

Plans are being made by citizens of Lyons to perpetuate the memory of the founder of the village and the circumstances relating to the event. The Research Club will erect a boulder in the heart of the village through public subscription. Research by Mrs. L. P. Brock, historian, has revealed that the place was named in 1831 for Lucious Lyon, the first senator of the state to be admitted to the United States senate.

WORLD RECORD IN SALES OF BONDS

All bond-selling records have fallen, and to a woman. She is Irma Dell Eggleston, formerly of Grand Rapids, Mich., now a bond trader of lower Broadway, New York, and in making her record she has sold $30,000,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds in ten years.

Mrs. Eggleston's transactions ran as high as $38,000,000 in one day, and her record shows that on the basis of the $17,750,000,000 total Liberty bond issues, she has bought and sold almost two bonds for every one put on the market by the government.

Even the Stock Exchange is left far behind when its transactions are set against her sales records, her $30,000,000,000 turnover being more than twice the $14,344,000,000 handled by the exchange from 1917 to 1926, inclusive. Transactions in the Stock Exchange's record year, 1920, amounted to $2,241,000,000 of the securities, as against her 1922 total of $5,000,000,000.

Despite her intense business application, Mrs. Eggleston finds time to run her home herself, having learned to apply office principles of administration organization to domestic affairs. She does not find time for club life, but spends week ends in the country.

U. S. APPROVAL IS GIVEN PURCHASE OF THUMB PHONES

Authority was granted by the interstate commerce commission to the Michigan Bell Telephone Company to acquire the properties of the Consolidated Telephone Company, operating in Huron and Sanilac counties and headed by former Governor Albert E. Sleeper of Bad Axe.

The two companies jointly made application for the permission granted, and there was no opposition from any source. The Michigan public utilities commission approved the application in January of this year.

The price to be paid by the Michigan Bell for the Consolidated's properties is $180,000. It is stated in the application that the purpose of the purchase is "to serve the public more efficiently."

COOLIDGE VISIT SEEN AS BOOST FOR WATERWAY

President Coolidge's decision to spend his vacation in the Middle West, whether Michigan, Wisconsin or Minnesota, is expected to prove a marked benefit to the proposed development of the St. Lawrence waterway project to the sea. It is pointed out that President Coolidge will be in a position to obtain first hand information regarding the pressing need of an outlet to the sea for the 34,000,000 land-locked residents of the inland lakes.

H. J. Hughes, assistant executive director of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, is making a tour of Michigan and Wisconsin cities in the interest of the proposed treaty with Canada with regard to the development of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Hughes says that he believes the project is near realization as a result of the renewed enthusiasm during the last few months.

MISS NUT WINS ON CO-ED BALLOT

University of Michigan co-eds returned winners in the campus elections will assume office next fall at the beginning of the 1927-28 scholastic session. Elizabeth Nutt, Ann Arbor, was chosen president of the Women's League, the highest office to which co-eds aspire. Gladys Appelt, Grand Rapids, was named president of the Women's Athletic Association, while Marian Van Tuyl, Ann Arbor, was selected senior judiciary council representative.

Elizabeth Smithers, Buffalo, N. Y., was the only one in the group to be elected to two offices, having been chosen vice-president of the Women's Athletic Association, and treasurer of the Women's League. The remaining offices and the woman who succeeded in the elections to them fo[illegible] Women's League—Margaret Hawkins, Cleveland, O., vice-president; Cynthia Hawkins, Montclair, N. J., recording secretary; Florence Honnes, Flint, corresponding secretary; Sarah Monone, Cassopolis, secretary, Women's Athletic Association, and Audrey Wright, Grand Rapids, treasurer, Women's Athletic Association. Representatives of the Women's League follow: Senior, Elsie Murray, Detroit, and Bernice Staebler, Ann Arbor; Junior, Virginia Read, Alpena, and Jean Hathaway, Ionia; sophomore, Margaret Bush, Detroit, and Jean Wallace, Highland Park.

Those elected to the judiciary council of the university co-ed self-government body, in addition to Miss Van Tuyl, follow: Junior, Elizabeth Wellman, Columbus, O., and Helen Brown, Jackson.

HEROIC GUARD OF KEWEENAW SHORE RESUME DUTIES

With the resumption of navigation, the heroic Eagle Harbor coast guard crew, which figured in the rescue of 60 Great Lakes sailors in the storm of November 30, has resumed its watch on the wild Keweenaw shore line.

The first task confronting the guard was that of recovering the huge lifeboat which it was forced to abandon at Copper Harbor when the winter set in so severely that the crew was ice-bound and had to return 12 miles overland in a blizzard to the station. The surf boat of the guard still is at Bete Gris, where it was used in the rescue of the crew of the steamer Maytham, which went aground on a reef off Point Isabelle and was released before the ice set in.

15 AT YPSI ENTER FLORENSIC SOCIETY

Fifteen new student members and one new faculty member were received into the Michigan State Normal College chapter of Pi Kappa Delta, national honorary forensic society, at the annual initiation at Ypsilanti. New members are elected to the society because of special ability shown in debate and public speaking.

During the present school year William Underwood, of Britton, and Kirk Seaton, of Almont, students, and Frederick B. McKay, professor of speech at the Normal College, have been awarded the Diamond Key by the national headquarters of the society in New York City. This degree of special distinction is awarded only for particularly striking ability in forensic contests or for special ability in the training of students in debating or public speaking. Prof. McKay has been especially successful in this work, his students having won several state contests and having kept well to the front in the national contests.

Both of the student members who have been honored this year are well known in college circles throughout the Middle West for their forensic ability. Mr. Seaton last year represented the Normal College at the National Student Federation Congress at Princeton, and this year at Ann Arbor. Last year he was one of two delegates to represent Pi Kappa Delta at the national convention of the organization at Estes Park, Colo. At present 19 students and seven faculty members are members of the Normal College Pi Kappa Delta. Those received into membership this spring are: W. E. Olds, associate professor of education at the normal; Eva M. Griffith, Ypsilanti; Naomi Watson, Pontiac; Evelyn Elliott, Mt. Clemens; Margaret Hale, Highland; Jessie C. Stuber, Ann Arbor; Irene Walldorf, Trenton; Bernice Dendel, Allegan; Byron F. Boyd, Ithaca; Carl Brablec, Britton; Michael DeFant, Vulcan; Charles N. Hill, Ypsilanti; Ray F. Jennings, Ann Arbor; James B. Perdue, Highland Park; Robert L. Yanke, Howard City; and Elmen Winkelman, Dundee.

HALFWAY RESIDENTS TO VOTE ON NAME CHANGE

The village of Halway, tiring of its name, is seeking a new designation and the village commissioners favor "Calvin." "East Detroit," "Macomb," and "Ardmore" have been suggested as names also, and will be submitted to the electors. Halfway received its present anme from hucksters and others hauling produce to the Detroit markets years ago, when a feed barn marked the midway point between Detroit and Mt. Clemens.

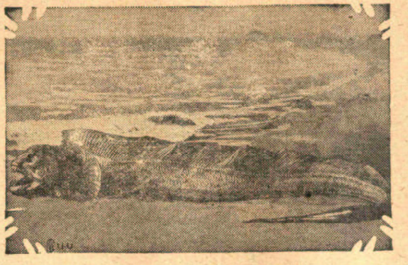
BROWN CITY GOES BACK TO OIL IN DUST WAR

Brown City streets will be given a liberal coating of oil this year, instead of the calcium chloride treatment of last year. The city council has placed an order for 8,000 gallons of oil to be used on the street this summer, which it figures will be sufficient to lay the dust in every part of the municipality all summer.

3,400 FARMS INSPECTED IN CORN BORER FIGHT

J. Alex Navarre, federal supervisor of Monroe county, informed the 15 inspectors working on the corn borer control work, that all farms must be 100 per cent clean in order to pass inspection. Plows will be made available immediately to begin work on the property will be undertaken by the government. The charge for plowing will be $4 per acre. Farmers are co-operating well, according to reports. So far 3,455 farms in Monroe county have been inspected, and average about 15 acres of corn land per farm. Probably 200 more farms will have to be inspected.

What Is It-- Fish Or Animal?



This is—well—ah—hum—what scientists call the "Aryrithicus Ocaelatis," which doesn't mean anything to you. Anyway, it was found washed up on the beach up in Oregon.

Its head and side were covered with hair, it has sharp teeth, unusually large eyes, alligator-like tail and only one pair of legs. Fish or animal—maybe, you know?

ANN ARBOR YOUTH RIVALS SANDOW

Have you an overwhelming desire to rend asunder two packs of playing cards, held in your hands?

Will your happiness never be complete till you learn to rip a log chain like a bit of wrapping twine?

Would you care to achieve the neat parlor trick of suspending yourself between two chairs while a gentleman leaps from an eight-foot ladder to your midriff?

Will life be empty and hollow for you till you acquire a half-ton slab of stone on your chest, permit a heavy touring car to use your body for a highway, and employ a three-ton tennis court roller as a medicine ball?

Then hark to Mozumdar—Madhusudan Mozumdar of Muktagacha, India—125-pound student of chemical engineering at the University of Michigan.

Mozumdar's feats of strength and his curious ability to control the muscles of his body, making any designated muscle roll and twitch independently of the others, provided Ted Sullivan, University boxing coach, with a discovery and Sullivan wasn't long in billing the dark-skinned smiling little fellow for an act on a recent boxing card. To say Mozumdar "went big" is to put it mildly. Mozumdar was a wow.

Mozumdar displays unusual modesty for his 24 years.

"Anyone can do what I do,'" says he. "Just a little training, a little self-denial in the matter of eating, drinking and smoking, a little practice in muscle and breath control. When I graduate I am going back to India and help, if I can, in the physical upbuilding of the Bengali youth."

The vest-pocket Sampson was a student at the Bengal Technical Institute in Calcutta before coming to Michigan a year ago. Before that, as a high school student, he had as a physical instructor one Sen Gupta, who inspired him with the possibility of enjoying perfect health and greatly prolonging life through proper exercise. For 10 years, he says, his work was confined, on the physical side, to the parallel bars and, on the mental, in laying down for himself a series of rules of conduct so austere as to border on the ascetic.

MUNISING TO WELCOME DETROIT BUSINESS MEN

The city of Munising will extend a glad welcome to the members of the Detroit Board of Commerce when they stop next June on their annual cruise of the Great Lakes.

According to information received by O. E. Brown, secretary of the Munising Development Club, the organization will arrive about 10 o'clock the morning of June 11, and will leave again about 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Grand Island will be placed at the disposal of the board by the Cleveland Cliffs Iron Company, as will their passenger craft, the "Ottawa," plying between the island and Munising.

DETROIT DOCTOR HEADS COLLEGE IN NEW YORK

Word has been received of the appointment of Dr. Linn J. Boyd as head of the department of medicine and homeopathy at the New York Homeopathic Medical College. Dr. Boyd was born in Detroit and educated at the University of Michigan. Until last year he acted as associate professor of homeopathic medicine and director of the medical research laboratories at Michigan.

ROADS UNEQUAL TO FILL STADIUM

In the words of a famous columnist, the Michigan athletic authorities are calling "Help-Help" to Michigan railroads in handling the crowds that will seek to see the University's football games with Ohio State, the Navy, and possibly with Minnesota next fall.

The reason for the appeal is that an analysis of the highways converging in Ann Arbor discloses it will be physically impossible for automobiles to transport all the people it will be possible to seat in the completed stadium. Steam or electric transportation will be necessary for at least 25,000 persons for the two, and possibly three games. The bus system cannot be figured as an assistance in this matter, for it also makes use of the roads.

Michigan authorities, who have witnessed the congestion of trains necessary to fill the Illinois Stadium and the Ohio State Bowl, are fully aware that present facilities are inadequate to handle all the crowds to fill the Michigan stadium. In the past, when somewhere near 25,000 persons came to Ann Arbor to the game, three hours was not an uncommon driving time in returning to Detroit. With at least double the number, conditions would be worse, not only going toward Ann Arbor, but in leaving the game.

There are six highways leading into the city of Ann Arbor. The number should be reduced to five for accurate estimate, because two converge to cross a bridge just after they enter the city limits.

The most important of these highways is M-17, between Detroit and Jackson. A cut-off, intended to facilitate truck passage around Ann Arbor, runs along the east side of the stadium. At Ypsilanti, M-17 connects with the Ecorse road to Detroit, affording good traffic conditions except in the city of Ypsilanti, as M-65 also is available for traffic between Ann Arbor and Ypsilanti.

Reaching Ann Arbor from another direction is the Plymouth road, opening up the territory of North Wayne County and Detroit. Connecting with this road inside the city limits is the Pontiac road. Between the Plymouth road and M-17 is the West Warren road, which enters Ann Arbor on the east side of the Huron River.

North from Ann Arbor, M-65, the Whitmore Lake road, connecting with M-16 at Brighton, is the main thoroughfare, while to the northwest the road through Dexter gives an inlet or outlet. This road, however, has its outlet into M-17 inside the city limits, or else its traffic must cross M-17 with the consequent delay.

Southward the entry into Ann Arbor is over Main Street, connecting with M-23 at Saline. This artery also is used as a road to Toledo. Except as traffic is routed through Ypsilanti, this road will have to bear most of the burden of north-coming patrons of the Ohio State game.

Police authorities of Ann Arbor will have the assistance of the Michigan State police in solving traffic problems incidental to the handling of the large crowds. It is felt, however, that about 25,000 visitors at the larger games will have to make arrangements for train transportation to insure their presence at the kick-off.

FLY BAIT RESTRICTION IS LIFTED BY STATE BODY

The fly bait restriction order on the Pere Marquette and Au Sable rivers has been lifted by the conservation commission.

No man on earth can love his neighbor as himself if he has a garden and the aforesaid neighbor keeps chickens.

FISH, GAME PROBLEMS TO BE DISCUSSED AT TWO FALL MEETINGS

Announcement has been made by the Michigan conservation department of the first open meetings to discuss fish and game problems held in recent history in the state. Two meetings are to be held to discuss the advisability of lifting the ban that prohibits the using of bait in catching trout in certain streams.

The first meeting is to be held at Grayling, October 19. The second will be held at Baldwin, October 20. Leigh Young, director of the Michigan Conservation Commission, will preside at both meetings.

At the Grayling meeting the situation on the north and south branches of the Au Sable will be discussed. These branches are in Roscommon, Crawford and Otsego counties. At the Baldwin meeting the situation in the Pere Marquette River, in Lake Osceola and Manistee counties will be brought up for discussions.

Everyone is welcomed at the meetings and all sportsmen will be given an opportunity to express their opinions on the matter.

PLANE PATROL LIKELY OVER ST. CLAIR RIVER

Probability that the St. Clair river district will be patrolled by airplane soon, was seen in the fact that Lieutenant Donald Leonard, of the state police at Detroit, and Sergeant Bryan Babcock, of the St. Clair detachment, surveyed the territory with a plane. It is believed that liquor smuggling might be reduced to a minimum if an airplane is installed under state police supervision.

DETROITER ONCE ROYAL FOOD BOSS

Telling the King and Queen of England what they could eat and what foods were forbidden was the war job assigned to C. H. Parr, now a resident of Detroit, and who, as manager of the Tam O'Shanter Golf Club, is now virtually doing the same thing for the millionaire members of that exclusive institution.

With the title of food controller, Mr. Parr took charge of the Buckingham Palace kitchen, not because the royal household showed any tendency to disregard the food regulations, but as a matter of form. Both the king and queen, he declared, were rigorous in their own observation of the restrictions which limited both prince and peasant to a twenty-fourth of a pound of butter a day and no sugar.

Mr. Parr explains that he was not "the boss" of the kitchen.

"No one can take that job away from the queen," he declared. "She is and always will be the real controller. Daily she inspects the cuts of meat, the vegetables and other supplies, and is more conscientious about waste than the average housewife."

The Detroit man was asked to economize on the king's larder, both because of the example that must be set for the benefit of the nation and for the additional reason that many of the younger men in the royal kitchens were needed for the trenches in France.

"When I went in there," recalls Mr. Parr, "there was a chef for every dinner course; chef of the pastry, chef of the meats, chef of the salads, chef of the soups, and so on. In addition to these, each of the chief chefs had a sous chef, or an assistant, and often the assistants had assistants.

"First, we got rid of all chef assistants and later on several of the chefs."

EXPLORERS PUSH UP RIVER OF DOUBT

Eight hundred miles inland from the aromatic coffee wharves of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, a courageous little band of white men is fighting its way slowly through a country that has less known history than the North Pole.

Much of that country no white man has seen before and returned to tell of the things he saw.

Yet these explorers are in almost constant communication with the great civilized world they left behind more than eight months ago. Almost daily they talk with New York, where their expedition was outfitted last June, telling of their adventures and their discoveries and hearing the news of the world they left behind.

A small radio transmitter that can be transported by hand and an even smaller radio receiving set go with them wherever their explorations lead. At the end of each day's journey these instruments are set up and for several hours tales of adventure and discovery flash out of the Brazilian jungle, while the music of Broadway and the weather reports of Washington trickle in.

Commander G. M. Dyott, an Englishman, is at the head of this expedition, which bears his name. Besides the leaders there are only four other white men—another scientific explorer, two radio men, and a motion-picture camera man.

Almost 15 years ago Theodore Roosevelt attempted an expedition into this country. He succeeded in penetrating several hundred miles further than any other white man who had preceded him. He found the northward flowing "River of Doubt," mapped and charted some of the country along its course, and gathered much valuable information. However, accidents imperiled his own life and the lives of his followers, destroyed many of his most valuable records and collections, and finally forced him to abandon the expedition before it had completed its entire purpose.

In the years that followed, others attempted to explore the entire course of the River of Doubt. Some of them were forced by illness and other mishaps to turn back long before they reached the point at which Roosevelt abandoned his attempt. Some of them were killed by Indians or by strange tropical fevers. Some of them just disappeared into the wilderness and were never seen or heard of again. The River of Doubt still clung to most of the secrets it had held for countless thousands of years.

This Dyott expedition set forth last June determined to complete the exploration begun by Theodore Roosevelt, to gather anew the information, the specimens and the photographs which are missing from the Roosevelt collection, and to push on along the entire course of the river.

"The Strontium Crystal"

By L. V. Harvey

They found themselves in a sort of descending level, whose ceiling was barely high enough for a man to walk upright. The rock formation was tinged with yellow, and there was a continual drip, drip of sulphurous water from above, which seemed to percolate through the natural masonry of the roof. Fascination in their work made the two men totally oblivous to the swarm of bats which inhabited the cave, circling around their heads, and uttering queer sounds. Another thing which they had not sensed at first, was a reverberating roar that seemed to come from afar.

Thunderstorm brewing above probably," said Kemble.

'Nothing of the sort, my son," answered Perry. "To my mind, there is a subterranean river somewhere in this sale and we are going to find it pretty quick, by the sounds that come from out left."

Numerous stalagmites and stalactites now compelled them to take a dodging crooked course; but they slowly worked ahead. The floor was rocky, and ful lof fissures like the surface of a lava river; as they advanced, the roar became louder, till they suddenly emerged into a vast cavern, whose sides were sheer precipices — and no stalactites appeared above. In fact, nothing indicated the presence of any roof, all was black as a vault aloft and curiously enough a strong draught of air from somewhere struck their faces. The sickly glow of the lantern threw fantastic shadows acros the floor and the sound of rushing roaring waters was like the bellowing of Niagara filling the cave with a pandemonium of echoes.

Along the floor they advanced a hundred feet, and came to a canyon or rift in the rock, whose width might have been eight feet in places but for the most part, the opp[illegible] wall could not be touched with the pike. Lowering the lantern as far as their rope would permit they fastened it to the pike-handle, which laid across the fissure in its narrowest place. Gazing down into the gulch they could catch a glimpse of dark waters churned to a froth, as they rushed along in the tortuous channel. At intervals the lashing surges threw their white c rests nearly as hgh as the lantern.

Perry was completely overwhelmed by the magnificence of their discovery, and the subterranean river He was loath to leave the cave, though he knew it must be well along in the afternoon, and they had eaten nothing since morning. Empty stomaches put a damper on their enthusiasm, and they reluctantly returned to the upper air, with many speculations as to the source of the hidden river. Could it be a vast subterranean body flowing hundreds of feet below the rocky bed of Lake Erie and entirely independent of the latter, or was it a great sewer drawing away to unknown depths the water of the Lake? They could present no satisfactory explanation of the phenomenon, nor has; any one since and it remains as much of a mystery today as it was then.

Nothing of consequence occured to vary the monotony of drill and gunpractice aboard the fleet for the next few days. The Commodore busied himself with putting the armament in fighting trim; the regiment of marines which the 'Lawrence" carried were becoming very efficient marksmen under the tutelage of second Lieutenant Mc Donold of the "Niagara" and the "land lubbers" who had been shipped to fill out the crews, were rapidly getting their sea legs. Each day while the weather permitted, the Commodore — glass in hand — took up his virgil on the summit of Gibraltar Rock some thirty feet above the water, where he could easily discover the first faint smudge on the horizon in the northwest quarter, expecting hourly the approach of Barclay's fleet.

The morning of September 10th dawned clear and warm, finding the crew of the fleet chafing with restrain, meanwhile gazing almost wistfully i nthe north west quarter Anything was preferable to this humdrum routine of scrubbing decks morning muster, shooting at nothing for parctice and daily swimming contests.

The Commodore and his second in command sat well forward under a yellow awning, both dressed in full uniform; for Perry believed in keeping up an official appearance at all times, and he was neatness itself in dress. There was a light breeze, whch whipped rope-ends against masts and booms, and gently ruffled the surface of the buy, but hardly sufficient to straighten the "Lawrence's" ensign flying at the masthead. Perry ordered the long-boat launched, and eight burly seamen were bending in unison, as the oars dipped and feathered, sending the light craft jauntily over the ripples toward Gibraltar, where they soon beached, and the Commodore— glass in hand — mounted the summit of the rock.

After some moments spent in contemplating the beautiful prospects of surrounding islands refreshingly green, studded like emeralds in the bosom of the lake, he trained his glass in the north west quarter. To his surprise, three sails were visible, directly two more popped above the horizon— then another. The breeze had now freshened and chopped the water to a dark blue; the whitecas running outside the harbor, sparkled in the sunlight. The distant ships came up in wind like gulls, their sails white as snow, and enlarged rapidly in the glass — showing that they were full rigged brigs.

Perry's excitement was spidemic with the men, as they hastily pushed off. At the same moment, the cry of "sailho" rang from the "Lawrence's" tops. The fleet was quickly changed from its lazy attitude to the grimness of a fighting armada. In less than thirty minutes, every harbor was up, sails set and the whole squadron stood out of Put-in-Bay in open order, and drew away to meet the foe. As the latter came seething and yawning up in the eye of the wind they looked like castles towering above the water; every sail was set to the breeze, and bellying hard as iron with tremendous pressure. Faintly borne on the wind came the strains of music from the British boats, growing more distinct until the Americans could catch the notes — the bands were playing "Rule Britannia". Barclay's flagship the "Detroit", led in line, followed by the "Queen Charlotte' and four consorts, six in all — mounting sixty three guns.

Perry glanced dubiously at his short carronades; for it was evident at once that the heavy guns of the "Detroit" could play awful havoc with him before he could get within range; but Kemble assured the Commodore that the "Long Toms" 'tween decks would "cut chunks out of the Britisher's lower decks" as he expressed it.

At this point, Barclay, shortened said on the "Detroit" which example was followed by the "Lawrence' Perry had given his captains elaborate instructions as to the procedure to be followed, and no anxiety was felt on his part; as they were all experienced men, and much older than himself.

Kemble passed aft among the men, giving words of encouragement; also ordered the powder-monkeys to sand the decks, for well he knew that ere long they would be slippery with blood. The magazne was opened, and down below the sailors patted the greeches of guns as they waited in an ominous silence for the command to open fire. The air was heavy with the smell of burning matches; here and there a jackey could be seen to slyly draw from his pocket some picture of his sweetheart or other dear one, bestow a long lingering glance, then return it with a suggestion of moisture on his eyelids; for we must remember that many of these sailor-lads were mere boys who had never seen a fighting-ship till they enlisted with Perry.

The boatman's whistle shrilled to the tops, calling the men forward. The Commodore mounted a gun slide with the ship's colors over his shoulder, and thus addressed his men, "Men, this flag was given me by the patriotic ladie or Erie God bless them! It contains the last words of the brave Captain Lawrence. Shall I hoist it?"

"Aye, aye, Sir," was the deafening response from a hundred throats.

Soon "Old Glory" mounted to the tops; and as it caught the breeze, the whole squadron saw those memorable words, "Don't Give Up the Ship." A lusty cheer rolled down the line, and was repeated. Fired with their young commander's enthusiasm, the crews returned to quarters.

Meantime, the enemy was rapidly coming within range, and aboard the "Detroit", Barclay's men stood impatiently at the guns, wrought up to a nervous pitch the deadly grape for the first time. The Union Jack mounted jerkily to her tops, and a cheer swept down the British line, but it hardly drowned the bands which until now had pealed forth across the water.

At precisely two o'clock a puff of white smoke belched from the "Detroit's" forward twelve pounder, followed an instant later by a deep throated detonation; and the battle was on. The first shot went wild of the mark and richocheted beyond the "Lawrence".

Perry replied with his long guns first, later with his carronades; but it was evident that he would have to close it with the enemy at once, so much greater was the range of their guns. As yet he had taken in little sail; and the "Lawrence" was bowling along at a twelve-knott speed, rapidly nearing the "Detroit", which had ported her helm in order to broadside. Almost before he knew it, Perry was in direct combat with the three heaviest British frigates, and their broadsides were tearing and cutting his flagshp's rigging lke firey hail.

THE EAST'S JUVENILE "CHARLIE PADDOCK!"

LOOKS like the east has a budding "Charlie Paddock" in the person of Jonney MacDonald of the Polytechnical Prep School in Brooklvn N. Y. Johnny stepped into the sporting limelight as a sprinter of no mean ability when he broke the ten second record for the one-hundred yard dash at the Private School A. A. meet in New York City He did the century distance in nine and forty five seconds — winning the distinction of being the first prep schoolboy runner to ever accomplish that feat.

DETROIT GIVEN BENNETT RACE

Detroit after voluntarily giving up the 1927 Gordon Bennett international balloon races in favor of Denver, has again been asked to take the races because of the Denver committee's declaration it could not properly finance the program. No definite date has been selected for the contest. It probably will be held early in September.

Sixteen 80,000 cubic foot balloons have been entered in the race which decides the world free balloon championship for the year. One which will carry the colors of the Detroit Flying Club, won second place recently in the National American race from Akron.

At the time Detroit was first given the honor of staging the race, through the efforts of Ralph Upson winner of the 1923 Bennett race, the special aerial was engaged with a financial campaign for the national air tour, which is now covering a 4,000 mle route through 14 states.

Several members of the group consisting of prominent business men expressed the opinion that the estimated cost for the balloon race $10,000 was too much of a burden along with the $40.000 required for the reliability flight. It was then voted to decline the award in favor of Denver.

Lighter than air experts joined in the protest against holding the race here on account of the natural geographic location. Detroit, they pointed out is situated too low to give the balloons a chance to make new records. while Denver, with its mountain height, affords a good chance.

MACHINE IS INVENTED TO FREEZE FIRE WITH SNOW

A new fire extinguisher designed to free flames with artificial snow flakes was demonstrated at Long Island City, N.. Y., The device consists of a steel cylinder of liquified carbon dioxide, which escapes as gas through a nozzle when the extinguisher is turned on. Contact of gas with the air forms an extremely cold, snowy substance which changes readily to gas, absorbing heat in great quantities in the process. This lowers the temperature of the surrounding air and literally "freezes" flames..

CO EDS TABOO AS CHAMPIONS FOR FOOTBALL ROOTERS

Men and women students may go together to dances and theatrical entertainments, but when it comes to football games pairing off will be taboo if plans of the Blue Key honorary, hospitality fratenity at Michigan State College prove successful.

The society headed by Harold Marsh of Detroit, recently started a campaign to organize two cheering section — one for men and the other for co-eds — for next fall's football games. It plans to arouse sentiment against the men students accompanying co eds to games.

"No fellow can support his team loyally when he's explaining to some girl why nobody tackles the refere," said Marsh.

BOYS CATCH FAMILY OF COONS AND ADOPTS THEM

Lowell Whitinlg 13 and Donald Kalbfleisch, also 13, while looking about the Kalbfleisch farm, North Branch saw a coon run under an old stump. The boys immediately followed, peering under saw the animal lying within easy reach, so young whiting reached in and grabbed the coon by the neck, pulling it out. Three baby coons shortly followed the mother. The boys immediately "adopted" the entire family and will try to make pets of them.

TRAVERSE CITY URGED TO BUILD $78,000 PLANT

Recommendation that Traverse City install an auxiliary steam electric generating plant, in addition to its present water power developments at Brown bridge and Keystone dams on the Boardman river, to care for increased business was included in a report given the city commission by Burd, Giffels and Hamilton, Grand Rapids engineering firm, which made a survey of the city's power properties. The estimated cost of the plant is $78,000 and could be paid for out of the earnings of the present hydro-electric developments, city officals believe..

FLICKER SCION OF BIRD ARISTOCRACY

The flicker is a bird of long lineage, a scion of the aristocracy of the wods primeval. He is of the family of woodpeckers who patrolled the great forests of pine and fir ages before soft-billed birds came hunting sustenance. It is a proud exclusive family, devoted strictly to its own affairs, and interfering with no other; desiring no change of diet or environment, no diversion in song or wide migration, obsessed altogether with beetle gathering in the bark and wood of the forests.

If we were to follow the list of 36 aliases by which this largest of woodpeckers is known throughout its wide range we should find all its peculiarities of color, flight, noises, and habts indicated in its popular names. With its beautiful plumage conspicuously yellow, it cannot but attract attention wherever seen, particularly if its out stretched wings are looked at from below. At distance one is apt to mistake it for the meadowlark. Both birds wear black, crescent breast decorations, and the flicker also has the ground feeding habit, especially late in the Fall, a characteristic not shared by its bug eating relatives. Although he is not a big fellow, he is possessed with an insatiable curiosity which leads him here, there and everywhere.

Stories are told of how the bird, filled with a longing to look into places you would think quite without the scope of his business, will find his way into barns, deserted houses and the like, exploring every nook and corner, often making himself more or less a permanent guest of one place or another. Occasionally he finds excuse to practice his one distinctive art and he beats a loud tattoo upon some exposed beam. When he is hungry he searches for food on the ground, hopping along in the grass or scratching among the fallen leaves in the woods.

Fools sometimes rush in and win while wise men are investigating.

Men's wives, like their sins, are sure to find them out.

Counterfeit money has no redeeming traits..

Sour Stomach

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Maginsia' in water any time for indigeston or sour acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine 'Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon 'Phillips" Twenty five cent and fifty cent bottles any drug store. 'Milk of Magensia' has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

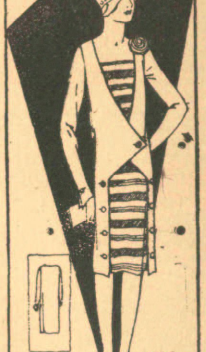
Our Hand-Cut Pattern

No. 1116



In spite of its very "Fifth Avenue" look, this design is very easy to make. The dress fronts lap over a vestee and skirt-panel, as you see, and if striped material is used, the effect is wonderfully smart.

As materials we suggest jersey or light weight wool material in any solid color, such as beige, brown or blue. The front insertion is of the same material in a lighter shade of the same color or else in a sports stripe to match. The pattern may be obtained in sizes 16 to 44. Size 36 requires 2 yards of 54 inch material and three-quarters of a yard of trimming material. No dressmaking experience is needed to make Design No. 1116 if you use these patterns which are individually hand-cut of heavy paper.

Patterns will be delivered to any address upon receipt of 25c in cash or U. S. postage. Always mention size wanted. Address: Hand-Cut Pattern Department, 17 West 28th St., New York City, and always name this newspaper.

Among his plantings is a large block of Courtland apple trees, a new variety developed in New York Michigan growers have shown considerable interest in the variety, which is a cross between a McIntosh and a Ben Davis, but they are in doubt concerning its merits, since pomologists at Michigan State College gave it a "black eye" in a recent bulletin.

BLONDS FAIL TO ENTER INTO BEAUTY CONTEST

Are blonds more modest than their raven haired sisters. Are they more shy? Or are they just so certain of their preferment by gentlemen that they disdain to enter a beauty contest?

These questions are agitating Lansing since it has been auuonced by the judges chosen to select Miss Lansing to represent this city at the Atlantic City bathing beauty contest that not a blond is among the entrants.

E. J. Benge, proprietor of the meat market here, has recently installed a large capacity Frigidaire cooling outfit which is so far ahead of the old-style method of using ice, there is no comparison. In the ice chamber of his refrigerator he has installed one unit which will produce most any temperature desired and a heavy coating of frost clings to this coil in the hottest weather. One of er unit is installed in the refrigerator counter and the whole is operated by electric motors running noiselessly in the basement and using a minimum current. The increasing trade of the market under present management indicates that the buying public appreciates a spirit of up-to-dateness.

Loyal to their calling

Loyalty of "men of the sea" to their calling is a noble tradition. So is the loyalty of "men of the rails" to theirs.

Transportation, whether by caravan, by sea, by the "pony express" or by rail, has ever attracted men of character and dependability.

Thus today the term "railroad man" means the same thing the world over—one who faithfully discharges his duties, and who, in so doing, considers his responsibilities opportunities.

The fact that New York Central is known as a "railroad man's railroad" is a tribute to the character of all those who operate it, and to the standards of service that they have established.

Why the Sheetrock way is the quickest way

QUICK construction is one of the important advantages you get in using Sheetrock, the fireproof wallboard.

For Sheetrock comes all ready to use. You simply nail the wide, ceiling-high sheets to the supports. The trim and decoration can follow without waiting for the walls to dry.

Besides being ready for immediate decoration, Sheetrock walls are proof against cold and damp, fire and sound. They are non-warping, non-buckling and permanent.

MICHIGANS EXPORTS AND WHAT

The government's figures for the first quarter of this year, which takes some time to compute and are therefore, just now avaiabe show that Michigan was fourth in the union of the states in its volume of exports during that period This does not mean, as some will be prone to interpert it, that Michigan is permanently in this position, or better there wil have to be a continued effort

What Michigan did in the way of export in January, February and March was to sent $80,696,000 worth of its products out of the country This ws $9,000,000 more of value than it sent in the first three months of 1926 which is a sub stantial advance It is at the rate of 424,000,000 for the year, if the pace is kept up

Of this $8,000,000 sent out $68,000,000 worth was in the form of automobie transportation as automobiles, their parts, trucks, omnibuses and tractors That left $12,000,000 for the other classes of products, and of these a part were connected with the motor car industry, being rubber tires and electric motor appliances Of the bal ance the larger share was food products

These figures give us a clue to what our important exports really are They are automobiles and 'grub' These are the kinds of mer chandise upon which the greatest effort for sales has been expended, and they are likely to remain our leading exports But they blaze the trail for other commodities and if we are to benefit by an export market our makers must get several pages out of the book of the motor car and food products sales man

It is well to remember that these figures do not give all the credit to Michigan exports that they deserve Much of our export is consolidated with that of New York,owing to the system of sales through brokers and foreign ofices maitained at the seaboard But the some is true of the productions of other states, so that our relative position is probably not misstated It is a credit able showing but the basis of a better one

SAVINGS DEPOSITS ESTABLISH RECORD

The people of Michigan are laying a penny away for tne proverbial rainy day. Statements of the banks and trust companies in Detroit and many of the other leading cities of the state as of June 30 this year, revealed that savings and trust deposits had established new record breaking marks for all time

Savings and trust deposits of the 18 banks and 11 trust companies in Detroit proper have topped the half billion dollar mark for the first time in the City's history— marking a new epoch in the growth of financial institutions here. These deposits showed an increase during the past half year of $43,600,000 or at a rate excess of $7,000,000 a month. This is the greatest increase ever recorded here for only in the amount of savings deposits but also in the number of de positors, indicating that the increment in wealth is not being concen trated n the hands of the few.

The financial institutions in Detroit are now in the strongest posit ion in their respective histories. Bank and trust company resources which attained the billion dollar mark for the first time in 1926, are already approaching the billion and a quarter figure Bank borrowings here have been reduced over $25,000,000 during the past six months. Combined commercial, sav ings and trust deposits of the 29 in stitutions now aggregate 935,917,000 compared witn $847,257,000 at tne beginning of the year. These figures assure adequate financing for new construction and for business and industry during the balance of the year

The increase in savings deposits while a sign of thrift, is also an indication tnat people are not spending as freely during the past couple of years This withdrawal of buy ing power is being felt by the merchants and business men of the state and is one of the main reason for the reports during recent months of dull business. Consider able money has been taken out of circulation. The average individual appears to be somewhat uncertain as to what the future will produce in the way of employment and wages He is not spending as freely at last year. The outlook in the industrial field however would seem to indicate that this uncertain ty is not warranted Increased buyng will undoubtedly result when this conviction is driven home

COME BACK IS SEEN FOR DESERTED TOWN

The Central Mine Reunion, a homecoming celebration that attracts upwards to fifteen hundred former Keneenaw County miners and their families to a little abandoned mine at Calumet each year was held recently. As in former years the ceremony was held in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church which has been kept in good repair through long years of idleness by the Homecoming Assoc iation in anticipaton of growing attendants.

Chiefly a religious gathering. the reunion opened with services from the same pulpit from which the homecomers heard sermons a half century ago and members of the old choir sang the same anthems that echoed from the dank walls in the seventies

The sermon this year was delivered by the Rev. George L. Nuckalls, pastor of the Grand River Avenue Methodist church of Detroit.

While the settng for the home coming for nearly a quarter of a centuury has been in the center of a deserted mining village, this year probably was the last in which the surroundings will be so forlorn for the old Central mine, the only industry in a two that once boasted a population of fifteen hundred is to be reopened, and if the venture is a success the old town again promises to thrive.

INDIAN RELICS ARE UNCOVERED

In dredging several feet beneath the Manistee harbor channel bed to lay a submarine electric cable, workmen uncovered a flint arrowhead and a stone tomahawk which is a perfect specimen of the weapon used by the early Indians.. There is not a chip broken from the tomahawk and the cutting edge is practically as keen as that of a mod ern steel implement.

THE PROBLEM OF CO OPERATION

Amonk the results of Mr.Ford's agreement with Mr. Sapiro about their somewnat famous lawsuit is tne endorsement of co-operative marketing tne economic specialty to which Mr. Sapiro has devoted a good many years of his life. That brings co-operative marketing to the fore as a subject of interest, not only as affecting the general prosperity, but as affecting the pro sperity of the greater business cities of Michigan as well as of other states.

From time out of mind the agricultural producer has been the only unorganized one. By lack of organization we mean the absence of unity of action in production. The makers of industrial products have sufficient information about demand in their respective lines to be enabled to instinctively reduce production once it becomes aparent that demand has fallen off, and that continued production will pro duce a disasterous glut. The farm er has never known what the market supply is going to be until his product is ready for market. Of course the experts in the markets have, at some stage of production a pretty good idea of what the crop total is going to be but by their time of observation the acres have been tilled and sowed and the crop has survived some of its earlier hazards. But the farmer's investment has been made by that time, and a surplus, which is his greatest price danger is unavoidable.

Mr. Sapiro went at his business of co-operative marketing by sever al lines of approach. The most important one was the assignment of production to producers. When cotton was in the doldrums and a surplus from a former year was still depressing the market, he urg ed a reduction in acreage. A few years ago this plan was put into effect in the south, was a surprising amount of authority considering that it was a voluntary movement. The sheriffs of some southern states peddled out the informat ion as to the amount by which plant ers were to reduce production. There was no legal penalty to apply if they didn't reduce, because no legal wrong would be committed if they planted all the acres they had to cotton. But there was a social penalty, a sort of ostracism to be feared and the experiment was made with some succes. Sapiro and the other co-operative mar ket specialists were organizing the sense of not overdoing production The other things that followed were mere economic commonplaces

Among these was the grading of production for marketing. With increasing costs of distribution there is no sense in sending trash to market, whether that trash be low grade vegetables or anything else. Cotton has come to be pretty weil graded for market. So have the cer eal grains. But well graded for market. So have the cereal grains But other farm products and fruits have not been nearly so well graded for market. That the grading should be done right, and the best offered for the best price has been the aim of the wisest of the co-oper ative marketing advocates.

Following this, the co-operatives have been seeking to select markets in distribution. This means unification of selling and such control tnat if farmer products are put on the rails headed for markets which are glutted, they may be rerouted and diverted to otners where there is demand. The California fruit producers have developed this plan to the greatest perfection so far. They may well be emulated by producers of other agricultural crops.

Of course the effect of all this, as it is perfected, is going to be higher prices for these producers, The question arises whether this is or is not going to impinge unfavorably upon the industrial cities, where a higher cost of living must be followed by a higher cost of labor. This is an open question. The bigger cities pay today prces for the materials of food which if regularly realized, would satisfy the producers. But bad distribution produces glut and favors alternativ ely the former of which results in waste and the latter in nothing at all. We are inclined to believe that an even market, sonstantly kept open to the producers would have the effect of keeping his income standard and make him eventually a steadier customer for the product of industry. In the end it might be a better condition all around.

The co-operative marketing plan which has found a new and powerful advocate in Mr. Ford under peculiar circumstances, has much of interest in it to the seats of industry as well as to the tillers of the soil.

THREE PRODUCTS OF ALMA TO BE COACHES THERE

More Alma coaches will be local products this coming year, making a trio of coaches in Alma schools who are products of Alma college Rex Anderson, who graduated from Alma college in June will become assistant to Roy Campbell, atnletic director and Malcom Smith another local product will become athletic director of Alma High school, after several years spent at Redlands, California.

Rex Anderson also a graduate of Alma high and Alma college, was named on All Michigan inter-scholastic teams during his high school days in both football and basketball. At Alma college he was named three times on the All M. I. A. A. football team.

ENGLISH WALNUT TREES THRIVE IN MICHIGAN SOIL

Belief that English walnut trees can be successfully grown on a commercial scale in Michigan is expressed by W. E. Kidder of Kalamazoo, after a number of experiments.

Several years ago Mr. Kidder set out some English walnut trees putting some in his own garden, some on the property of the Lake Farm for Boys and some at Camp Rota-Kiwan, the Kalamazoo Boy Scout summer camp. The growth of all the trees, according to Mr. Kidder, shows that they can be made a valuable commercial asset to this state.

SIXTY FIVE CALLED FOR 'GRID' PRACTICE

First indication of Michigan's preparation for the Nineteen twenty seven football season was given when sixty five prospective candidates were called for practice at the opening of the training period September fifteen, by Director of Intercollegiate Athletics Fielding H. Yost. This number exceeds last year's total by five, an even sixty having received the call at this time in Ninteen twenty six.

Eleven ends, thirteen tackles and half backs twelve guards six centers and quarterbacks, and four full backs are included in Moach Yost's official prospert roster. Eight of the men requested to appear are two year veterans, while an equal number have had vrsity experienre for on year.

Captain Bennie G. Oostermaan Michigan's brilliant end and two times member of the All American eleven, will lead a team onto the field at the opening of the schedule October first against Ohio Wesleyan which although lacking in exper ience when compared to Wolverine teams of the past few years will compare favorably with any team in the western conference.

Le Roy Heston, nephew of the great Wilie Heston, who scintillated for Michigan at the opening of the present century is the only other end besides Oosterbaan who can claim varsity experience. Frank Harriga, Marshall Boden, Herman Nyland and La Verne Taylor, the latter one of the most likely cndidates for the position vacated by the graduation of William Flora, constitute the remaining experience.

In addition to these. Douglas Ker Sheldon Morrison. W. P. Foster H Roderick and C. F. Carter have been called to furnish opposition to the veterans for the one open end position. None of these prospects have had the opportunity to display their wares against real opposition and just what future lies in store for them depends on their showing when put toworkagainst Ooosterbaan Taylor and the other veteran flankmen

An almost identical situation prevails among the tackles, only Ray Grinnell having withstood the knocks that varsity competition provides. Baer and Gabel assumed the positions throughout last season, and there is every reason to believe that they will continue to hold down their berths unless one of the "AMA" or freshmen numeral winners of last year furnishes an upset.

Besides Gabel, Grinnell and Baer Coach Yost has called Frank Mease W. B. Crego. Wilford Ketz, Otto Pommerening. Maxwell Nickerson. Henry Rose, J. S. Robbins, Harold Walder. E. B. Joorman and F. D. Anderson for duties at the tackles. Ketz is a sophomore recruit from Coach Steve Farrell's track team, while Meese Pommerening, Nickerson and Rose are squadmen from last year but who failed to win the "M" for varsity performance.

BUCK RUINS MOTOR CAR

George H Messenger of Sault Ste Marie dothesn't think very well of the white tailed deer of the north country. While out riding recently a big buck and Messenger's automobile both thought they had the right of way on a road near Eckerman with the result that the car got licked. The deer was rolled over three times, got up, looked at Messenger's outfit, flipped its tail and then hopped away. Messenger's car, with a smashed radiator, headlights dead bumper dragging and engine out of commission, had to wait for the automobile ambulance.

For fifty years genuine 'Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. DO YOU KNOW ?

The famous Dr. Dunn is conducting regularly in this column a "QUESTION AND ANSWER BOX," dealing with a large number of subjects of general interest to the readers of this paper. You are invited to send in your questions to Dr. Dunn, care of this paper, and they will be given prompt consideration; and where deemed of general interest, will be answered through this column so far as space permits.

Dr. Dunn has for a long time been a member of the executive staff of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company of Detroit, and has become famous through his weekly broadcasting over WGHP. The doctor has had wide professional, commercial and sociological experience, and while the absolute accuracy of the answers to all questions is not guaranteed, the most authentic sources of information will be the basis of all replies.

Q—Dear Dr. Dunn; How long do automobiles last on the average.

A.— An analysis of the experience of nearly a hundred thousand cars registered in Michigan shows that the average life of motor vehicles is a lettle more than seven years On the basis of life insurance "expectation of life" tables, the car you buy new today will live seven and four tenths years. For three and half years old the expect ation of life is four and twenty seven hundreds years; for cars six and half years old, two and eight tenths years: for cars nine and half years old, one and eight tenths years; and for one twelve and a half years old, one and two tenths years.

Q— Dear Dr. Dunn; What is the most popular motor car in oriental countries.

A—Statistics conclusively show that American made motor cars have the call in oriental countries as well as finding a big market in the European countries. Reports from Japan for instance show May reports of motor cars from the Unit ed States totalling two hundred and ninety seven againstfift y seven motor cars of all other makes; andi n addition the United States sold two hundred and thirty seven motorcycles.

In such far distant places as the Arabian Peninsula, American motor cars have also had big sales, and in spite of British nd Italian competition more than ninety per cent of all motor cars in use in South western Arabia are of American makes.

Q.— Dear Dr. Dunn; Should radio aerials bea ttached to electric light poles.

A.— Never attach aerials or anything else to electric light poles Never string aerials over or under other wires. A considerable number of deaths and serious injuries, have already been caused by accidental contact of outdoor aerials with electric light a nd power wires

Q.— What constitutes a good driver.

A.— To be a good driver in the terms of applied ethics, is to be a person of good manners, truly an altruist ready to see and appreciate the problems of others, to make proper allowance for them and to exercises even a little more patience, care and consideration than is actually called for by letter of the law.

Q.— Dear Dr. Dunn; When installing gas appliances what precautions should be observed.

A.— In gas installations four things should be observed. Have the appliance placed in a convenient and well ventilated location. Make strong gas tight connections Protect combustible materia l by spacing or insulation. Provide vents or flues for the disposal of fumes. If possible have the appliance placed so that there will be a circulation of air between it and the wall. This will help to keep the wall cool. If shelves are placed above a stove or heater, they should be protected on the underside from heat.

TEACHER FIFTY YEARS IN MANISTEE RETIRES

L. F. Brinkmann has been a school teacher in a Manistee school for fifty one years, but now the illness of his wife has forced him to resign. SIGHT SEEING BUS FOR FACTORY PLANT

Visitors to Gigantic Pontiac Plant Now View Operations While Riding

Because of the tremendous size of the new Pontiac plant of the Oak land Motor Car Company and because of the desire to spare the hundreds of visitors and dealers who daily wish to go through it the neccessity of walking miles to follow all the manufacturng processes, a "sight seeing" bus service has been placed in operation.

A Pontiac Six car with a specially built bus body with capacity for twelve persons, carry the visitors through the broad aisles. The bus is being run on a schedule.

Since this plant has been placed in operation the number of visitors has steadily increased, dueto the fact that its one of the largest plants in the country under one rooof and because it is one of the most modernly equipped automotive plants to be seen anywhere, with several new features of building contruction and operations.

The bus takes visitors first thru the engine manufacturing section then the car assembly and lastly the car storage. The driver of the car tells of the various operations and stops at processes of unusual interest. Thus the trip which formerly took more than two hours has been reduced to less than a half hour in addition to taking the fatigue out of the trip.

MANUFACTURING PLANT TO LOCATE IN ALBION

Another industry will begin operations here soon, it was announced recently. The firm the Decker Screw Products company of Jackson is headed by a group of men from the latter city in which place it had previously been conducted. Screws of all kinds will be manufactured by the new concern.

Division No. 1 of the M. E. L. A. S. will meet Wednesday, August 3 at the home of Mrs. Ray Gorsline.

REMOVE SPEED LID IN STATE IN AUGUST

Thirty five Mile Limit To Be Dropped But Driver Must Be Responsible For Car

Just three weeks from Monday will see the expiration of the period during which Michigan automobile drivers on rural highways will be forced to drive less than thirty-five miles an hour, and the beginning of the period during which they can go at ninety miles an hour if they can have a car that can make that speed.

All this is the result of the passage of the ninteen twenty seven legislature of the measure sponsored by Sen. Seth Q. Pulver, adminis tration leader of Owosso. The phraseology of the measure set the speed limit at that speed at which a driver can operate his car carefully, safely and prudently" but the thirty five mile limit is specifically removed.

The law goes into effect August fourteen, which it so happens is Sunday, a good day to try out the effects of the new law.

Adds Responsibility

If, however an accident results from high speed driving this fact and circumstances will be regarded by police as "presumptive evidence of carelessness on the part of the driver",. In other words, go as fast as you want to but if you hit anything you're careless, according to the law. If the other fellow manages to get out of your way, you're not careles,s according to the law. At least, this is the way in which some people have interpreted the new measure.

Actually, of course, its effect will not be quite as broad as that.

The revision of the speed limit law is expected to prove effective, both for the motorist and for the traffic officials highway officers state, "Drive Safely" will be the new law for the motorist. The highways will be well patrolled, however and careless motorists will be be arrested the officials declare.

Mc Keighan, Frank King, superintendent of the Hurley hospital and Merliss Brown president of the hospital board.

700 BUY DEFUNCT INTERURBAN LINE

Both the longest and the shortest is Michigan's newest interurban railway system. The "Unted Surburban", coming into Grand Rapids from the southwest has a mileage of eight and three-tenths and a list of stockholders exceeding 700

It is the shortest interurban rail way in the United States, and boasts the longest list of stockholders. It is owned by the people who will ridei n the cars. 'Will ride." for the line, while complete, can not be opened with service until the cars, which are being shipped from New York, arrive..

When the old-time interurban road of which the new system is a rejuvenated part, died, prayers were said in lament over its demise and when the new road was born it was christened with prayer. The "United Suburban" is a singular public utility. More than its comparatively short trackage and its lenghty list of shareholders is the character of the population it is to serve. There is a railroad through the territory in view, there are first-clas paved roads and bus lines; and the private ownership of automobiles appears to be quite up to the average. More significant, the older suburban line which the new one supplants, died for lack of patronage, and another interurban line running out of Grand Rapids is having a confesedly hard struggle to survive..

But, a Hollander knows what he wants, he doesn't often want anything but what he needs, and what he needs he is generally willing and able to pay for. The population along the line of the United Suburban is preponderantly Dutch When several hundred of them came forward in public meetings and planked down $10 each for a share of stock in the nascent United Suburban the general public revised the opinion held long before the Grand Rapids, Holland & Chicago road went the way of all mortality last October — that an interurban line out of Grandville wasn't needed. Probably Benton S. Hanchett, promoter of the original road, had ben reflecting on the practical shrewdnes and thrift of the Hollanders when he said, in a talk to a school house meeting in Grandville:

"If the old road had had such a list of stockholders as this one now has, it wouldn't have gone on the rocks.."

Grandville, said to be one of the smallest incorporated villages in the state, was the community that promoted the new line.

WE didn't print the picture at the right to tempt you to playing "hookey" from work— but just as a reminder that the 'big fellows' are hitting the bait again out in the nearby streams and lakes. for a trip to the Big Star Country Club?

Far in the northland where trout leap to the bait, BEAR roam the virgin forest and DEER flee at the sound of footsteps, mankind has invaded to bring together the wild woods and the prisoner of conventionality— the "cliff dweller" of today, he whose homelife is spent in the four walls of an office and the cramped quarters of a city apartment home.

Once theMecca of the Indian for hundreds of miles around Big Star Lake has played a prominent part in Michigan's history. Today Big Star Lake is opening as the Mecca of the white man, a great tract of virgin land with 21 miles of shore line and abounding in trout streams, having been purchased for the opening of the Big Star Country Club.

Within a stone's throw of fine roads and yet unsullied by the incroachment of civilization, this "Heaven Spot" is only a short distance from Traverse City.

Already the membership lists contain some of the leading citizens of the state. men who have been in the public eye; men known for their acts as well as their word and all are working together to make the Big Star Country Club one of the greatest playgrounds for its members of any like organizations in the world.

This project is under the personal supervision and direction of the well known H. Altman, whose experience in handling resort properties for years all through Michigan has been of a very high degree

This spot is in the heart of Michigan's resort territory, the land of pleasure, health and nature's playground. This lake is located between Grand Rapids and Traverse City, the nearest town being Baldwin. Big Star Lake has 21 miles of shore with a sandy beach. Bluegills, perch and sunfish are plentiful while the greatest diversion for the fisherman is the number of trout.

SAGINAW FLAX BEST FOR UNITED STATES

Experimental work begun 17 years ago by the office of fiber investigations of the Department of Agriculture has resulted in the development of a variety of fiber flax adapted to conditions in the United States, where the climate is generally warmer and drier than in the flax growing regions of northern Europe from which seed is generally obtained. The new variety known as "Saginaw' was grown on 1,070 acres in Michigan last year and produced approximately 8,000 bushels of seed.

The few growers who have been fortunate enough to try Saginaw say it is the first fiber flax they have ever grown that does not 'run out" a characteristic of the imported seed which makes it necessary to import fresh samples of seed at least once every four year. In a dry season Saginaw makes an exceptionally good showing compared with the Blue Blossom Dutch or other European flaxes.

Nearly all of the fiber flax of the world is grown at present from seed originating in the region of Psakof in Russia. None of the Russian seed, however is of a pure type Some of it produces tall, slender stalks with a small amount of seed that matures late; other seeds in the same lot produce shorter stalks that bear more seed which ripens earlier. When such seed is grown in Michigan the time of harvesting results in the gathering of seed from only the short earlier maturing plants, with ther esult that following crops deteriorate within a few generations to nothing but short plants. The seed is said to "run out" and fresh suppiles of seed must be imported.

Saginaw was developed to meet these conditions. In 1909 the department gathered 1,200 tall plants from the flax fields of the Saginaw Bay district in Michigan. Plantings of these selections and subsequent selection of desirable specimens resulted in a type that grew taller and better than others in dry seasons as well as in moist year. It was a light seed producer however and much difficulty was encountered in increasing the seed supply.

One means of hastening the increase was the planting of a winter crop in Porto Rico and inAlabama to secure a seed crop twice in the same year. Sufficient seed was finally obtained to distribute small quantities tocom mercial growers, who have increased it carefully and kept it pure.

The Saginaw variety is strictly a fiber flax. It does not produce enough seed to be grown for seeds production.

FARMER - BANKER DEVELOPS — NEW VARIETY OF WHEAT

Viking Red is the name given to a new variety of red wheat developed on the farm of C. B. Kelsey, banker, near Hudsonville. The variety originated from a few head of exceptionally high quality of wheat found in a field of red wheat

From this small beginning Kelsey obtained enough seed to sow 20 acres last fall, and it gives promise of yielding as well or better than the original stock.

Extra large heads charaterize the new variety. The heads are reported to measure five to five and one-half inches in length and the straw stands more than five feet high.

WHEAT SITUATION IS DECLARED FAVORABLE

A wheat market situation as favorable for farmers this season as it was a year ago is foreseen by the Department of Agriculture despite the forecast of a larger production this year and the increase n stiocks on hand July 1.

The United States was placed up on the export basis for practically all classes of wheat by last year's good harvest, the department said today. Canada, Argentina and Australia also had large surpluses and world shipments were the largest on record. Europe's continued active demand readily absorbed these heavy shipments at relatively steady prices. While world shipments have decreased recently, the delayed crops in Europe, together with limited stocks, will make it necessary to import considerably more wheat before new crops are avalable.

Allowing for a prospective United States carryover of around 85,000,000 bushels, it continued, and for countries equal to last season, stocks of old wheat remaining for export in these countries and on the ocean July 1 were about 60,000,000 bushels greater than on July 1 last year.

The domestic winter wheat crop in review said, will be nearly 50,000,000 bushels below last year's but the spring wheat crop will be nearly 70,000,000 bushels larger. Increases in European and North African crops were indicated, but these increases however were said not to be great enough to make up for the indicated reduction of 85,000,000 bushes in Canada and for prospective decreases in the Southern Hemisphere.

WORLD WAR HERO

Give Russell Fisk, Manistee, World war veteran a sheet of paper and pencil, tell him what you want in the way of a musical composition, and in 30 minutes he will produce it for you, whether it be a lullaby, jazz dance number, love lyric or overture. And just by way of giving full measure, he will arrange the orchestrations fo r as many as a dozen instruments, all without touching a piano or without the aid of an instrument of any kind.

Fisk is known to many of the men who served with him in the Red Arrow division as the fellow who composed the 125th regimental march, to which the buddies stepped in rhythm on many a drill field and before many a general.

Somewhere in France, unles they have discarded the records of decorations awarded for bravery is a story of distinguished service Fisk rendered while he was with the 125th. He couldn't get in when he first tried to enlist. His eyes were weak. Nor would they pass upon the second and third attempts but finally an officer from Manistee managed to get Fisk in as a musician. That is how he happened to do his part in making the world safe for democracy and saxophone players.

It was one day during a fight in Frances that the same officer who got Fisk into the service came across him sitting in the mud of a trench vainly trying to keep his head erect and his eyes open. He had been running messages for 48 hours without a wink of sleep. He had stepped into some mustard gas and one foot was infected. He was sick and dejected but he refused to quit as long as there were messages to carry. That is how he happened to get to the Croix de Guerre.

TO GRAND RAPIDS TRIP 73 YEARS AGO

Carefully guarding a bottle of liniment which she feared might spill over the India muslin and other fineries in her valise. Mrs.. Caroline Parks.. who wil lobserve her ninety-ninth birthday anniversary July 24, made a trip in 1854 across New York state behind a noisy little wood burning locomotive and on to visit a sister in Grand Rapids.

Twice during her journey from Troy, the little bottle of her grand father's Dutch liniment came in handy. Once was when a big ox ambled onto the track just ahead of the engine causing derailment of a couple of coaches one of them an 'emigrant" car.. The other accasion occurred between Jackson and Grand Rapids when transferred to a stage coach she came upon another coach which had overturned as the driver made too short a turn.

Mrs. Parks, then Miss Caroline Waldron, was unhurt in the railroad accident, but ministered to the injured, including a young man whose foot had been crushed. With her own handkerchief, soaked in the liniment, she bandaged the swollen leg of a passenger in the overturned coach.,

In Grand Rapids, Mrs. Parks, who now resides with a daughter, Mrs. Charles A. Shireling, of Grand Rapids, met William Parks, one of the early settlers and a year later became his bride.

Although lacking little more than a year of reaching the century mark, Mrs. Parks is ing ood health.

Youth and Prohibition

Scientific temperance instruction in the schools of yesterday did more to make prohibition a possibility to-day than any other one thing. The wastefulness and the corruption of the liquor traffic, the growth of total abstinence sentiment, the great list of total abstainers, the conviction that no argument of personal liberty could prevail against the evil social effect of drinking and the economic inefficiency of the drinking man, all helped. But they were secondary forces lying back upon the primary fact of a whole generation educated in the scientific result of liquor drinking.

It is to the youth of today that we must look, perhaps even more than to their elders, to sustain the prohibition laws. There has, without doubt, been a great deal of drinking among young people since prohibition was enacted. It is extremely doubtful as to whether more of them have been drinking than would have done so had there been no law. It may appear so without being so, because drinking illegally is very much more noticeable and sensational than drinking when liquor was licensed. No doubt, also the moral slump and the moral reaction following the war had a great deal to do with drinking among youth. But the fact that the same phenomenon exists among youth in European countries that license the liquor traffic and do not have prohibition answers rather effectively the claim that it is due to the restraint of prohibition laws. It should also be noticed that there has been a large increase of crime among adolescent youths and that the average age for bandits and hold-up men has been reduced by five or six years.

It is to be regretted that the youth convention at Memphis did not go on record more concretely in relation to the prohibition question than it did. One good, ringing, specific resolution relating to the question of prohibition, added to the four very excellent resolutions in relation to law enforcement in general, would have done great good. The convention itself did go on record in a very concrete and specific manner as follows:

"WHEREAS, There is a determined effort now on to break down national prohibition, and believing that adequate enforcement by federal authorities alone is impossible,

"BE IT RESOLVED:

"1. That the churches seek to revive in the citizenship the old time moral passion for the cause; and,

"2. That all the temperance forces mobolize to procure enforcement through local law officers in cooperation with federal authorities."

In the early days of December the national temperance organizations of the country held a council in Washington. They formulated a program of common action, through which they propose to revive the old moral passion for prohibition, and through it to demand that officials, both local and State, as well as national, get behind an effort to make the Volstead Act more effective than it has been. To this end they thought it worth while to give a rather thorough going pronouncement to the need for an enlarged education of youth in regard both to total abstinence and prohibition:

"There is imperative need for continued and enlarged education of youth in the facts and principles of total abstinence and prohibition. The youth of today has had no personal observation of the open legal liquor traffic. It must be taught the scientific, historical, and civic facts of prohibition. It must be given a vision of the objective of a temperance movement, namely, the freeing of human society from the evils of liquor. There are 26,000,000 learning youth in the schools and colleges of the United States; between one and two million of them become voters each year. Here is the field for building sound temperance public opinion.

"If this work is to be done effectively it is necessary to understand the viewpoint of youth, its zeal for facts, its genuine desire to be of practical use. Youth is ready to help a great cause if given a great program. Especial attention should be given by all organizations to strengthening scientific temperance instruction legally required in nearly all States. Friendly and cooperative contact for promotion of a sound public sentiment on the alcoholic question should be made with all teachers and other educators. Up-to-date, reliable temperance books, pamphlets, periodicals, and special literature should be abundantly supplied for all schools, colleges, and public libraries."

State Police Reported Very Disagreeable

Wet authorities claim that a large amount of tourist traffic comes to Southern Michigan and all on account of the extreme "wetness" of Canada just over the line. We presume this is true of a certain class of tourists but by far the most numerous and desirable of the visitors come here because they want a good place to spend their vacations where life is worth living and where watermelons and peaches are plentiful and where drinking water is the purest on earth, where buttermilk and pop go hand in hand as jollifiers. We also hear a good deal of complaint about parties entirely innocent of wrong doing being held up by the State Troopers on the highways and searched much to their discomfiture and amusement of travelers. Sinister complaints come in that State Police are brutal in their treatment of travelers and that they are swearing and cussing motorists because things are not as they should be. This same wet authority says that folks from Indiana and Ohio are being abused like Sam Hill by police who search their rigs and scatter their baggage along the road and commit other indignities. Also we are advised some tourists are mad clear through and declare by the beard of the Prophet they'll get out of Michigan and stay out.

Some of this propaganda may be true but most of it is badly twisted. About the only fellows who are complaining are genuine "boot leggers" who come here expecting to get by with wet loads but they don't make it. Several of this class have reposed in Hillsdale jail lately and they are complaining of course about the rotten treatment of tourists. The trouble with this kind of tourists is they are too "shiny" and must have a whole boatload of forty-rod behind the front seat in order to thoroughly enjoy their vacations, and it is this feature the police object to. Michigan has appropriated one million dollars to advertise her resources as a tourists paradise, and the wets are doing their prettiest to repudiate our excellent reputation as a summer resort.

Codling Moth Spray Said Due This Week

Fruit men of the southern counties of the state are being advised to spray their apple trees on or before August 6, for the control of the codling moth.

Observation cages, maintained throughout the state by the M. S. C. entomology department, have shown emergence of the adult of the moth during the past few days.

"The larvae of the second generation are due to commence entering the fruit about August 6", says Professor R. H. Pettit, head entomologist at M. S. C. "The department therefore recommends that the final arsenic spray be applied to standard winter varieties on or before August 6.

"Use three pounds of arsenate of lead and two and one-half gallons liquid lime - sulphur to two gallons of water. The spray dates given apply to counties south of and including Ottawa, Kent, Clinton, Shiawassee, Genesee, Oakland and Macomb. Dates will be given out as determined for northern counties."

Hundreds of Michigan dairymen saw the results that may be obtained in building up a dairy herd by means of a program of testing cows for production and vigorously weeding out low producing individuals, at the four Dairy-Day meetings held recently, according to the dairy department at M. S. C.

Large groups of dairymen at Pontiac, Kalamazoo, Ionia, and Traverse City were told by Professor O. E. Reed that every cow in the herd should be tested and that the test records must be used as a basis for selecting breeding animals, if the dairymen is to secure a maximum profit.

Cheap Hog Feed

Corn and tankage for hogs on pasture have been a popular ration for a long time, but the combination has received a hard jolt as a result of tests at the Wisconsin Experiment Station.

The feeding tests have demonstrated that a mixture of equal weights of tankage and linseed meal actually saves a full month's time in preparing hogs for market. The results mean the difference between profit and loss for many thousands of hog raisers, because the month's saving in time also means a month's saving in feed costs, labor and interest on the investment.

Neither tankage nor linseed meal alone would produce the month's saving of time and expense in the tests that was accomplished by the mixture of the two.

As a result of the station's remarkable discovery, the hog raiser who has no skim-milk or other dairy by-products has been put in a position to compete with skim-milk hogs, on a basis of time, economy of gains, and finish. In feeding the mixture on pasture, the corn is put in one hopper of the self-feeder, by itself. The tankage and linseed meal, equal parts by weight, are placed in another hopper and the pigs eat the proper proportion of each, with a saving of the expensive corn.

When pasture is poor or the pigs are in a dry lot, chopped alfalfa hay is added to the ration.

The Wisconsin station's discovery is extremely important in the case of spring litters being readied up for fall sale.

1,300 PRIESTS AND NUNS AT EDUCATION MEET

Catholic Associ tion Conference Brings Leading Teachers to Detroit

Over 1,300 priests and nuns, from all parts of the United States, met in Detroit at the twenty-fourth annual conference of the National Catholic Educational Association, held in the new Sacred Heart Seminary, of that city.

Every division of Catholic education, from the parochial grade school to the major theological seminary, was represented at the meet, which brought to Detroit leaders in educational fields from almost every state in the Union.

A reception held at the Hotel Statler in honor of the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D.D., Bishop of Detroit, and the Rt Rev. Thomas J. Shahan, D.D., rector of the Catholic University of America at Washington, and president of the Educational Association, was attended by hundreds of interested clergy and laymen.

Under the auspices of the faculty of the University of Detroit an open meeting was held in Orchestra Hall, at which the Hon. Dudley G. Wooten, A.M., LL.D, former superior court law at Notre Dame University, spoke on "Religion and Education from the Standpoint of a Layman".

In connection with the conference an exhibit of the latest developments in the way of aids to teaching, ranging from blackboards to scientific instruments and from uniforms to architectural drawings, was held. Fifty-three booths were occupied by leading publishers and school supply manufacturers of the country.

BISHOP ORDAINS EIGHT SEMINARIANS PRIEST

Eight seminarians were ordained priest recently by the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Detroit, in SS. Peter and Paul's Cathedral. Three of the new priests were ordained for the Detroit diocese and the others for dioceses in various parts of the country.

The new priests are: the Rev. Frs. Alfred J. Feldpausch, of Fowler, Mich.; William L. Shaw and John Miller, of Detroit; Stanislaus Czerniawski, for Burlington, Vt.; Anthony Glaudell, for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia; Stanislaus Libold, for Duluth, Minn.; Theophil Wioblewski, for Scranton, Pa., and Anthony Zapora, for Pittsburgh, Pa.

The first annual reunion of men who have made retreats at Manresa, the Laymen's Retreat League house near Detroit, was held recently. Since the opening of Manresa last September, nearly 350 men have followed the spiritual exercises at the retreat house, which is under the direction of the Rev. Fr. William E. Cogley, S. J. A short program featured the reunion, which was of a purely social nature.

BEWARE OF THE DEADLY DOTTED LINE

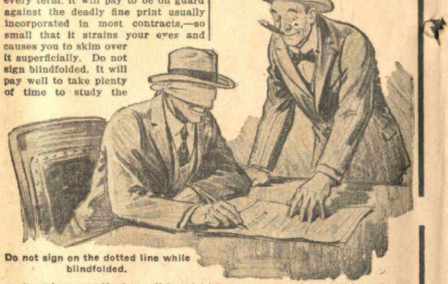
WITHDRAWING the family's savings account at the bank where it is safe, and losing it through speculation is a serious matter. It may bring great hardship, especially to the mistress of the home. It may force great economies in household management or amount to actual privation. It may mean that the children will have to go to work before they complete their education. The loss of the family's accumulations may even result in physical breakdown on the part of the wife through worry over the loss of savings which she helped to accumulate at the sacrifice of home comforts, but was not consulted when it came to investing them. The making of investments by men who are heads of families and inexperienced in finance should not be undertaken without consulting her. But even if both agree the venture should be talked over with the local banker or information about it obtained from the National Better Business Bureau in New York, which serves without cost and purely in the public interest. If this is done a lot of trouble and quite likely many regrets and heartaches will be avoided.

There is one point in the activities of the inexperienced investor where he should have above all a red-light stop signal to cause him to pause and investigate and that is just before he reaches the decision to "sign on the dotted line." Before you part with your savings in the bank by signing a contract placed before you by sharp promoters, stop, examine and investigate! It will pay to read the contract several times, even reading it aloud, all the while weighing every term. It will pay to be on guard against the deadly fine print usually incorporated in most contracts,—so small that it strains your eyes and causes you to skim over it superficially. Do not sign blindfolded. It will pay well to take plenty of time to study the contract by yourself where all is quiet and you are free from the personal influence of the persuasive promoter, for to sign without the calmest consideration may spell your Waterloo financially.



Do not sign on the dotted line while blindfolded.

Unless dealing with a responsible firm or individual, never sign on the dotted line. If in the least doubt, don't sign. Never sign on verbal assurances that you are fully protected. Terms stated orally but not incorporated in a contract are not binding. Glowing promises, wild exaggerations and gross misstatements of facts are seldom reduced to writing or made in the presence of your witnesses. Your failure to read and to understand a contract before signing is not a legal excuse. When you sign a contract you proclaim that you agree with its terms and will abide by and endeavor to carry them out.

Don't sign just because some high-pressure salesman tells you that you are a wonder, or that you show good judgment, or that you have a lot of sense. Sign only when you are fully convinced that your interests are fully protected.

Prominent Men Used as Scenery

A number of slick promoters recently organized in a certain city an "automobile club" with the assurance that it would soon erect a number of downtown garages where busy business men could park their cars. As an inducement for business men to take out memberships, charges to them for storage were to be nominal, much less than a like service could be obtained elsewhere. A Board of Governors was organized with the names of prominent local citizens, among them two eminent judges. No sooner was the organization of the board complete than the promoters, armed with the endorsement of these outstanding men, went forth to reap a great harvest by selling memberships. They got the members—but the building of the garages remained an idle dream.

When the members of the Board of Governors were later interviewed as to how they came to consent to the use of their names they stated that they thought the additional storage facilities were needed in the downtown district and they signed up without looking into the proposition carefully. Imagine their chagrin when told that a reading of the by-laws of the organization showed that the Board of Governors had no powers but had been used merely as scenery in order to sell memberships in a fake proposition!

Because these prominent citizens were careless with their names and failed to read and to investigate the enterprise, hundreds of business men bought memberships only to lose their money. Signing without reading is about the most dangerous act of financial carelessness that can be committed.

Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus

Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus, pro claimed as the foremost trained wild animal show of the universe, will shortly be in our midst. Billers have finished their work through this territory and bright and highly colored posters tell of the coming of Hagenbeck-Wallace to Hills dale on August 11.

Many new innovations have been created by Hagenbeck-Wallace for the 1927 tour. "The Geisha" said to be the greatest musical spectacle ever produced will open the exhibition, while "Blazing Glory" a patriotic presentation will bring the program to a close. Several hundred characters appear in "The Geisha" and the wardrobe and costuming is said to be the most pretentious of any circus spectacle.

The Hagenbeck' standard in trained wild animal numbers has also been maintained and such noted subjugators as Clyde Beatty, Capt. Bernard and Bob MacPherson will send their jungle charges through sensational routines in the big steel arenas. In addition to the wild animal groups, there will be displays of domestic beasts. Several groups of Liberty Horses will appear in the rings, while the hippodrome track will be the scene of a Horse Show, second to none. Forty singing girls and forty prancing steeds appear in one display.

Other noted features include the Orrin Davenport Family of Equestrians, the Ward-Kimball Troupe of Flyers and Cheerful Gardner and the original Hagenbeck elephants. Plenty of clowns, to be exact fifty, will work all during the performances, which start promptly at 2 p m, to 8 p. m, The big double menagerie includes specimens from all portions of the globe, including highly valuable giraffes.

The right height for the kitchen sink depends on the height, length of arm, and general build of the person who is to use it. Thirty-six inches from the rim to the floor is often given as a good average height. If the sink is too low, a flat box or block may be used on which to set the dishpan while working at the sink.

One of the secrets of French flavoring in cooking is the discreet use of garlic. Put one nubbin or 'clove" of garlic in with the stewing or soup chicken; its flavor is scarcely perceptible, but will greatly improve the flatness of the boiled meat. Rub the salad bowl with garlic, and drop it into gravy or stew, removing it as soon as the flavor is delicately noticeable. Garlic can be used so that those who think they object to it do not know what gives a dish its unusual ly good taste.

FRUIT THAT IS ALWAYS FRESH

ALL fruits contain a high percentage of the precious vitamines, as well as fruit acids, sugar, mineral salts and protein in varying quantities. The process of canning is now brought to such a point of perfection that these valuable elements are captured and practically no loss sustained. Hawaiian pineapple is particularly rich in food values, and also possesses medicinal qualities—among the latter a high percentage of bromelin—an aid to protein digestion. This all increases its food value, and since the American housewife has become better acquainted with its adaptability to any part of the menu, it has grown steadily in favor.

Either the crushed or the sliced pineapple is ready to serve just as it comes from the can. Though it combines admirably with other foods in various more or less complicated recipes, the most convenient way to use either kind is in unadorned simplicity, either by itself or with congenial accompaniments. To have this fresh fruit ready to serve without any preliminary hulling, coring, peeling, or cleaning, means a great deal to any housewife, not only in an emergency but in the regular course of household affairs. A few suggestions follow for serving pineapple either by itself or in quick combinations.

Crushed pineapple may be called pineapple sauce, for it is delightful eaten as applesauce might be, with hot biscuits or cake, or as an appetizer at breakfast. It takes its place as a salad too, and is excellent for mixing with other fruits for a fruit compote, or as a sauce for ice cream, or for use as a filling in cantaloupe.

Sliced pineapple has many emergency uses. An easy salad is made by placing slices on lettuce leaves, sprinkling with walnuts, adding a square of cream cheese and serving with mayonnaise dressing. Pineapple slices with ham, lamb chops, roast veal, chicken, or turkey make an excellent combination, the succulent tartness of the pineapple acting as a digestive for the meats. For a dessert, place slice of cake cut with a round cutter, on slices of pineapple, and top the cake with whipped cream or use crushed pineapple as filling for a cake. Ice cream or custard heaped on sliced pineapple makes a welcome variation in quick desserts.

One of the quickest substantial luncheon dishes that can be made is an omelet. A pineapple omelet is a delightful novelty. Make the omelet in the usual way, and when it is ready to be folded, lay slices of pineapple or well-drained crushed pineapple on half of it. Fold over, and serve immediately. Should anyone like the recipe for the omelet here it is: Add one-quarter teaspoon salt to four eggs and beat until light. Add three tablespoons hot water. Melt one tablespoon butter in a frying-pan and turn in the mixture. Cook slowly.

Establish Patrols For Corn Borer Control

With the arrival of sweet corn on Michigan markets, particularly shipments from Ohio, road patrols have been established by the State Department of Agriculture on all highways leading out of the corn borer area to regions where the pest has not yet been found. The aim is to prevent roasting ears from infested localities entering borer-free territory and possibly causing new infestations of the pest.

State and federal quarantines prohibit the shipment of all corn on the cob outside of the quarantined area, according to Herbert E. Powell, state commissioner of agriculture, and embargoes have been placed on such shipments by transportation companies.

Tourists, hucksters, and other human agencies, howeyer have been found to constitute a real menace to control of the pest, he says, by not complying with the quarantine regulations.

Because sweet corn matures earlier than field corn, the corn borer seems to prefer it. For this reason, roasting ears are very likely to contain living borers. If the unrestricted movement of sweetcorn were permitted, the pest would soon spread to all parts of the United States, Commissioner Powell says.

Large signs have been erected at patrol points to caution people against carrying sweet corn outsid of the corn borer area. Automobiles and conveyances, upon approaching a quarantine line, will be required to come to a full stop. The occupants will be questioned by the patrols and any corn on the cob which is fcund, will be confiscated. At night, torches and flares will serve as a signal to motorists that they are approaching a patrol.

The importance of road patrol work is stressed by corn borer officials. In Ohio and Michigan during 1926, 7,546 dozen ears of corn were taken from automobiles. Corn containing living borers was confiscated from tourists bound for Florida, Missouri, and Iowa. The interception of this corn undoubtedly prevented the introduction of the European pest into these states Commissioner Powell asserts.

They are telling us of a new disease similar to tuberculosis but worse, which is found in Rabbits, squirrels and other rodents and which is easily transferrable to man. It is called Tularema and the germs will penetrate through the human skin by contact therefore one should be very careful in dressing rabbits or squirrels and should use rubber gloves. Cooking destroys the bugs. Symptoms are head ache, fever, vomiting, chills, etc. within forty-eight hours after exposure. Glands become swollen abscesses form and ulcers are noticeable where the germ entered the skin. This disease lasts two or three weeks and one does not recover for months although no deaths are recorded. Doctors have called this trouble "flu", "septic poisoning" and a lot of other names all of which have proved fictiitous. We are especially warned to be careful in skinning rabbits not to get the hands near the eyes and the trouble is much to be feared as it leaves patients in a very weakly condition.

The newspapers are sure somewhat keen for news concerning our good president and his wife and their household now sojourning in the Black Hills. It has gotten so bad that every time the President smokes or catches a fish the reporters are on the job to record the fact. Seems as if the first people of the land ought to by rights be entitled to at least a few weeks of solitude such as other citizens enjoy away from the maddening crowd without being hounded and watched like a pair of wild-cats. If the past few weeks is a sample of President Coolidge's most private moments, he is a very unfortunate person, and is in a fair way to die exceedingly young. As far as the notoriety of the high office is concerned we prefer to believe Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge most sincerely long for the quiet days of private life, and somewhere we note that he does not expect to be a candidate for re-nomination, and we should not be perturbed if this were entirely true. Probably he and his excellent wife have had enough of the terrific wear and tear that belongs to high emoluments. Even in that desolate far away region they are obliged to undergo all the nuisances and petty annoyances of publicity forced upon them by an over-zealous worshipful public.

The Department of Agriculture says rats are probably decreasing in numbers in the United States. Present-day sanitary requirements and modern building are having their effect. But in spite of all that has been done, the rat is still mankind's greatest enemy in the world. The Department has just issued a new bulletin on Rat Control. It's Farmers' Bulletin No. 1533-F. It pointsout that you should rat-proof all new buildings. Close all openings through which rats can gain entrance. Remove all shelter for rats. Promptly dispose of all garbage, trash and other waste on which rats can feed. Kill the rats!

TREND REVEALS AUTUMN STYLES

Hardly has the last seam in the summer frock been finished than comes the early tidings of things that will happen sartorially in the fall.. Although it is too early in the season to get any definite idea on what autumn will bring in way of modes, the mid-season collections show certain trends that give hints of possibilities that may be developed in the future.

For instance, among some of the latest showing in Paris shops there is seen a decided movement toward the flare silhouette, which is quite different from the godet. This new flare is shown on both coats and dresses, the skirts of which are slightly fuller in front or at the sides of the skirt on the bias, insetting circular pieces or pleats. But regardless of this tendency, the straight line silhouette still remains the most important.

In the general news of the modes are a few highlights that can be told. Amang these are that coats for winter will be very straight or with a slightly flaring line in front and a loto f inset fabric work and seamings. Fur trimmings on coats promise to be very lavish: advance models hvae large fur collars with a wide hem of furall the way down the front.

Skirts remain short as ever except for a few instances where they dip at the back for evening wear. The short loose coat of the same material as the evening dress was launched quite a few seasons ago, but it is only now becoming a very important accessory. The short sleeve has been taken up and it will continue to be shown this winter. The long tight sleeve and the full sleeve caught at the wrist will remain the smartest for town wear this autmun. The v neck, the square and the high round neck are the three types worn for daytime — for evening, the wide round and v-shaped neck-line.

The general opinion is that there will be a lot of gray, tobacco brown rust colors, deep blues and greens The grays of most importance are the blue grays, pearl, mauve and taupe shades. The blues in the very bright shades and deep grass greens. The rust colors and tobacco browns are already worn by some of the smart set. Rose beiges and yellow beiges will both be worn this winter, as well as the faded old rose shades.

IDEAL FARM HOME IS AIM OF STATE

Through al lthe work and the words of the thousands of men and women serving agriculture — the county agents, the extension specialists, the research scientists, the engineers, the college presidents, the officials of farm organizations even the Congressman from rural districts — there runs one bright dream: An ideal farm home.

There are scores of ways in which it is being approached, but none is more direct than two projects now being carried on in Michigan. One is an experimental eletric power line, eight miles long between Dansville and Mason erected by the Consumers Power Co., and supervised by the Michigan Commitee on the Relation of Electricty to Agriculture. The other is the demonstration tour of the 'Better Home Truck", sent out by the department of agriculture, engineering and home economics of the Michigan State College.

The ideal farm home is al lthat a home anywhere could be. It combines the best that country and city have to offer — the fresh air, sunshine, open sky, and wide spaces of the country with the close companionship of Nature and growing things; the comfortable home conveniences of the rity, the running water, electric lights, washing machnes, vaccuum cleaners, radios electric refrigerators and modern plumbing.

Dwelling in this home, of course is a happy and healthy family — a man in love with his work a woman freed from the drudgery of endless household duties; boys and girls thriving in the fresh air and sunshine.. And pervading this home, the love of books, music, plays, paintings; alertness to the progress of events in the world at large; harmony and good fellowship.

Anyone at all familiar with conditions on American farms knows that homes like these are all too rare. There are a few enough to make the dream plausible. For the most part, adverse economic conditions have forced the farmers to accept a lower standard of living than prevails in the cities; lower, that is except in fresh air and sunshine and elbow room. The homes of the cities have been able to make use of the remarkable development of science and invention; but most farm homes, as far as these things are concerned are still in the Nineteenth Century.

DETROIT CITY OF WOMEN BANKERS

Detroit has become, the city of women bankers.

With 775 of them counting millions every day, cashing checks for customers, pasing on loans and advising other women — and men too about their investments. there is probably none to challenge Detroit's claim to first place among the cities of America.

During the month, Detroit was the host to women bank presidents, women cashiers and women branch bank managers who participated in the annual convention of the American Institute of Banking. All are interested in the Detroit women bankers for they have been the first formally to organize and give the institute a Women's Division.

The presence of so many women behind teller's windows — and in swivel chairs too — in Detroit is plausibly explained by one of the members of the Women's Division.

"Detroit is an industrial city in which the great majority of its male population is at work during banking hours," she said. "The wives do much of the banking them selves and when women do banking, they like to bank with women.

"Of course it may be that Detroit bankers realize that women are efficient in every thing they try to do. The busines trained woman certainly at least is on a par with the man trained for business."

WOLVERINE ARMY WILL MARCH ON HINDENBERG LINE

Michigan men again will be in in the forefront of an American army that will cross to France in September.

At least 360 former soldiers of this state will attend the American Legion convention in Paris, according to Robert J. Byers, in charge of the arrangement.. After the meetings in Paris, the peacetime army will march on the Hindenberg line but this time not through a storm of shot and shell.. Visits to the famous battlefields of a few short years ago will feature this reunion in France.

Michigan men, together with those of Montana and Washington will sail, from Quebec Sept. 9 on the steamer Mont Royal.

"We'll land at Antwerp and from there wil go down the Old Hindenberg Line into Paris", says Byers.

Harold G. Edwards, commander of the American Legion in Michigan wil have charge of the Michigan delegation.

Battle Creek Legionnaries will be especially well represented. In addition to their large delegation, a drum and bugle corps will help liven things aboard ship. . Jackson will send along its famous Zouaves who after the Paris celebration, will remain for a visit to eight or more Euporean countries.

FAILS IN BOATS BUILDS BRIDGES

Builder of many large river boats that plied the Kalamazoo River more than 50 years ago and one of the state's leading mill and bridge builders in the early day, James M. Sisson of Allegan is approaching his ninety first birthday, which he he will celebrate August 25..

He was born at Baldwinville near Syracuse, N. Y. and before coming to Michigan, constructed a number of boats used on the Erie and Oswego canals in the Empire State. He came to Michigan during the Civil War and settled first at Gobles and then at Allegan. His first river boat, the "Aunt Betsey" had a 100 foot keel and 18 foot beam. He also built numerous other river craft that made regular trips between Allegan and Saugatuck.

The "Aunt Betsey" was a passenger and freight boat, but it had only a short career, the drainage laws passed by the legislature in the middle '70's lowering the water in the river to such an extent that the stream became unnavigable to commercial craft.

Undaunted by his defeat at the hands of the agriculturists of that day, Sisson moved his shipyards to Saugatuck and began constructing vessels for the lake runs. At that he was less successful. In 1872 he was elected highway commissioner of Allegan County. In that post he constructed the county's first iron bridge, now known as the Little John bridge and did such a good job that the structure is as serviceable today as ever. Later he built two jackknife bridges over the Kalamazoo River.

SAGINAW LAYS PLANS FOR 14th ANNUAL FAIR

Appointments of departmental superintendents for the fourteenth anual Saginaw county fair, opening September 12 for one week, have been announced by John Leeidlein, president of the fair. Entry lists already indicate that the display will be larger than ever before.

A SUMMER FROCK OF CHARMING BEAUTY

JUNE MARLOWE, popular actress wearing a summer frock of exception beauty. Its a gown of hand-embroidered French silk muslin — made in simple design with the embroidery conspicuously used on the bodice and skirt. 1he flowers on the embroidery were done in colored worsted and the fancy scallops in silver thread.

With the frock, Miss Marlowe is wearing a pale blue hat of horsehair braid trimmed with a velvet bow.

FLOWERED HATS ARE COMEBACK

The flowers that bloom in the spring are being repeated on Milady's frock and bonnet. Where flowers were conspicuously absent in last summer's styles they are flourishing this season.

Flowered-trimmed hats are stressed by most of the smart shops, the flowers used being the smaller types of spring posies such as violets, pansies, daisies small rosebuds and various water lillies.. Many times these flowers are lacquered or made of feathers or straw, although as a rule they are more natural imitations of the real flowers.

Various are the whims of the summer mode to suit the already whimsical sex! Yet there is not such a bewilderment of them as there was in the spring. The silhouette has undergone an actual change, and skirt lengths remain the same.

What to select for these warm months, what to eliminate and what to spurn, is truly an art. Each new fad seems of such extreme chic thatit causes us to make our most lamentable sartorial mistakes.

Different types of flowers are beginning to have their place in one's wardrobe. There are tailored flowers to be worn with tailored wear, which have a demure tailored simplicity all their own. There are the graceful, soft chiffon flowers that are worn with more dressy afternoon gowns. There are lusicious velvet flowers that lend an air of elegance to simple silk frocks and there are elaborate jeweled flowers for formal evening wear. Choose your corsage with due consideration.

By their handkerchiefs ye shall know them!

Both the Greeks and Romans had little square of linen, ancestors, no doubht, of our modern handkerchief. As time went on the handkerchief became more and more elaborate. They were never intended to be useful! Can yon not imagine the handkerchiefs of sheerest linen and priceless lace, some times even jewelled, that would accompany the gorgeous satin and silk costumes of both sexes in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries?

And today, as always, a woman shows ultra good taste or the lack of it in the kind of handkerchief she carries — and a man too, for the matter. Any lovely lady will naturally have a dainty fresh hand kerchief — but the true artist will take advantage of the opportunities offered in the mode to make a handkerchief mean something to her ensemble.

Tow piece — one piece — two-piece — one-piece, which will you have? Because this summer you may have exactly which ever you wish, if you make just the tiniest concession to 1927 and see that either one is bloused.

Of course, many of last summer's indications are fulfilled, and if, for instance, your skirt is oddly pleated, or your blouse shows a bolero, or tier idea is suggested in the ensemble, then you are particularly smart.

There is a decided tendency to combine lingerie details with controlling garments — girdles, corsets and brassieres — and one of the newest samples of this is the girdle step in, which simply ataches a cunning little georgette step in to a girdle and there you are.

Vests attached to brassiers, or brassiere combinations are equally interesting, though not as new.

White enamelware may be cleaned by dipping a wet cloth into baking soda and rubbing it on ware. Do not spare the soda. If food burns in a pan, put in a generous amount of soda with cold water and let the utensil stand on the back of the stove.

Almost any one will take your advise but one of a hudred will generate faith enought to use it.

BORER FIGHT VICTORY SEEN

More than 95 per cent of the Europen corn borers in the infested region around Lake Erie were destroyed as the result of the four month's intensive spring campaign it is estimated by officials of the United States Department of Agriculture.

"This campaign conducted by the department in co-operation with the State agricultural colleges, the State departments of agriculture and more than 300,000 farmers of New York Pennsylvania Ohio Michigan and Indiana, is one of the most intensive ever waged against an insect pest in the United States says the report. "The final result however will be determined this fall when records of thespread and infestation of this year's corn crop can be completed?

The campaign was begun March 14 under authority of an act of Congress appropriating $10,000,000 for the control of the European corn borer after the necessary legislation had been enacted by the states concerned. . From that time until the end of June, every effort was made to acquaint farmers in the area with the measures necessary for a satisfactory voluntary cleanup. These measures included the burning or plowing under completely of corn stalks, stubble cobs and trash left in the field, and the removal and burning of all corn stalks, cobs, and trash in barn yards, feed lots stacks or elsewhere that had not been shredded or made into ensilage.

Reports received by the department indicate a very high percentage of voluntary co-operation in carrying out control measures by farmers in the campaign area. This record on the part of the farmers in co-operating with the State and Federal agencies in the cleanup work, it is pointed out by department officials, is the more noteworthy in view of the adverse weather conditions under which the work was done and the short time which remained after complete authorization of the campaign was made.

The act provided for compensa- in controlling the borer which was in addition to that normal and usual in their farm operations. The maximum amount allowed for such work was $2 an acre of corn land. Under this provision of the act it is estimated that farmers in the campaign area who have made a voluntary cleanup will receive between of $4,000,0000 and $5,000,000.

HERE IS GOOD NEWS FOR THE MICHIGAN BEAN GROWER

The mother who almonishes her greedy offspring not to be a pig probably is acting in the interests of the child's health and manners. but she does a sad injustice to the procine race, say the biochemists of the Department of Agriculture..

With better propriety she might say 'Don't be a human being.'' For unlike the pig humans seldom know what is good for them in regard to eating. The instinctive faculty for picking a balanced ration survives in the human race only in the form of a few traditional dishes or combination of dishes.

The pig, on the other hand, though his warmest partisans will confess him to be a hearty performer at meal times and a frequent victim of premature obesity is nevertheless a scientific eater. He is the only large domestic animal that retains this faculty. Placed in a pen surrounded by troughs of varied fods he will, experiments show, invariably select himself a dinner thatwould pass muster with the sternest dietician. He would eat sauerkraut. if such were furnished but would balk at ice cream and pickls.

Few human beings can be guided safely by their own appetites in eating, say the biochemists, but the staple food combination adopted by the human race and sanctioned by usage, nevertheless generally are found on chemical analysis and biological experiment to be scientifically sound. The union of these two was no accident but was, as it were, made in heaven. Taken apart they are both acceptable items of diet but taken together in a single dish theirconstituent elements deveolp a passionate affinity each for each that, whatever epicures may say, makes powerfully for the immediate digestive happiness and ultimate well being of the partaker.

The same is true of ham and eggs Experiment by Department of Agriculture scientists recently has shown that the collaboration of these staples in the matter of vitamines is so happy as to rank the American public in this single instance, but lttle below the pigs is intutive descrimination. Lean pork they found, is rich in vitamin B, but low in fat-soluble vitamin A. Eggs on the other hand are low in Vitamin B and rich in vitamin A, the complementary nature of this nutritive combination being apparent.

Meals containing ham and eggs or bacon and eggs furnish a liberal supply of both vitamins, besides fat, protein minerals and other desirable constituents.

The most familiar food combination one with Biblical sanction is that of bread and meat and another not mentioned is holy writ but almost equally classic, is pork and beans. Now both of the vegetable constituents of these combinations like the meat, contain ample quantities of protein and people have come to regard then as 'meat substitutes." In fact scientists themselves, until recently, commonly assumed that a pound of digestive protein in one food product had practically the same food value as a pound in another.

But actually such was not the case.. Experiments have proven that the proteins found in wheat, corn, rice, oats, navy beans and the like have less than half the nutritive value of the proteins found in such animal products as lean meat, fish, milk and eggs. White rats fed on a diet of beef protein gained 170 grams in weight in 60 days while other white rats confined to a diet of wheat protein gained but 71 grams and those fed on bean protein but little more.

What, then is the scientific justification for the familiar combination of bread and meat? This was answered when further tampering with the mealtime enjoyment of the white rats developed the fact that meat protein when fed in conjunction with that of vegetable products had the mysterious faculty of raising the nutritive value of the vegetable protein practically to its own level. The proteins in bread of a ham sandwich. for example, becomes more nutritious when eaten in combination with meat. .

Thus the ham sandwich is justified. Pork and beans are a scientific dish. They are food fit for hogs.

DEER WRECKS AN AUTO THEN FLEES TO WOODS

The automobile of George H. Messenger of Sault Ste Marie was wrecked when it struck a deer on M-28 near Eckerman. The deer reeled over two or three times from the impact and then ran into the woods. The lights of Messenger's car were smashed, the radiator jammed back against the engine and the bumper broken.

BRITISH APIARY EXPERT MAKES MICHIGAN VISIT

William H. Hempsall, apiary advisor of the English ministry of agriculture, has just completed an inspection tour of Michigan apiaries for the purpose of studying beekeeping methods and practices in this state.

He was accompanied by Prof. R.. H. Keltz of Michigan State College and H. M. Kerbs, chief inspector of apiaries in the State Department of Agriculture. The apiary of Ernest Pettifor, of Gaylord, was among those inspected. Mr. Pettifor came to Michigan from England about 20 years ago.

FARMERS DAY TO BE HELD AT STATE COLLEGE

Farmers Day visitors at Michigan State College, Aug. 4, who compete in the plowing contest will have an opportunity to drive a team of championship pure-bred horses owned by the college.

The plowing contest will be divided into three classes: Two horse walking plow, four horse gang plow and tractor gang plow. Horses tractors and plows will be furnished by the college. The contest will be judged on skill in making preliminary adjustments of plows and on the quality of work done.

The International grand champion mare, Maple Grove Lena. and the reserve champion mare, Dunham's Marie, will make up the team that is probably best known to those who have knowledge of the prize winning horses owned by the college.

A horseshoe pitching contest and a milk can throwing contest, supervised by Coach Ralph Young, athletic director, will be two new stunts added to the Farmer's Day entertainment program this year.

Entries for the town and country church choir singing contest are being received now at the college and competition is expected to be keen. The Grange base ball tournament finals, to be played off during the day, are included in the entertainment program.

All Michigan farmers are eligible to compete in the plowing contest. Entries may be made by applying to George Getmen of the college agricultural engineering department. Applications will be received until 9:30 of the morning of the contest. Winners of first place in each of the three divisions of the contest will receive trophies. Second place winners will be awarded nickel-plated wrenches..

DETROIT GETS THIRD UNITED STATES JUDGE

The eastern district of Michigan which comprises Detroit came into possession of its third federal judge when Judge Edward J. Moinet took the oath of office.

The court room of Judge Arthur J. Tuttle, senior judge of the district, was the scene of the ceremony

"This district court is as old as the state of Michigan" Judge Tuttle said.. "During that period of 90 years only five resident judges have presided here prior to the terms of the three incumbents.

"The first was Judge Ross Wilkins who at the time of his appointment by President Van Buren, was the territorial judge residing in Detroit. He served 35 years and retired in 1870 at the age of 70

The second was Judge John W. Longyear, who at the time of his appointment by President Grant, was a practicing lawyer at Lansing. He served five years until his death in 1875 at the age of 55 years.

"The third was Judge Henry Billings Brown, practicing law in Detroit when appointed by President Grant. He served in this court for 16 years and until 1890 when at the age of 54 years he was appointed associate justice of the supreme court.

"The fourth was Judge Henry H. Swan, who was a Detroit lawyer when appointed by President Harrison. He continued for 20 years and retired at the age of 71 years.

"The fifth was Judge Alexis C. Angel who was practicing law in Detroit when appointed by President Taft.

Judge Moinet is the eighth judge and the first to come to this bench from the state court. Judge Moinet has served for the past 10 years as circuit judge at St. Johns.

Let's All Pull Together For a Greater Michigan and Greater Nation

"The STRONTIUM CRYSTAL"
By L.V. HARVEY

Broadside answered broadside with exceeding rapidity, and as the "Lawrence" swung around, an unlucky shot passed through one of her lower ports, piercing her through and through. That shot killed seven men, and disabled two gun-crews. Blood began to flow freely. Kemble while superintending the training of a port gun, received a musket-ball through his arm, from the high tops of the "Detroit". Almost simultaneously a broadside raked the "Lawrence's" decks and every man who happened to be on the starboard side was either killed or disabled. Truly, the heavy iron of the British was beginning to tell.

,On board the "Niagara". things were going much better, for she had succeeded in raking the "Queen Charlotte" fore and aft with "long toms"; and her captain ordered the men to train the guns on the mainmast of the "Charlotte' which had already been pierced twice. As luck would have it the 'Charlotte", having taken in every stitch of sail, had no headway for steering and drifted squarely around. Thus far casualties had been small; but directly the "Niagara" broadsided again and raked the decks to a man; the mainmast went by the board also, while the "Niagara" had scarcely been hit by a half dozen shots.

On board the "Detroit" everybody was hopeful; every shot from her brass pieces tore the "Lawrence's" decks fearfully, and Perry saw his men swept by the terrible deluge of cannon-balls, like chaff before the wind. But he was as cool as a veteran, running every where, helping his men to train the guns, or more properly gun since but one could be handled on deck, so hot was the fire from Barclay.

"Signal Close Action" shouted Perry, as he ran forward, stepping gingerly over the mutilated bodies an debris. He realized that unless something intervened at once. the battle was lost as far as the flagship was concerned. "Set the sails' was the next command. Meantime marines stationed in the "Detroit" tops were constantly picking off Perry's gunners; and to attempt to handle the tangled rigging in the face of such a fire, was almost madness. But Perry was desperate. Presently the "Lawrence's" tattered sails began to pull. the helm was put over as she tried to close with her adversary; but Barclay must have anticipated the maneuver, for he broadsided again and the "Lawrence's" foremast went over with a crash. taking every bit of sanding rigging. she was now a helpless wreck with just fourteen men alive including Perry's fourteen year old brother who acted as powder monkey and faced the awful carnage like an old salt. The flag fell on deck Barclay ceased firing thinking the American Commodore had surrendered. In the lull Perry ordered the long-boat manned and soon they were speeding over the water toward the "Niagara".

About this time, Barclay discovered the true state of affairs and ordered his men to concentrate their fire on the longboat. Shot and shell fairly rained around Perry and his brave seamen, but he passed on miraculously unhurt boarded the "Niagara", and hoisted his flag. As yet this ship had sustained very little damage and Perry bore down the whole British line, broadsiding right and left Getting in close to the "Detrot", he poured forth a hot deluge of iron.

Barclay was somewhat taken back by this sudden change of affairs and his surprise turned to despair when his guns became disabled and two thirds of his men lay on the bloody decks, either dead or wounded. In maneuvering for a position the "Detroit" had fouled the "Queen Charlotte" and Perry taking advantage of this mishap, poured two terrible broadsides into the tangled ships. That volley practically decided the battle, and it is claimed that in less than eight minutes after reachng the 'Niagara", Perry had won the fight. Be this as it may, the British Admiral having absolutely no sound men to fight his guns, was compelled to surrender to an enemy whom he thought vanquished.

As the smoke lifted, it revealed the awful carnage of war; the two fleets commingled, shattered, wrecked.

Perry returned to the "Lawrence's" bloody deck and received the surrender magnanimously returning Barclay's sword with a compliment. After an inspection it was decided to burn the "Lawrence" as she was well nigh in a sinking condition.

The dead and wounded were transferred to the "Niagara" and at five thirty himself applied the torch to the doomed vessel. The fleets returned to Put in Bay with two hundred prisoners in the holds. That evening they buried the bloody dead on shore in a huge pit some three rods back. A silvery moon rode high in the heavens and the scene was one none could forget as theg ray haired chaplain read the short burial service in the presence of the assembled crews. Perry stood by his side, and held a lantern, which cast yellow reflections on their ruddy faces. Beyond, in a widening circle the remainder of the crews waited in a solemn hush; their bandaged heads bowed in an attitude of sadness.

Kemble. whose arm was paining him exceedingly had to remain in his bunk, much to his disgust; but the ordeal was less trying because of the companionship of Captain Barclay, who severely wounded, This estimable officers, though vanquished and disgraced, suffering intense pain, did not seem to be disheartened, and Kemble decided that a truer gentleman he had not met in many a day.

Sitting in his cabin that night, Perry wrote by the light of a slush lamp his famous mesage, "We have met the enemy, and they are ours;" and great was its rejoicing in Gen. Harrison's camp upon its receipt.

The surgeon had found the bone of Kemble's arm slightly shattered and expressed the opinion that it would not heal readily without a period of rest. The next day the Lieutenant was taken suddenly delirious, and blood poison developed There being no accomodations on board for the sick it was decided to send him to Fort Niagara on a furlough. One of the captured vessels carrying the prisoners and wounded departed next day with Perry and Kemble accompanied by Gen. Harrison.

The Commondore was very grave as he superintended the transfer of Kemble's stretcher to the sloop, for in the short time they had been thrown together he had become very much attached to his able subaltern, the Lieutenant being his senior by about three years: and Perry was wont to turn to him for assistance in solving many serious problems.

On Bass Island, the brilliant greens of summer were now turning to Autumn's melancholy brown and the day was dark and gloomy with low hanging clouds. Lake Erie's stormy tantrum was beginning to be manifest, for the water was a dirty gray in color, chopped by heavy swells runing white capped and sullen, as the departing sloop 'Niagara' fired a parting salute from her ten-pounders and the autumn haze swallowed up the outgoing craft leaving the fleet to its destiny; but is was as the loss of a master wheel— the life and spirit went away in the sloop. and what remained was the lifeless clay.

Lieutenant Kemble was worn to a shadow and in a stupor when they landed him at Erie, thence taking him by slow stages to Fort Niagara.

The day was drawing to a close at Stockdale. and as the sun went to rest behind a sooty bank of clouds, the sentinel on the rampart drew his heavy coat more closely around his throat: for a blustering chilling wind swept the corner of the parapet.

A deep boom followed leeward by the roistering gale, reverberated through the air from the firing of the sunset gun at Fort Niagara and an observer might have seen the flag descend jerkily to the ground soon the gloom of early winter's evening would shroud the town in darkness.

Down in the barrack a very pale emaciated young man was lying on a cot bolstered up on pillows; while a plump damsel of twenty five or thereabouts dressed in large figured calicoes and a nurses apron of the whitest linen, bustled to and fro with bottles of medicine and spoons. Presently a large rough looking man, wearing green glasses, made his appearance and seated himself beside the patient, taking a thin wrist in each of his heavy hands. The comely nurse stood close by, axiously awaiting the doctor's verdict.

"Well, Dolly" the doctor said, he always called her by a pet name, 'I guess he will pull thrrough, but he must be very quiet; you must not talk to him today or tomorrow, remember, quiet is the word."

It would have warmed your heart to see the pleased expression on her face, and the rich re dblood mount to her rounded cheeks. The patient though in a half stupor— heard and smiled a wan smile, too.

"And his arm, Doctor, do you think you can save it" was her eager query, as the physician was preparing to depart after some minutes.

Standing with one hand on the door, bundled up to his ears in a great coat, the rough old surgeon looked anything but a professional man, and gentleness was not one of his every-day traits; but he patted her check and smiled knowingly. "Yes. Dolly. I think I shall be able to pull the chap out with a very good pair of arms, at least I'll try" and he was gone.

Alice St. Clare, for it was she, returned to the cot and pressed a caress on the fevered brow of the unconscious sufferer.

The next morning the surgeon did not call until a late hour, and as Alice was busying herself about the barrack room. tidying the place she wa ssurprised to hear her name spoken in almost a whisper. Quickly she turned, and clasped Kembles hand, while he studied her a moment through half opened eyes, "Thank God" he said faintly, 'it is Alice."

'Where am I dear", was his next effort of speech.

"You are at Niagara, Claude, and the doctor says you must not talk". Suiting the action to the word, Alice playfully placed a slim hand over his mouth and Kemble dropped into a refreshing slumber.

But he did talk, in due season— at any rate the Dominie was called in at an early date, and we have his word that the favors were numerous and costly; for Alice St. Clare since early childhood had been the favorite of officers and men alike at the Fort.

Among the presents which she proudly displayed in the main room of the barracks was a beautiful miniature of a full rigged fighting frigate, complete to the figurehead even, carved very ingeniously from the snowwhite quartz rock— and the tag thereon read thus; "To my honored and trusted Lieutenant, Claude Kemble, from his late Commodore, Oliver Hazelton Perry. May your lives be one long sweet song of prosperity and happiness.'

The End.

RYE EXPERT IS MICHIGAN GRAD

He was a shy awkward young man, seeking to enter Michigan State College. He was long past the age when most boys matriculate as freshmen. No one could suspect that one day he would be a benefactor to the people of two continents.

He gave his name to the registar as Joseph A. Rosen, and his home as Russia. In his native country, he explained, he had been a teacher But because he was a Jew and because he held liberal ideas he had been arrested and banished to Siberia. After a year in that bleak country he had made his way to Heidelberg, Germany where he had spent another year then, with enough saved up, he had come to this promised land. He reached New York with fifty cents in his pockets — a year before. All had not been easy in this land of opportunity. He had endured much— hunger, cold, loneliness. But he had not given up.

He had decided to continue his education at an agricultural college was the oldest of its kind in the world, and so he had come to Michigan.

He was admitted as a freshmen in the fall of Ninteen hundred five. Three years later he was graduated with honors.

Today, after twenty-two years, these are the fruits of the work of that shy awkward man.

In the United State and Canada there are fifteen hundred thousand acres planted to a high yielding strain of rye bearing his name.

In Russia there are two hundred thousand Jews who have been given homes on the soil and thus have been saved from extermination; and many Jewish leaders in America see in the movement a new Zionism.

The rye came from a sample that he procured from the royal gardens of the Czar of Russia. Rosen brought it back with him to Michigan after graduation, and it was developed by Professor Frank A. Spragg, plant breeder. Today Rosen rye is universally conceded to be the best variety of rye grown on the North American continent. Every year a sample of it wins the rye sweepstakes at the International Grain and Hay show at Chicago.

Dr. Rosen's great life work was not in this. He knew that long centuries ago, in Palestine, the Jews had been farmers and herdsmen. He knew that it was only because of precaution by Gentiles, who had denied them the right to own land, that they had taken to the cities.

In 1921 Dr. Rosen went back to Russia. With the help of a committee of American Jews headed by David A. Brown of Detroit, he persuaded the Russian Government to set aside land in the Crimea for colonization by the Jews. This land was open to settlers without charge, in "perpetual toiling usage."

The Jewish families traveled in caravans or covered wagons", like the American pioneers. Lumber was brought from the forests of the north. Vineyards and orchard were planted, livestock was brought in. Creameries, cheese factories, grist mills, flour mills and tanneries were built. Schools for agricultural instruction were estabilished.

WHALEBACK IS BOOZE PIRATE

The steamer Turner one of the fleet of stodgy whalebacks built in the late Alexander McDougalll's shipyards in Superior about thirty five years ago, and a familiar craft to Michigan marine men for many years, has become af Nineteen twenty seven pirate ship".

Word received from New York stated that the Turner that once sailed carrying the names of Trader,Blue Hill, President Estrada Yuma and Cabrera, now figures in one of the most important liquor seizures in many months. New York coast guardmen intercepted the Turner first as she passed Quarantine, and found ten thousand cases of whisky and seven thousand five hundred gallons of malt aboard valued at five hundred thousand dollars. The boat was under suspicion for several months and described by goverment officials as technically a pirate ship.

The so-called pirate of Nineteen twenty seven was designed by the late Captain Mc Dougall for bulk iron ore transportation and fresh water tars know the whalebacks, some of which are still passing up and down the great lakes as "pigs" because of their shape. The only whalebacks ever built were constructed by Captain Mc Dougall in his Superior yord. No longer are the picturesque oddities produced.

It transpires that the boat siezed by coast guardsmen and nowknown as the Turner, cleared from Halifax and was bound for Japan. It is said to have entered the port of New York on account of boiler trouble, but more likely to unload its cargo. Since the old pig first poked her blunt nose into the brine her career has been colorful though her sides are rusty bottom barnacled.In connection with her seizure the crew of sixteen is in cutody in New York according to the report The accusation of piracy is yet to be proved or disproved.

But guity or not guity the pirates of od Captain Kidd, Henry Morgan John Gow, Young Avery, Blackboard Teach, and all the rest of the pirate crew, are pikers compared to the Turner. The Turner's business is les picturesque than that of scuttling ships and robbing traders of pieces of freight and spices and silk, but with the value of her cargoe being approximated at a half million dollars. It is more remunerative than that of their forgotten brother pirates. Besides that the Turner did not have to have a skipper who "lay with his nob in the gore. where the scullion's axe his check had shore." It didn't sale at sea with a black glag at the min tructk, skull and cross bones, house flag, or a beetle browed hairy chested cut throat at the wheel for piracy purposes. The Superior built pirate ship was in all ways a modern pirate vessel.

The Turner was launched in Superior in Eighteen ninety three, thirty five year ago, then considered one of the finest boats on fresh water and it engaged in the ore trade for many years. It has a gross tonnge of two thousand one hundred ninety four tons, is three hundred and twenty three feet long has a forty two foot beam and a depth of nineteen feet.

OIL WELLS FLOW NEAR OWOSSO

Drilling has ben resumed at the well on the McQuiness farm four miles northwest of Owosso. While oil was struck at a depth of two thousand two hundred one feet, three weeks ago, and nearly two hundred barrels of oil have been pumped out, this was only seepage and the operators are going deeper in hopes of finding the pay liquid in larger quantities. They are now down two thousand two hundred eleven feet,.

It is expected that drilling of a second well will start next week on the Patrick Wade farm near the Mc Quineas place. The machinery is all on the ground and the rigging is being put in public.

The Fordney Oil company of Saginaw of which former Congressman Joseph W. Fordney of Detroit is president has invaded Shiawassee county. The company has leased the farm of Roy D. Matthews, northwest of Owosso and experts to sink a well, within the next few weeks. Equipment will be hauled to the farm next week.

The Fordney company has sunk thirty wells in Saginaw county and has found but one dry hole.

BYRON ROBBERS STILL AT LARGE

Thieves recently made a big haul from several business places in town and so far efforts of the Srer-iffs Department have availed but little in their apprehension.

The garages entered were those of J. W. Seaman and William Duncanson. Included in the loot was a Marmon sedan, belonging to Seaman. It was loaded with camp equipment, the Seaman family having planned to start on their vacation trip. In the car was also a suit case and two hundred dollars in travelers' checks.

The thieves also took one hundred fifty inner tubes, ten casings, four storage batteries, a radio set and numerous B batteries from the Duncanson garage and a number of tires from the Seaman garage.

$50 REWARD

There is a reward of fifty dollars awaiting the keen-eyed man, woman or hhild who spots Michigan automobie license 1149-997 and helps in the recovery of this Marmon sedan stolen from Byron, July twenty.

The car, a "little eight", green with natural wheels was loaded with a camping outfit consisting of stove and refrigerator os the running board, five cots and green umbrela tent strapped to the trunk rack on the rear and two spare tires. On the front bumper the word "Marmon" was off and a piece of iron with five holes was bolted on.

The car was the property of John Seaman of Byron who had loaded the car in preparation to returning to his old home in the west after an absence of thirty yaers. He was to have started eary the next morning but the thieves broke into the garage about three o'cock in the morning and drove off the car and its contents.

The reward is being offered by the Citizens Mutua Automobie Insurance Co., of Howell in which Mr. Seaman carried a policy on his car and its contents.

MEZO CADY LOSES 3 BARNS BY FIRE

Three barns on the Mezo Cady farm four sowthwest of Mason were destroyed by fire recently It is believeed that the fire was started by a spontaneous combustion. Mr. Cady and his family were attending church in Mason at the time when discovered that the big barn was a mass of flames.

One barn forty by sixty feet in size with an addition thirty by forty four feet while the other two barns destroyed were smaller. The chicken coop and the house was saved after a hard fight although the exterior of the house was badly blistered by the fire.

There was sixty tons of hay in the barn. Several pigs were burned but fortunatey the rest of the livestock was in the pastures.

The loss is estimated at over six thousand dollars partialy covered by insurance. The Mason fire department made the run to the fire and it was through their efforts that the house was saved.

This fire makes the third time that a barn on this one foundation has been destroyed the first time by a cyclone, a number of years ago and a few years later a barn was burned and again recently fire swept the foundations clean

A NEW industry which has grown from infancy to a state of stout maturity in the comparatively brief period of twenty-five years is the pineapple industry in Hawaii. A quarter of a century ago, it amounted to nothing, but the Territory is now exporting $35,000,000 worth of canned pineapples annually, and expects to reach the $50,000,000 mark within a few years.

The man responsible for this prophecy is James D. Dole, president of the Hawaiian Pineapple Company, the largest company engaged in this culture in the Islands. Dole backs his faith with deeds. Five years ago his company bought the practically desert island of Lanai in order to increase its pineapple acreage. This island contains 140 square miles, and is located 60 miles from Honolulu. Its first crop of pineapples, harvested last year, amounted to approximately 5,000 tons, and the company expects to harvest five times that tonnage this year. Within ten years, according to Dole again, Lanai will furnish one-fourth of the whole pineapple output of Hawaii.

Dole recently invited the entire membership of both the house and senate of the Hawaiian legislature to visit this island and see what has been accomplished there. They found a huge harbor at Kaumalapau on its coast, with a three-hundred foot breakwater and a wharf a hundred feet longer. Approximately $4,500,000 has been spent on the island—for its purchase, the harbor, macadam roads, the building of a model city, and the putting of 2300 acres into pineapples. Four thousand additional acres to its total of 20,000 of good pineapple land have already been cleared.

Dole is a Harvard man who went out to Hawaii, a year after he was graduated, without any money. His company now pays 4% of all taxes paid into the territorial treasury, and is the largest individual taxpaying institution in Hawaii.

The High School Year of 1927-28

The site of the old High School and the one to be is the center of attraction at present. As the populace of the community is showing much interest by treading their way to view the first work of reconstruction, which started Tuesday, for the erection of the new building.

Sorrowful faces retrace the paths from the site, carrying only a vision of the old faithful building which has stood the test and endurance for the past 51 years.

The new Educational Institution of which North Adams boasts, to be erected in the near future is to be modern in every way to the last detail and will be second to none when completed.

The Board of Education is looking forward for its completion by the second semester of the coming school year.

Until the new building is ready for use, school will be held in the old temporary quarters.

School will begin Monday August 29th as usual, with the tuition fees the same as last year, $65.00

Seeking for fresh sources of local revenue, the councillors of Zerbau, a village in Silesia, Germany have decided to impose a tax on the bobbed heads of the village belles.

At their last meeting they solemnly drew up a tariff under which married women who have had their locks shorn will pay two marks a months and unmarried women one mark. The tax is not to be imposed on girls under fourteen. Before this very literal "poll' tax can come into operation, however, its validity must be approved by the overrulng provincial authority. This body has already received a protest against the tax from the village barber of Zerbau. He is finding support from the bobbed ladies who suggest as an alternative that a tax be imposed on the bald headed members of the parish council.

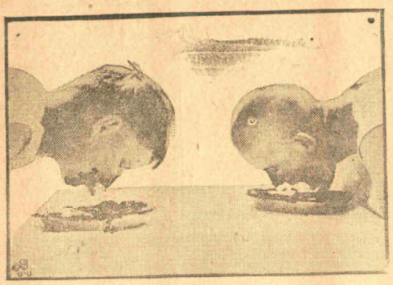
TRYING FOR THE 'PIE-KILLING' CHAMPIONSHIP



SAILORS aboard the U. S. S. California not only are experts at diving into the water but they're quite adept at taking face-first plunges in nice, juicy blueberry pies. Witness the above photo of two of them "doing their stuff' during the course of a pie eating contest which was staged to relieve the monotony of sojourning in the Panama Canal Zone. Bet they had loads of fun, — and, maybe, a "tummyache" afterward.

WET SEASON FAILS TO HURT BIRDLIFE

Notwithstanding the extremely wet season during the nesting period, bird life in Michgan seems to be having a very successful year of family raising activities.

This holds true of insectiverous and song birds; it may not apply to game birds nesting on the ground, although by the whistle of Bob-white on every hand the ground nesting species too, must be on the increase, which may mean the increase of that game bird, the ruffled grouse or partridge.

A trip through woods in any direction will disclose that brown thrush are numerous. This eloquent songster avoids inhabited areas and is seldom seen in the vicinity of cities and towns, but in the thickets and brambles of the silent woods, he seems more numerous than ever before.

Unlike the thrush, the average bird will accustom itself to mankind and in time become quite tame A remarkable instance of this can be seen at the Pine Lake Golf Club near Pontiac, where a blue-bird has built a nest in one of the sand boxes on the courses.

Golfers, making their rounds, reach in the box grab a handful of the moist sand, but Mrs. Bluebird sticks to her nest, having learned that she will not be disturbed. Several attempts have been made to make a photograph of the bird in the box but poor lighting has made the negatives too poor for reproduction.

The tenacity with which birds will stick to a nest was well illustrated one season in one of the big gravel pits at Oxford, Mich., where a robin had built a nest on the long arm of a clam shell crane used in digging gravel. With a long crane arm dipping and swinging each day the robin stuck to its nest. Little it knew that motion of the crane had destroyed the hatching quality of its eggs. But fear of man played no part in preventing a full performance of its duties under circumstances that were most trying.

NEW FORD DELIVERIES SOON

Detroit Ford dealers are informing prospective purchasers of the new Ford car that deliveries may be expected by the twenty fifth.

All Ford dealers are accepting deposits on the new car with the tacit agreement that if the car is not satisfactory or delivery too late the sum paid will be refunded. The price will be about the same as for the present model, they say, "or at least, not more than fifty dollars higher, all accessories included.'

One dealer said he has taken deposits on one hundred cars and another said he has thirty deposits.

INDIAN RELICS FOUND IN MANISTEE HARBOR

In dredging several feet beneath the Manistee harbor channel bed to lay a submarine electric cable, workmen uncovered a flint arrowhead and a stone tomahawk which is a perfect specimen of the weapon used by the early Indians. There is not a chip broken from the tomahawk and the cutting edge is practically as keen as that of a modern steel implement.

INGHAM COUNTY FAIR TO BE HELD AT MASON

Ingham County Fair Will Be Held In October

The officers of the Ingham County Fair Society which met recently decided to hold this year's fair at Mason, the county seat of Ingham County.

Vern J. Brown, live wide awake editor of the Ingham County News is counted on to help make this exposition a great success and of state wide interest.

While some preferred to accept the offer of the fair ground's owner by renting the equipment outright or co-operating in putting on the fair, residents of the central and southern end of the county insisted that to get the united support of the farmers of the county the site of the fair should be centrally located. Mason was selected after V. J. Brown, secretary of the fair society, assured the meeting that the Mason business men would welcome the fair and give all possible support.

The fair will probably be staged similar to the community fair held at Mason last year. While it will be as extensive as possible, the basis will be the exhibits of the boys' and girls' clubs, and Smith-Hughes agricultural schools. It was the united thought of the group that the fair should be largely agricultural and grow later into industrial exhibits.

The fair will be held on October twenty twenty-one and twenty two and arrangements will be made to construct buildings for the housing of the various agricultural exhibits.

Committees in charge of the arrangements for the exposition appointed at a meting recently were. Premium list, Ben Fry, H. J. Bartley, A. W Jewett Jr., K. A. Zimmerman and J. G. Wells; finance V. J. Brown, J. E. Kennedy R. C. Dart, L. Harrison and Bruce Ball; program and entertainment, Harry Bond, Clyde Allen, Lloyd Doane, Nelson Rouse and Ami Terrill; women's exhibitions. Mrs. I. J. Jones, Leslie Mrs. C. F. Hart, Williamston; Mrs. J. G. Wells, Mason.

OAKLAND COUNTY HAS SHEEP AS WELL AS CARS

Oakland county, according to V. A. Freeman, extension worker for the department of animal husbandry is one of the leading sheep counties in Michigan despite the emphasis placed on its industrial life Freeman has been in the county as an instructor at a number of sheep raising conferences.

Some men's honesty is due to the inexpensiveness thereof.

FEW DEAD HERE IN MINE FIRE HISTORY

Mine fires, the most dreaded mishaps in the mining regions, singularly have claimed few lives in the Michigan Copper district, despite the widespread property damage and monetary loss that invariably follow such disasters. An incident serving to illustrate this is the present fire in No. two shaft of the Quincy mine the oldest and deepest in the Calumet area.

Not one man was endangered by the fire that swept upward from the five thousand three hundred foot level though nearly five hundred were employed in the bottom levels just a few hours before. All came to surface through an adjoining shaft with which it is connected on numerous levels and by a series of crosscuts.

It is largely as a precautionary measure to avoid great disaster that all shafts are conected and the levels are kept open to provide exit in case of an emergency. Still miners are at once removed to safety when a mine fire occurs, for the danger of monoxide gas poisoning is ever present and, indeed, long after the fire ceases to burn, gas constantly issues.

In the seventy years of mining at Calumet there have been few disasterous fires so far as the toll of lives is concerned. But invariably the financial loss has been heavy for the suspension of mining in the burning shaft as well as in those that adjoin and cannot be bulkheaded is involved. About thirty years ago fourteen lives were lost when the Osceloa mine was damaged by fire and fifteen years before that, eight perished in No two shaft of Calumet and Hecla when fire swept through the skipboard.

The only way a fire can be successfully fought is by sealing the shaft at once. The flames gradually burn themselves out for want of oxygen.

The possibility of flooding is an even greater hazard than fire in most mines and to prepare for such an emergency giant pumps with a capacity of as high as three thousand gallons per minute are installed in most mines. A few years ago a subterranean lake was tapped by Mohawk No. six shaft and an immense volume of water poured into the mine for weeks before it was checked. Two years ago, water seeped through the sixth level of No. four shaft of the Copper Range mine at Plainsdale and a flow of tweny five hundred gallons per minute is still pouring into the pit from where it is pumped to surface.

Alma Peterson, leading soprano of the Philadelphia opera company willappear at the opening. Among the other artists who will be heard are Bruno Steindel, 'cellist of the Chicago Symphony orchestra assisted by Boguslawskie, pianist and Berger, violin first; Richard Czerwonky, violinst, for years master of the Minneapolis orchestra and Fred Wise, tenor. BOULDER MARKS HOME OF PIONEER SETTLER

A large boulder, bearing an inscribed bronze plate, is to be set up by the Kent county road commission on the site, near Ada of the home of Rix Robinson, who, according to available records, was the first permanent white settler between Niles and Mackinaw Island.

Robinson established a trading post in eighteen twenty one, five years before Louis Campau the first settler upon the site of the city of Grand Rapids arrived in the Grand River valley. He died in eighteen seventy five.

An appropriation for the memorial was voted last January by the board of supervisors.

TURTLE RACE THRILL LAPEER CLUB CADDIES

Mud-turtle Marathon races are the latest diverson of the caddies at the Lapeer Country Club. The youngsters were waiting for George Welsh professional to come and as they lounged on the fairway noticed turtles crossing the road down by the lake. "Let's each get a turtle and race them", said Jim McMullen. Soon Dick Beardsley, F. S. Kellogg, Billy Kellogg, George McMullen, Malcolm Vosburgh, Jack Galbraith and Carl Gilette each had his turtle. A string was drawn across the fairway and at the signal from "Fat" Kellogg the race was on.

Each lad walked astraddle his turtle to keep him in line and how they did talk to them. Christening the turtles "Whiskery' "Nurmi' 'Bobby Jones' and other appropriate monickers, they urged them on at the distance of forty feet.

BLASTING MEETINGS HELD IN INGHAM COU'TY

Ditch, stone and stump blasting demonstrations were scheduled for Ingham County by J. G. Wells, Jr., agricultural agent for August eight nine and ten. H. A. Kessler, agricultural engineering specialist for the Michigan State College, had charge of the meetings. On the afternoon of August eight a ditch was blasted on the farm of Dell Wolf, Wheatfield township, four miles south and one and one half miles west of Williamston.

Tuesday morning, August nine, a stone blasting demonstration was held at the A. G. Hilson farm, five miles west and one half mile north of Mason in Aurelius township. That afternoon the same thing was done at the farm of Carl Wolf, Alaeidon township, two and one half miles east and one fourth mile south of Alaeidon Center.

A second ditch blasting demonstration will be held on the L. J. Fellow's farm in Ingham township about six miles southeast of Mason the morning of August ten.

'The value of explosives in stump and stone removal has long been known," said Mr. Wells. 'Under certain conditions it is also valuable in opening up and cleaning out ditches. Mr. Kessler will explain the times when it is feasible to blast ditches, show how stones and stumps are removed from field and give the ordinary safety rules in handling explosives."

G. A. R. TO STAGE LAST PARADE

The last long line of the boys in blue of sixty one to sixty five will form on the street of Grand Rapids the morning of Wednesday, September fourteen, during the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Age finally has brought the veterans of the Civil war to the knowledge that after this year it will be futile to attempt another national parade. As a result it is expected that thousands of these veterans will assemble for this final demonstration along historic Monroe avenue from Bridge street, past the memorial erected to these warriors and past the reviewing stand of Fulton street park, where stands the memorial pillars to the gold star men and women of the World war.

The national encampment committee and the citizen's committee have united upon a plan to conduct the welcoming pageant and parade the evening of Monday September twelve. Captain Charles E Belknap will be in charge. His aides will be Colonel James Sinke and Ensign Fred Pantlind.

Through an unanimous vote, Guy V. Henry, Camp No. three, United Spanish War Veterans, has pledged itself to act as the reception committee Saturday and Sunday, September ten and eleven, when delegates to the encampment and to the allied organization's meetings will arrive.. During the week it is expected from twenty five thousand to thirty thousand visitors will be in Grand Rapids.

Headquarters for the national encampment have been opened at the Hotel Pantland, with Walter L. Funk, who is in general charge of the arrangements as director. This also will be registration headquarters.

SOUTH POLE PERILS FOR FLYER CITED BY MICHIGAN TEACHER

"If Commander Byrd succeeds in his contemplated flight over the South Pole he will have achieved an undertaking twice as hazardous as his journey over the North Pole, declares Prof Felix W. Pawlowski of the University of Michigan aeronautical engineering department.

Commander Byrd will be compelled to face a situation far different from the one he encountered when he negotiated his flight over the North Pole, Prof Pawlowski explained. "Mountainous areas covering a continent larger than Australia with peaks as high as fifteen thousand feet; huge glaciers which would make a forced landing extremely precarious and nearly impossible; and the fact that the South Pole is twice as far from inhabitable country as the opposite pole places the new exhibition in a far more difficult category than either the transatlantic or North Pole flights."

TEACHERS HAVE STIFF SCHEDULE

Of the eight opponents that the varsity football squad at Central State Teachers' College are scheduled to meet this fall four of the stiffest teams in the state are listed in consecutive order. Two college with Coach W. C. Parker's men have not met on the gridiron in the past few years are again offering to set up some opposition. With these conditions to meet and the amount of material heavily restricted under the new ruling making first year men ineligible for athletic contest, Coach Parker will have an entire team of veterans to put in to the field.

It is expected that the line-up of events this Fall will prove interesting in the state theatre- of pigskin frays. Three years ago, Central played Western State to a scoreless tie. The two teams have not met since. With the Ypsi delegation, games have always been close, while Northern has been persistently defeated in football meets here. Alma College, whose eleven went down to the end of a thirteen to two score here last year in the annual Armistice Day battle, will play Central there this fall on November eleventh. Turkey Day is another annual college celebration. For the past seven years the Maroon team has consistently taken games from the Detroit City College. The complete schedule for football is as follows.

Oct. first— Adrian
Oct. eighth — Ferris Institute.
Oct. fifteen — Olivet
Oct. twenty two — Western State
Oct. twenty nine — Ypsilanti
Nov. fifth — Northern State.
Nov. eleven — Alma College
Nov. twenty four — Detroit City College.

Let's All Pull Together For a Greater Michigan and Greater Nation

MY CLOSEST SHAVE

Boonesville is a small burg somewhere on the quaint old St. Joseph river up in Michigan; and it has been the same little burg for fifty years, with never a spasm of booming such as some towns are wont to experience. Indeed, with reasonable care, it bids fair to remain the same insignificant, gossping dog-infested brawlng Godforsaken little village, for a hundred years to come. Somebody has said that Boonesville, being on the old state road, was the first town in the county. If this be so, it should hang its head with shame; for instead of progressing, it has retroceded.

But the quiet, slow flowing old St. Joe winding through meadow and woodland, offers no resistance to the rushes and cat tails as they grow rank and tall down by the bridge. So easy is the current, that not even the ancient milldam, rotten with age, has tried to confine the waters.

Somehow you wonder why I should tease you with scenes so commonplace and rural. The locality has a history, however, which gains interest each year, as the seasons come and go; and if you should pas that way some beautiful mid-summer day, pause, and if the spirit moves the bridge where the gigantic green willows throw black shadows cool and refreshing across the pond, and the chances are ten to one that before long you'll sense a tug on the pole, and your bobber will suddenly start for the bottom. Then, if you are dextrous, a flopping, scaly denizen of the depths will land on the green sward beside the big rock, and a four pound carp will reward your skill.

That carp, neighbors say may be a hundred, but the chances are he is at least twenty five years of age, and that scar on his gills may be the identical marks of Capt, Carter's hook, left when the latter's line broke. The Captain will tell you about it for the asking also tell you that it happened just fifty years ago, the twenty-fifth of July

Captain Carter can tell you a good many more of his reminiscences, as he has told me in days gone past; but I think he is just beyond the big elm, and if I mistake not, is pretty busy with the rod and line so we'll not bother him just now.

Last summer the Captain went down to Phildelphia to visit his only son, whom he hadn't seen in twenty years; and as a kind of compliment before starting, visited the barber and was shorn of a luxuriant crop of whiskers. He told the tonsorial artist to "slick 'em up good", as he wanted to look "like them city fellers"; and the result was so much beter than he had anticipated, that a few straggling gray hairs which the Captain had carefully nursed for months, went by the board also, and he emerged from the shop looking like Mr. Pipp

Upon returning home, he was greeted with rose laughs innumerable, and the madder he got the more they chaffed and jeered.

"Why Grandpa, you look so funny, I can't help it', said little marguerite, aged five. "You look jus' like a 'ittle teeny boy what's growed up to a man over night."

And he did look so comical that the postmaster Ezekiel Butts, asked him why the barber hadn't taken his head and left the whiskers, all of which didn't tend to increase the Captain's good humor. "Speaking of shaves", the Captain soliloquized, "puts me in mind that the closest shave I ever experienced was down at City Point, Virginny way back in 'sixty four.'

"Tell us about it," said I.

'Sure give us the yarn, Dad', chorused the boys, gathering around the old 'vet".

Nothing loath, he resumed his favorite chair in front of the post office, and related the following.

On the morning of August ninth eighteen sixty four, the sun came up red and glaring at our camp on the Appomattox river, which we had established some three months before. We were at Broadway Landing, where we had laid two pontoon bridges. Between the Appomattox and James rivers, Ben Butler's army was lying. Officers and privates chafed and fretted at the heat, and longed for some diversion which would vary the monotony of camp life. Several of the boys, including myself and Corporal Wasson, besought the Colonel for a pass to City Point, some five miles down the James river, as it was rumored that Gen. Grant and anything i nthe nature of excitement which might be looked for when the Engineer Corps was not on duty, was indeed welcome.

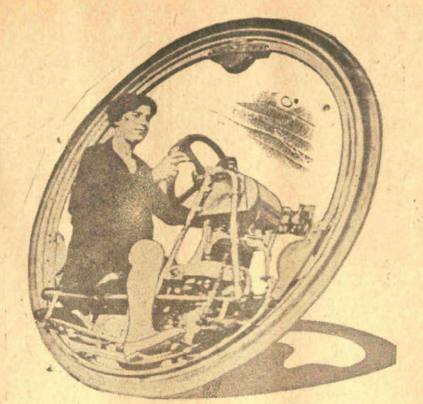
"Captain Pickering, very liberal with his passes that day, gave his consent. Accordingly several pontoon boats were rafted together, and the captain of a Government tug lying near was persuaded to give us a tow, which he did with some reluctance. The tug was not a greyhound at best, and when dragging a whole pontoon train, her progress was more in keeping with the lowly snail; but finally she got under way and did herself proud, arriving at City Point at ten thirty a. m. where we unloaded at the dock. Most of the boys quickly scaled the high bluff some distance back, but myself and Corporal Wasson were much interested in the operation of unloading ammunition, which was being carried on at the wharf not far from where we had landed.

"Several schooners tied up there were being lightened of powder and shells, principally by negro stevedores. Those fellows were certainly the limit for dare-devils. While we wereused to facing dangers and hardships it was nerve racking to us to see the perfect sang froid with which those longshoremen handled the big twelve inch shells. Wasson remarked that he would feel much safer if he were sitting on a keg of powder smoking a Havanna and I concurred with him heartily, suggesting that we retire to the top of the bluff.

"Tiring at last of the novelty of the thing, we passed on up the street. Not having had the services of a tonsorial artist for several weeks, I meditatively pulled my tangled locks and proposed that we get a haircut. We entered a long low building of flimsy construction, which might have been a tobacco warehouse in its youth, but now was somewhat dilapidated. Here we found the barbers busy on various types of hirsute adornments. Wasson got his haircut first and while waiting for me wandered about the shop, making comments; and his eye fell on an ancient coffee mill fastened to the wall. Of course here was a chance for a pun. As Wasson slowly turned the handle, he chaffed the barber about 'grinding out his taxes', etc.

'Very fortunately for me, the barber had just laid down his shears and was preparing some lather, when there was a terrible report. The chair upon which I was reclining turned sidewise, flipping me to the floor as neatly as you please. The wall seemed to rock and tremble and collapsed like an egg-shell. Windows were shattered into a thousand pieces. I remembered the big mirror in which I had been gazing and wondered if the debris would sever my jugular for I knew it was upon my neck. My last impression of Wasson was his exit through a window, head first, coffe mill and all; the barber ran in all directions.

'MOTOR WHEEL' A THRILLER!



Don't know whether they call this a "motor wheel" or a 'wheel motor" — but, anyway, its motor, controls and so forth remain in one spot while the engine moves the big outer wheel at a good rate of speed along the ground. It is said to be a thriller as a joy-riding device. The photo was taken in Rome Italy.

"When we came together again, we were outside in the street, with no recollection of how we got there. The air was darkened with dust and debris, and ammunition wagons, drawn by frightened mules, some of them sorely wounded, were flying by as if blown by the concussion. One wagon, which I noticed particularly, was drawn by a pair of large mules and they were running for dear life; in the bottom of the box clung the most thoroughly frightened negro I ever saw. His face was as gray as ashes, notwithstanding his ebony skin. To my last day I shall never forget the expression on that fellow's face; he was literally scared to death.

"Wasson was completely dazed, and his first question was, 'Are you hurt.' I told him 'No'. What in God's name has happened." said he. My first thought was for our safety 'let's get out of this,' said I.

'Our faculties began to return and I remarked that those shells had probably done the business The whole impact of the explosion seemed to be from the wharf, and all was over in less than a minute and a half.

Gradually we picked our way back stepping over fragments of wagons, wreckage of buildings, dead horses, dead negroes, etc. Passing the barber shop we noticed our colored barber lying under the ruins. The poor fellow had been struck by a falling beam, which killed him instantly; the building was a complete wreck, and how we had escaped death was a mystery. Still further down the street, we came to a little dooryard that had been resplendent with flower beds, but was now a sad wreck. Near the door lay the owner, sprawled on the grass, with the brains oozing from a ragged wound in his head.

"Arriving at the edge of the bluff the sight met our gaze was heart rendring. The schooners which had contained shells were completely obliterated, and two others in the offing were said to be loaded with the same and liable to be blown to atoms any moment. The guard ordered us back at once saying he expected to be in purgatory directly should the other ammunition boats be touched off. We took the hint without any urging and 'legged it' for about a mile back into the country..

'After waiting about two hours, and nothing doing we decided to return. The dock where we had previously stood, was gone, nothing remaining but skeleton timbers pinned to the piles. Numerous fragments of bodies were scattered about promiscuously, together with mutilated mules, pieces of shells, and shells entire; some of them even then were smoking. Soldiers were detailed to pick up the wounded and bury the dead, of which latter there were one hundred eight.

'Well we went back up the James registering a solemn vow to wipe out the Confederacy as an atonement for that murder; but the nearest we ever got to it was when we had the satisfaction, about three months later, of seeing that arch rebel, Capt. John Maxwell, pay the penalty on the scaffold.'

"Supper's ready, Grandpa," came little Marguerite's lisping childish voice across the common.

"So long boys", said the Captain "Tell you about the mine at Fort Donelson some day."

MAJOR GRAY LEAVES STATE COLLEGE FOR PANAMA

Instructor in military training for the past four years at East Lansing, Major Elmore B. Gray, has been ordered to the Panama canal zone, where he will take command of a battalion of coast artillery.

He came to the Michigan State College as associate Prof. in the military department in nineteen twenty three. He will be succeeded by Major Charles Thomas Stahle, who comes from the Command and General Staff school at Ft. Leavenworth. Major Thomas Stahle attended Pennsylvania State college and the Massachusetts school of Technology.

Captain Webster H. Warren who has been stationed at East Lansing for five years also left this week for Ft. Monroe Va., He will be succeeded by Lieutenant Kenyon P. Flagg from Ft. Monroe.

LEARN COOKING ART OVER STOVE

Michigan State College girls who prepared to be managers of institutions did not get their chief inspiration from the problems confronting them from books for in the course of their training they go in to the kitchen under the supervision of a member of the home economics faculty of the college and find by actual practice what it means to prepare and knead dough to feed a thousand people light delicious rolls, what hours go into the the preparation of dainty salads, how long it takes to make angel foods and prune whips for hundreds.

In teaching institutional management the home economics department does not concentrate entirely on cookery by any means. The whole care of an institution, the buying of all materials, etc., is dealt with thoroughly, but one course is given over entirely to large quantity cookery.

Sixty girls each year work for six hours a week during one term in the kitchen of the woman's commons where they learn the manipulation of large quantities of food. the quanitity required the handling of large equipment, regulation of oven, steamers, etc.

They also have time for studies in which they estimate the time, it takes to prepare say a stuffed prune salad and whether such dishes are worth while to pay their way which is a suggestion that the housewife might use to advantage for by following the plan she can save work and money. By taking note of the time it takes to prepare a certain dish and the work necessary, if she finds it has not been worth the trouble, she can elminate it entirely from her menu plan.

Perhaps they discover that cheaper help should be hired to do the mechanical side of such work and that it is not a good thing to hire a a pastry cook for work that can be done by untraised labor. In the process of handling and studying such problems they learn how much to expect of cooks.

As all the freshmen girls are required to take their meals in the woman's commons where they get a wider contact and a more balanced diet than they would in society houses and private homes, and all girls who live in dormitories eat there, so the commons feeds about one thousand each day..

MAN NINETY WILL FLY TO LODGE MEETING

John Wayman, Wyandotte park commissioner, and one of the oldest residents of that city, has arranged with William Munn, test pilot of the Hess Aircraft corporation, to pilot him to Lansing, September seven to attend the convention of the grand lodge of the Knights of Pythias.

Wayman who will be ninety years old on September fifteen is the oldest Pythian Knight in Michigan and has been a member of the organization since eighteen eighty eight.

For the past fifteen years he has been in attendance at each convention of the grand lodge and is a member of the veteran's group consisting of some of the oldest members of the organization.

Concerning his coming trip to Lansing he has the following to say "I have attended conventions by almost every mode of transportation except via air travel. I have walked to some, gone by ox team, on boat and by automobile, but this year I want to fly.

"These young business men have nothing on me when it comes to pep and I mean to drop in on them in such manner as will let those at the convention know that I am there".

Last spring Wayman accepted an invitation of Aubrey Hess to take a ride in a plane. The invitation was extended to all members of the Wyandotte Board of Commerce at a luncheon meting but Wayman was the only one accepting.

Fall-sown oats in most district of the South succeed better than the spring sown varieties, the most obstacle to their production in this section beng occasional loss by winterkilling says the United States Department of Agriculture. At the department's Arlington Experiment Farm, Rosslyn, Va., strains of the Winter Turf variety have produced the highest average yields.

MORTGAGE DATED 1831 IS DISCHARGED IN MONROE CO.

A mortgage discharge has been filed with the register of deeds of Monroe county. The mortgage is one originally given by Luther Harvey to Robert Abbott former auditor general of Michigan. It bears the date March thirty one, eighteen thirty one.

In pioneer days Michigan required persons establishing a bank to give a real estate mortgage to Michigan to protect depositors against loss. This mortgage was evidently overlooked and not discharged when by the law in eighteen seventy one the auditor general was authorized to discharge any and all of these mortgages.

The mortgage was on lands owned by Daniel Hasley, lying three miles west of Monroe and adjacent to the county poor farm.

MIDLAND LAKE IS HAVEN FOR PIKE

The conversion of ten miles of beautiful river into a large lake is not without its reward so Midland county has learned.

Many lovers of the scenic beauties of the great outdoors disliked to see the wonderful wild country along the Tittabawasee river between Sanford and Edenville flooded by the backwater of a power dam but they are more pleased with the change since this large island lake, the only one in this county abounds with game fish to the delight of the angler in summer and thousands of ducks and geese visit it during the winter months in additions to other wild birds.

The Tittabawassee river, so named by the Chippewa Indians because of its beauty is one of the streams of Michigan which has undergone a great change.

It is credited by old lumberjacks with carying more pine logs than any river in Michigan. At one time one could walk from above Edenville to Saginaw down the river more than sixty miles on pine logs

The cutting off of the timber and digging of many drains caused the stream to widen out and fill with sand. But still there remained places where high banks hold back its torrents. Three years ago Frank Wixom of Edenville started his development which harnessed the river for electrical power. And this formed the lakes which start with Sanford and extend upstream more than twenty miles.

Last year the little village of Sanford awoke with a start to find itself overnight one of the important recreation centers of this part of the state. The reason was the pike were bitin in Sanford lake. People came from far and near to take part in the great sport. Many catches ran as high as one hundred in a day.

Realizing that this could not last and because there was no limit on these fish the Ike Waltons asked for a limit on number and size. A special order was the result Ten in a day and not less tnan fifteen inches long is the rule. This is one of the few inland lakes in Michigan where theres a limit on the number of great northern pike that may be taken in a day.

STATE PIONEER 109 YEARS OLD

Shining white ribbons of concrete threading the beautiful lake region of Oakland county and forty, fifty and sixty miles an hour traffic; the rush of modern industrial life and the cities and villages that dot Michigan — are a far cry from the quiet forest locked trails that were Oakland county in eighteen eighteen. Pioneers who saw these changes and more are few.

In the year that Pontiac was settled a little straggling community hewn out of the woods, a tiny Irish girl was baptized at a church in Henshiga, North Ireland. Not so many years later she came to America and to Oakland county. She is still a resident of Oakland county and a marvelously keen woman although she is more than one hundred nine years old.

Mrs. Sarah Warner is living in Clawson in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Davidson, themselves pioneers of that community. She is well and happy, and insists she would like to ride in an airplane. although her friends and companions in the Davidson family look askance at the suggestion.

The home which Mrs. Warner and her husband Frank an Englishman, carved out of the wilderness that is now Clawson is still standing one mile east of Main street along what is now the Fourteen-Mile road.

Timber was thick and materials grew close at hand from which comfortable and solid homes could be fashioned. The great logs were felled, lined off and hewn into timbers eight and ten inches square, laid one upon the other and pinioned at the corners with wooden pegs. In building that little home, Mrs. Warner did her full share and a great deal more. She learned to swing a heavy bitter axe could split rails and drive the oxen, along a rough field furrow; do the thousand and one hard things that fall to the lot of a woodman's mate.

Her husband Frank Warner was known as a great hunter. As a matter of fact the little house, held now by relatives, and its land totalling about fifty five acres were purchased from the fruits on which Warner's frowness was begun.

A stand of weapons, seven or eight fine old pieces of the type popular long before the Civil war, are in the possession of the Davidson and Norman J. Bowman families. Mrs. Bowman is a members of the Davidson family. Among them is the first weapon owned by Warner. It cost a hundred dollars

LAKES LEVELS RISING CLAIM

With seven year decline in Great Lakes, levels aparently halted, shipping interests operating thru the five inland seas are closely watching the possibilities of greater tonnage cargoes on lake freighters than has been feasible for many years.

According to reports recently received from the Sault canal at St. Ste. Marie, which connects Lake Superior with the other lakes, the permitted draft in the locks now stands at nineteen feet three inches six inches higher than at the beginning of the shipping season in April.

The six inch increase will allow an average size freighter of about ten thousand ton gross to haul three additional tons of freight or an increase in tonnage capacity of three per cent, with virtually no increase in cargo expense.

If business possibilities are enhanced by an exceptionally large crop this fall the increased head of water in the Sault will be a large factor in establishing a record-breaking tonnage through the canal this season.

In explanation of the recent rise in lake levels, J. W. Woerman, of the United States engineers' corps of Chicago stated that it was the first time in seven years that an upward trend had been evident. Commencing with nineteen nineteen, when levels of the Great lakes were at an exceptionally high point shows a steady decline, the climax being reached in January nineteen twenty six, when the level of Lake Michigan was twenty five feet below the low water data line of Chicago.

Youth and Prohibition

Prohibition was won by facing the facts regarding the evils of the liquor traffic where it was still licensed, and the good that had followed in dry territory after it was outlawed. The dry laws will be retained without modification and made effective when the Christian people of the country are given the actual facts regarding the success of prohibition. The Moderation League and other organized wet propaganda associations, are putting out statistics by the yard. It is the old story that while figures do not lie, liars and propagandists will figure.

Every young people's society and study class should make a thorough study of the recent book by Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University, one of the world's greatest scholars and economists, entitled "Prohibition At Its Worst" Within thirty days of publication it reached a great sale, and we predict its circulation will run into the hundreds of thousands. (If your book store does not have it, send $1.75 to Professor Irving Fisher, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City It is printed by the Macmillan Company.)

Professor Fisher demonstrates rather conclusively that the amount of liquor consumed as a beverage at the present time, is not over one tenth, and probably not over one twentieth of that consumed in pre-prohibition days. He makes a close calculation regarding the value of prohibition to the nation's thrift and efficiency, and concludes that it has contributed not less than six billion dollars per year to national savings and the national income. He says the masses are protected by the abolition of cheap and easy drinking and that bootleg liquor is both so expensive and so dangerous that the vast mass of the people are too sane and sensible to take it.

If men could drink alcohol as they do coffee and tea, without inebriation and without imposing upon the rights of others, there would be little prohibition sentiment in a country, which, like ours is so thoroughly devoted to the principle of personal liberty and of no interference so long as one individual does not encroach upon the rights of another.

So the one convincing argument for prohibition is to show its contribution to social welfare. Professor Fisher demonstrates beyond any denial, the great value of the dry regime to social welfare. He takes New York City as an example because it is one of our wettest cities and one in which neither municipal nor State law does any thing to help the federal enforcement officers. Taking the number of men arrested for drunkenness and dividing them into first offenses and all others on the theory that the habitual drinker constitutes the great mass of the second, third and more offenses, and that only the statistics in regard to first offenses should be charged up to the regime of prohibition, he shows that there has been a decrease in arrests of first offenders for drunkenness by more that fifty percent, and that with the fact that the police are much more severe than they were in the old days when drunks were plentiful. The statistics for juvenile delinquency in the same city, are reduced by one half; those for crimes of assault and battery, by sixty percent; and for crimes against chastity to one third while the number of disorderly houses are only three percent of what they were before prohibition became effective. He finds that in Connecticut, one of the wettest States, and one of the only two which refused to ratify the Eighteenth Amendment, insanity has been decreased, so far as public care is concerned, by one half.

The conclusion is that the law can be enforced; that it is good and worth while enforcing; that the Eighteenth Amendment cannot be repealed; and that, therefore it must be either nullified or made effective. As no self-respecting people are going to allow a great moral statute to be nullified, there is only one thing left to do—to enforce it.

The prohibition laws can be enforced, but Uncle Sam alone cannot enforce them. Whenever the Christian people of the land take eriously the question of enforcing the law as they did the problem of getting the law, it will be adequately enforced. But enforcement must begin in the local communities and through the local law officers.—The Classmate.

Farmers Show Class In Plowing Contest

That Michigan farmers are past masters at the grand old art of plowing was demonstrated dramatically at M. S. C last week in the contest which was held as part of the annual summer Farmers Day.

Contestants came from all parts of the state and the champions showed a standard of skill which would be hard to beat. Horseshoe pitching and a milk can throwing contest were other competitive sports included in the day's program.

Inspection of hundreds of acres of experimental work on the M. S. C. farm and of the college livestock proved as usual to be the leading feature of Farmers Day, along with the afternoon program, held in the open air on the campus.

Presence of delegates from European and South American countries lent an international flavor to the Farmers Day speaking program. Dr. Jacob Lange. of Denmark, told of experiences of the Danish farmers in politics, while President Butterfield of M. S. C. and Dr. Asher Hobson of Rome also preceded C. W. Pugsley, president of South Dakota State College, who delivered the main address.

The Farmers Day crowd was smaller than that of recent years, perfect weather for threshing and harvest keeping many at home.

Winners of first places in the different contests held in the morning were as follows: John Heimstra, Zeeland, two horse walking plow class; H. T. Cantrell, Mason, four horse tandem-hitch sulky plow; Lawrence Every, Mason, tractor plowing; Elmer Fought, St. Louis, horse shoe pitching; and H. L. Brooks, Bath, milk can throwing.

The choir from the M. E. church Blissfield, was presented with a $100 dollar check for it victory in community singing.

Many Nations Join At Farm Life Meet

With delegates from 25 different nations and 23 American states in attendance, the special Country Life Conference held here last week as part of the ceremonies marking the seventieth anniversary of the founding of M. S. C. proved to be a brilliant international gathering.

From far-off China, India and Egypt to more immediate neighbors such as Mexico and Canada, delegates brought first hand word as to agricultural conditions in their homelands, and added to the valuable discussions on farm life.

Nearly 20 different associations and groups were included among the list which held conferences during the Country Life Week period. The American Country Life Association and the American Farm Economics Association held a joint meeting which took rank as the largest of the conferences. The International Country Life Commission, the World Agricultural Society, the Michigan Country Life Association and many other groups of national and even international scope were included.

Presence of many farmers from the middle west added interest to the discussion, which centered around the general theme of the relation between farm income and farm standard of living. There was difference of opinion on minor details, but the concensus of opinion was summed up aptly by Dean A. R. Mann, of Cornell University, chairman of the conference resolutions committee, when he said:

"Better farming, better business and better living; and the greatest of these is better living."

JUVENILE CRIME BLAMED ON HOME

Lack of Respect for Laws Hit by Reformatory Chaplain

Lack of the home-making spirit on the part of parents and their failure to observe religious devotions, regardless of their creeds, were named as fundamental causes for present day juvenile delinquency by the Rev. F. X. Exler who recently addressed the Women's Club of Menominee on "The Cause and Cure of Juvenile Delinquency".

Father Exler, who is on the faculty of St. Norbert's College, DePere, Wis., was formerly chaplain of the reformatory at Green Bay, Wis. His experience among the juvenile inmates of this institution convinced him that parents are largely responsible for the faults of their children, he said.

Parents unconsciously influence the actions of their children by the practice of little acts of insincerity and deceit, not only toward each other, but also toward their neighbors, he declared. The children are quick to reflect this mental attitude and carry it to even greater lengths, he said.

The prevailing lack of respect for the laws of the land was scored by Father Exler, who said that children could not be expected to observe or fear laws which they were accustomed to hear mocked by their elders on every hand. Among those attending Father Exler's talk were the pastors of Menominee, the superintendent of city schools, and various city and county officials.

NEW EAST SIDE PARISH ESTABLISHED IN DETROIT

Father Vismara, Native Detroiter, Named Pastor of St. Philip Neri

A new parish, that of St. Philip Neri, at Dickerson and Charlevoix avenues, Detroit, was established recently under the direction of the Rev Fr. John C. Vismara, D. D. A large plot of land has been secured and a temporary church which will seat approximately 500 persons, has been built. St. Philip Neri parish will be made up of territories taken from St. Ambrose, St. Rose and St. John Berchmans parishes.

Father Vismara is a native Detroiter. He received his academic education at the University of Detroit and was given the degree of bachelor of arts in 1905. Later he spent five years in study at the Gregorian University, in Rome, where he obtained his doctorate in divinity. Returning to Detroit, he was for some years attached to the faculty of the Sacred Heart Seminary. For the past seven years he has been pastor of Holy Family church. His successor at this church has not yet been announced.

BISHOP LAYS STONE OF NEW PAROCHIAL SCHOOL

The cornerstonte of the new St. Casimir's school, Detroit, was laid by the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit, assisted by a large group of clergy. Among those present were fifteen octogenarians who were among the original parishioners when the parish was organized 45 years ago.

The new school is one of the largest and best equipped buildings of its kind in the state. It has 21 classrooms and accommodations for 1,300 pupils. Other features are a clinic, library, music rooms, an auditorium accommodating 1,000 persons, lockers, showers, a bowling alley, dining room and kitchen. The building will be used partly as a community center, according to the Rev. Fr. Edward S. Maisel, pastor.

Joseph Kokowicz, father of the Rev. Fr. Edward Kokowicz, of St. Andrew's church, Detroit, was recently buried from St. Albertus' church, Detroit. Father Kokowicz was celebrant of the Requiem High Mass at the funeral services.

Before entering the Sisters of Mercy, of Dubuque, Ia., Sister Mary Giovanni was a trained nurse and during the World War occupied responsible positions with the American Red Cross, with which organization she is affiliated at the present time. At one time she entered the journalistic field, contributing to magazines and editing a column.

'CIRCUIT RIDERS' BUSY TODAY

Modern Missionaries "Carry Religion to People" Within 2 Hours of Detroit

More than 2,000 square miles of territory. Roads, mostly bad; some of them knee-deep in mud in the spring and autumn and waist-deep under snow in winter. Travel, at times, only on foot or horseback; at other times impossible. Ministers of the Gospel fighting through into the far reaches of the "mud country" to bring the word of redemption to the settlers. Various dangers, from wild beasts and Indians. Almost constant discomforts, of cold, and rain, and snow, and heat. Preaching of the Word whenever a handful of people could be brought together, wherever a roof offered shelter, or even in the open air. Dependent on the hospitality of the scattered population for food and lodging.

That was the Michigan of the pioneers; the Michigan which the hardy missionaries who were the early-day "circuit-riders" knew.

Years in time, and leagues in distance, from the Fourth City of the United States, the casual reader would judge. Vastly removed from the automobile center of the world. Back in the "dim, dark past" from 80-story towers of commerce and industry, from oil-soaked city pavements and softly-lighted, marble-lined modern churches, with stained-glass windows and comfortable pews.

But is it? What of the present-day circuit-riders and the territories they travel; of the people they serve and the difficulties they encounter? How far are they from Woodward avenue,—in years and in miles?

The answer, for one district in the Roman Catholic Diocese of Detroit, can be found in the "consolidated" parish of St. Philip Neri, of Lapeer, established Nov. 1, 1923, as the first experimental station in the rural church plan of the International Catholic Church Extension Society.

It is surprising to millions of modern Americans to know how little the work of the church has changed from the days of the pioneer; how many of the difficulties remain; and to realize that this work is going forward within two hours' drive of Detroit's city hall.

The horse, it is true, has been replaced by the mile-a-minute motor car; has given way, in the field, to the gasoline engine. Electricity and acetelyne blaze forth, even in remote homes, instead of flickering tallow dips and candles. Cattle paths and tortuous logging-roads have been replaced by scores of miles of concrete and hundreds of miles of smooth gravel. Crossroad groups of homes and stores, villages, towns and even cities thrive where only widely-separated, wilderness-surrounded clearings were found before. The farmer's "sugar bush" is all that remains of whole townships of forests. Electric ranges, and hot-and-cold running water, pianos and phonographs and radio sets have taken the places of rude field-stone fireplaces, moss-covered buckets and the very occasional melodeons and dulcimers.

A recent report, written by the Rev. Fr. Thomas R. Carey, pastor in charge of the St. Philip Neri parish, gives some idea of the work that is being done, and the extent of the field. Father Carey a native Detroiter and for 11 years was assistant pastor at Holy Trinity church, in the old "Corktown" section of the city. Later he was pastor at St. Johns, and was chosen to make the rural mission experiment by the Rt. Rev. Francis D. Kelly, D.D., then head of the Extension Society and now Bishop of Oklahoma.

"Lapeer, where Bishop Kelly conceived and founded the Society, was chosen as headquarters of the mission," the report states. "To Lapeer's original missions, of Imlay City and Davison, those in Allenton, Oxford, Romeo and Lake Orion were later added. There are two institutions, the Michigan Home and Training school for mentally deficient, at Lapeer, and the American Legion billet, for widows and orphans of world-war veterans, at Otter Lake.

"Romeo is 33 miles from Lapeer; Allenton, 30 miles; Orio, 22 miles; Otter Lake, 21 miles; Oxford, 18 miles; Imlay City, 15 miles and Davison, 12 miles. Main roads are of good gravel, with occasional stretches of concrete, but side roads, in the main, are unimproved.

"Prior to the establishment of the mission, the entire district, embracing 2,000 square miles, boasted only one priest, who lived in Lapeer, and said Mass there every Sunday. Masses were offered twice a month in Imlay City, and once a month in Allenton, Davison and Oxford. Romeo and Orion were summer missions only, with an occasional Mass in public halls rented for the service.

"Available records of previous years showed that not more than [illegible]00 Catholic families had been reached by the Church and some of these were but semi-occasional communicants. A personal canvass of the district, the first work undertaken by the pastor and his three assistants, revealed that there were 550 families within the 2,000 square miles who were, or had been, Catholics.

"The preliminary survey demonstrated that two measures were necessary for the work. One was the establishment of services on a regular,

No Secrets to Making Perfect Cup of Coffee

Can Be Achieved By Following A Few Simple Rules Says Famous Cooking Expert

By Mildred Maddocks Bentley

Formerly Director of Good Housekeeping Institute

What is the secret of first-rate coffee—the kind that starts the day right—that makes you feel "like a million dollars"?

Literally hundreds of women—and a surprising number of men—have asked me this question in one form or another. And it's an important one—for what can be more blighting to domestic happiness than a cup of muddy coffee or coffee improperly "creamed"? And, on the contrary, what can be more exhilarating than a good cup—fragrant, golden, delicious?

Luckily there's no hidden secret about making and serving the perfect coffee—it's just a matter of minding your p's and q's and following a few simple directions.

Selection of Coffee

There are many excellent brands of coffee in the market—the choice of one of these is largely a matter of individual taste. But I do want to say that usually coffee in the bean retains its flavor longer than in the ground form—so, if possible, buy the whole beans and grind your coffee fresh for each meal. If, however, the breakfast hour—or fifteen minutes—is too hectic to admit of this extra step, at least keep your ground coffee in an air tight container—a glass fruit jar for instance. And it's well to remember that the more finely the coffee is ground, the easier it is to extract its full strength and flavor—consequently finely-ground coffee is economical and time-saving.

The Coffee Pot

Connoisseurs maintain that coffee brewed in a metal pot has a less delicate flavor than in a container of glass, stone-ware or agate. Whatever kind of coffee pot you prefer—it should be scoured frequently and occasionally "boiled out" with water to which a pinch of baking soda has been added—then rinsed, dried, and left uncovered.

If a percolator is used, the pipe should be carefully washed every day with a brush to remove all scum from the preceding brew.

For drip coffee, if you do not have a special drip coffee pot, an ordinary one equipped with a double cheesecloth bag will serve the purpose. The cheesecloth should be washed in cold water after using and renewed at least once a week. Keep the bag always moist.

The "Creaming"

This I consider quite as important as the actual brewing. Good coffee can so easily be spoiled by using cream of inferior quality or the "top of the bottle" if carelessly poured off. In my study of food habits, I am finding that every year more and more people prefer sweetened condensed milk in their coffee. You see this kind is twice as rich and creamy as ordinary milk and furthermore already contains sugar, thus serving the additional purpose of sweetening the coffee. Try it for a few days, and I think you will agree that the condensed milk gives a delightfully rich, smoothly blended drink, bringing out the real coffee flavor And of course it is very convenient, as it keeps fresh without ice even after the can is opened—and the cost is extremely moderate.

Now as to the actual methods of brewing. There are several and your choice is entirely a matter of individual taste. If the directions are carefully followed, any of the methods will yield the "perfect cup of coffee"—mellow in flavor, with a delicate, fragrant aroma, free from sediment and of a dark golden hue.

Boiled Coffee

Rinse the pot with hot water, put the coffee in the pot—one rounded tablespoon of medium-ground coffee to each cup of boiling water, with an additional spoon "for the pot." Add a little white of egg, or crushed egg shell and about one-fourth cup of cold water, stirring briskly. Add the boiling water, place the coffee pot over heat, and bring to a full boil. Place on back of the stove or over low heat for about ten minutes to settle, before serving. Do not allow the coffee to become unsettled by careless pouring.

Percolated Coffee

Use one cup of finely-ground coffee to six cups of boiling water. Place the coffee in the strainer in the upper part of the pot and let the water bubble up through the tube, percolating through the coffee into the lower part, until the coffee is of the desired strength, five minutes being the usual time required. Serve at once. Coffee made in a percolator is not good if allowed to cook after the required strength is reached.

Drip Coffee

Heat the pot by rinsing in hot water, and wet the strainer. Measure carefully the coffee (finely-ground) allowing one rounded tablespoon to each cup of water. Place in the drip-medium and pour boiling water through the coffee very slowly. Cover and let stand to drip through and serve immediately. Do not allow the brew to cool. If service is delayed, place the pot in or over hot water. Never reheat by placing over the fire.

Steeped Coffee

In making steeped coffee use one rounded tablespoon of coffee to each cup of water used, with an additional spoon for the pot. Add cold water. Place over the fire and bring quickly to the boiling point. Either let it stand for a moment to settle or add a little cold water.

Remember—the best coffee will lose its flavor if allowed to stand. Coffee should always be freshly made and served piping hot, as soon as it is brewed. If necessary to let stand, the pot should be tightly covered and the spout closed by stuffing with soft cloth or paper, so that none of the aroma and flavor may be lost.

The Thoughtless Spark that Costs Millions!

FIRE PREVENTION METHODS

1

Matches — Be sure your match is out. Break it in two before you throw it away.

2

Tobacco—Be sure that pipe ashes and cigar or cigarette stubs are dead before throwing them away. Never throw them into brush, leaves or needles.

3

Making Camp—Before building a fire scrape away all inflammable material from a spot 5 feet in diameter. Dig a hole in the center and in it build your camp fire. Keep your fire small. Never build it against trees or logs or near brush.

4

Breaking Camp — Never break camp until your fire is out—dead out.

5

Brush Burning—Never burn slash or brush in windy weather or while there is the slightest danger that the fire will get away.

No one would knowingly cause forest fires. Yet 725,928 acres of timber land were burned last year, in Michigan alone. Thoughtlessness caused practically all of it.

Every resident of Michigan and every visitor to Michigan enjoys and profits by Michigan's resources. And everybody loses when timber, one of the greatest of these resources, is destroyed.

Three great losses come from timber fires: (1) The timber loss itself, (2) the cost of fire suppression, (3) the loss of beauty,—wooded lands are despoiled of their attractiveness, and this in turn causes partial drying up of lakes and streams.

You can help by making these facts more widely understood. Then care will replace thoughtlessness. Our forests will be used and enjoyed but not destroyed.

For the 24th year Buick has again fulfilled this promise: When Better Automobiles are Built—Buick will Build Them····

Ford's New Baby

For nineteen years Henry Ford has built and sold the famous Model T car and during that time little if any changes have taken place in the general make-up or the design except perhaps a slight arrangement of the hood or the fenders. As a rule the insides of this wonderful history making vehicle have remained the same. This means he has built upwards of 15 millions of them and every one has proved its worth to the purchaser of limited means. In every sense of the word Model T was a poor man's favorite because it cost less and wore longer. Its extreme simplicity and small up keep has made it possible for the working man to enjoy its luxuries. For this Henry Ford's name as a benefactor of mankind will go down in history as none other before. Even George Washington pales into insignificance beside the builder of "Flivvers". However the day has been brought about by other firms when the motoring public demands and must have a more elaborate design, something more flexible, more manageable in heavy traffic, more suited to the requirements of a versatile public. Mr. Ford has realized this for several years, but the steady sales and heavy demand for his car has caused him to hesitate long and fearfully before entering into any other model. He has applied his superb mechanical ability and hopes he has produced an entirely new car which though unique, is going to stand up and yet maintain the popularity of the present Model T. Word comes that the new car is fully developed and thousands of employees are being taken on each week in all the Ford plants for the rush of business which is quite sure to come. Although 64 years of age Mr. Ford is still in the prime of his mechanical ability and if we mistake not the new Model Ford will be as much of a sensation as was the old one.

As we understand it, Mr. Ford has abandoned the unique gear transmission which so long has proved its practicability and in its place he will put a four shift arrangement with roller bearings. The engine will register 34 horse power at 2400 revolutions per minute and will speed up to sixty miles per hour if desired and will make 30 to 40 miles per gallon of gasoline. Four-wheel brakes will be of Mr. Ford's own special design of expanding type. New irreversible steering gear, new force feed oiling system, water pump, heavier front and rear axles, 104 inch wheel base, hydraulic shock absorbers, wire wheels, speedometer, wind-shield wiper, gasoline gauge. Price will be around $500 for closed models. These details are not authentic from the Ford company but it is claimed were stolen from them and are practically correct. With such a car as this at $500 there is no question of the sales shooting upward with a punch. This schedule contains practically everything which Ford owners have long desired and all that kept most folks from buying a Ford. It will cost Mr. Ford one cool million dollars to make the necessary changes in his machinery and factory to manufacture the new machines, so you can see the scheme is not entered upon in a breath or on the spur of the moment.

Coolidge Had Enough Of It

To the great disappointment of the politicians far and wide in this country President Coolidge has declined to again run for the high office. His reasons are probably not specifically given, but they no doubt are good ones. As far as the talk of third term is concerned, there is nothing to it. Any man who wants the office wants it as long as he can get it, therefore third term traditions have no bearing on the case. Evidently Calvin Coolidge has had enough of it, and the terrible inconveniences and confinements of the office have seriously interfered with the Coolidge family life.

Mr. Coolidge has proved himself a thoroughly capable president in every sense of the word, carrying out policies of economy and conservation to the limit which has done more to render him popular with the common people than any other man who has had the chair for years. He has made a determined stand to decrease taxes and has accomplished that end but not without opposition, it is true.

The effect on business will be damaging to say the least as all changes in the presidential office have had that effect. Besides this many other reasons are manifest why Mr. Coolidge's going out of office is a calamity to the country. We have the St. Lawrence Waterway, the paying off of public debts and a hundred other equally important projects before the nation, and most of these will come to a standstill until Mr. Coolidge's successor is in office.

Politicians are talking this man and that man for a possible successor and at this early date it seems there are so many candidates there should be at least one among them all who would be a logical candidate. Whether he is to be Lowden, Hoover, Dawes, Longworth or someone else, the destiny of the country is at stake. We have always had a feeling that Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge were not wholly in harmony with their surroundings. In every photo published it is easy to discern the tenseness of attitude, the strain of social etiquette and the tremendous formalities of the White House and its duties, but the final decision of Mr. Coolidge to quit is a clincher to the argument, and we like to think that they long to go back to the quiet New England home life and to bury themselves as it were away from the maddening political world.

THE FARMER'S BEST WAY OUT

Dean Russell of Wisconsin College of Agriculture says: "Two things have hit the farmer hard but the same things have hit business. They are increase in cost of production and decline in prices which latter has been more drastic in farm products than manufactured products The farmer's political friends say salvation can be found through legislation. Our legislative doctors propose price control. The difficulty with this is price control always means price elevation which always produces expansion in production and if this occurs without expansion in consumption you have inevitable decline in prices. The remedy works to produce the very opposite result from that intended.

"Another legislative panacea would make it easier to borrow, as if running into debt was the solution of the difficulty. There are farmers who wish it had not been quite so easy to borrow because the inevitable day comes when they have to pay principal and interest. The third legislative remedy would make easier the pathway for cooperative endeavor All you have to do is to wave the magic wand 'Cooperation' and all the farmer's difficulties will immediately disappear. I wonder if there is any government that can make people cooperate. The success of cooperative effort will lie in organization from the bottom up rather than from the top down and it will take a decade or two for the results to be felt.

"The farmers have at hand a remedy that can be utilized immediately with the definite knowledge that it will secure far better results If they will take a leaf out of present day business methods they will have relief in agriculture they will not have to wait for. Business has suffered the same as the farmer, yet business came through in a way that is far ahead of the farmer. This has been brought about through industrial efficiency, through improvement of methods. They have increased labor output per unit to the degree the costs of production have actually been reduced by better methods of carrying on work. Industrial enterprises on a large scale are spending millions on research. In ten years automobile output per worker has increased 172 per cent, tires 211 per cent, oil 83 per cent, cement 61 per cent.

"Compare that with others. The packers have increased only 27 per cent, sugar refining 28 per cent, boots and shoes only 6 per cent. There has been an increase in agriculture since 1913 of 20 per cent. It is doubtful that business has any such opportunity as exists in agriculture to reduce cost of production through improved methods. Take corn,—Iowa shows a variation in cost of production from fifteen cents to seventy-five cents a bushel. In Illinois the cost of producing corn on 80 acre fields was reduced from fifty-two cents to twenty cents a bushel. The manfacturer who had it within his power to reduce production costs from fifty-two to thirty cents per unit would be tickled to death with the opportunity of meeting competition under these conditions.

"The way out for the farmer is (1) to become a business man, (2) to adopt business methods, to adapt himself to the same kind of conditions and be as efficiently mobile as is our manufacturer or our business man in the ordinary channels of his trade, (3) to rely less upon political promises and more upon individual initiative, (4) to work toward cooperative endeavor, but in the meantime not to wait for cooperative endeavor to solve all of these problems because individually he can do something at the present time."

GARDEN OF ROSES IS PRODUCT OF ONE BUSH

What can be done in the way of creating a rose garden at no expense what ever other than a little effort and a great deal of patience is shown in one of the prettiest rose gardens to be found in Detroit among the people of moderate means. Not one penny was invested yet the result is astounding.

Four years ago Mrs. Emelia Englemann decided that she wanted a house one out of which she could make a real home, garden and all. She is a very energetic small body of fifty five years, friendly and cheerful, never content unless she is doing something either in the house or in the garden.

The yard was entirely bare with the exception of a small Dorothy Perkin climber weakly endeavoring to make some display but meeting with very little success.

Mrs. Engemann's first duty was to nurse the plant to strength and during this process she learned from a neighbor that she could make any number of plants from this one by taking slips from it. Although she had no experience with propagating roses, she attempted the process and after several of these attempts, met with success.

Mrs. Englemann rooted shoot after shoot, adding more and more plants to that one along the fence until today, after four years of work and patience her fence is one mass of beautiful bloom all around And all this with never a cent for stock.

DETROIT WOMAN IS JINX OF SHIEKS

Cleveland's shieks are being "shaken down" by a brand new species of confidence women.

Capt. Dorothy Doan Henry, head of the ploicewomen's bureau disclosed these facts when one of the operators was brought before her for investigation.

The woman is thirty five years old and said she is from Detroit and had come to Cleveland for a two week's vacation. The victim is a man who guarded his idenity with extreme care when reporting the case.

The man in this case was driving with his eyes intent upon the feminine landscape.

Along came this miss of thirty-five summers. The man smiled and she returned the greeting. They chatted. There was an invitation. She accepted. They started out.

Then the woman ordered him to drive to the police station. His amorous ardor changed to deepest gloom.

He became most apologetic. He didn't know she was a policewoman He was only fooling, anyway. Wouldn't she please listen to reason.

And she did.

The miss of thirty-five summers, winters and springs promised to let him off because he was such a nice fellow— 'for a box of candy', so they say.

But the usual price, according to Capt. Henry is five, ten or twenty-five dollars or what have you.

COWS IMPORTED HERE TO BE QUARANTINED

All importations of dairy cattle from other states are to be placed in quarantine for sixty days until they can be tested by an accredited veterinarian for bovine tuberculosis under a new ruling promulgated by Herbert E. Powell, state commissioner of agriculture.

This quarantine has become necessary, explains the state bureau of animal industry, as a result of certain dealers importing cattle from other states to sell as Michigan cows and take advantage of the large premium now being offered for disease free stock from this state. Prices in Michigan have advanced as much as fifty dollars per head as a result of the progress made in testing.

The state's quarantine will not apply to cattle from herds tested under state and federal supervision and are known to be free of disease

MOVIES SEEN AS GREATEST TEACHER IN RURAL DISTRICTS

Add to Carthage, Pompeii and other forgotten cities, Hicksville, Mich. Standards in the small towns and villages have been transformed says Walter Scott Butterfield who has provided amusement for the lesser cities of the state for more than twenty years.

'Try and give the little towns nowadays anything not up to the standard to be found in the big city says Mr. Butterfield, and you are out of luck.

Two years after Mr. Butterfield started his string of vaudeville theatres, came the moving picture crisis. There followed a five year period when the Detroit man and virtually every other vaudeville theatre owner in the country saw dark clouds ahead, saw the crowds desert the vaudeville house to pack the movies.

Then I saw the movies had come to stay and that a combination show of movies and vaudeville would be the amusement of the future," he said. But even then I didn't realize what effect the movies would have on the people of Michigan, or of the United States for that matter.

"There are no Hicksvilles in Michigan and the movies are largely responsible. By means of the movie the farmers learned what the world was doing and joined the parade.

Of course the automobile, the farm tractor, the radio and new household appliances all contributed in the metamorphosis, but the movie proved to be the greater factor in the change.

FOE OF CORN BORER FOUND IN OHIO

A small black beetle recently discovered in northwest Ohio corn fields; may accomplish what science considers a grave problem authorities here say.

Hundreds of borer destroying beetles are said by J. G. Montford grain dealer to have been found on the farm of Thomas Kinney. Sweet corn growing on Kinney's farm was heavily infested with the borer when Montford and Frank Lenhart of Freemont discovered the beetles were eating them.

Beetles also devoured borers, Montford placed in a glass jar, he said.

WAY FOUND TO KILL PEST OF QUACK GRASS

Many fields infested with quack grass in Michigan are being summer fallowed this year in an effort to rid them of the weed. Tests conducted by Ralph S. Farmers are reported to be following, Mr. Hudson's recommendations. Quack grass has become widespread in the state and is causig farmers no little concern.

STATE CORN CROP CALLED SHORTEST SINCE 1906 HARVEST

Michigan's corn acreage this year is eight per cent smaller than last year and the low condition of sixty four per cent of normal indicates that the nineteen twenty seven crop will be the shortest in the past ten years. The forecast is for thirty eight million, four sixty eight thousand bushels of corn from one million four sixty six thousand acres which is the lowest since nineteen six.

With the winter wheat harvest at hand the out turn is expected to be larger than last year, and above average. Latest information places the acreage for harvest at nine hundred twenty thousand acres with a condition of eighty eight per cent which forecasts a total production of eighteen million, three hundred seventy eight thousand bushes The spring wheat acreage was increased five thousand acres in nineteen twenty six to nine thousand acres this year. This acreage indicates one hundred forty thousand bushes.

Michigan growers increased their potato acreage twelve per cent this year and planted two hundred seventy nine thousand acres. Although a marked increase, this acreage still is considerably under the ten year average. The condition forecasts a production of twenty nine thousand six hundred forty-four thousand bushels.

POTATO CROP IS GOOD IN GRAND TRAVERSE AREA

Nature is compensating for the hard frosts that almost ruined the cherry crop of northern Michigan by bringing on a wonderful growth of field crops according to a survey of farms in the Grand Traverse region. Potatoes are in excellent shape and growers say the tubers have never been better.

Recent warm weather has also resulted in great corn growth and other crops are keeping in pace. Strawberries were not as plentiful as in former years, for the rains have not been sufficient for the patches.

"Phillips Milk of Magnesia"

Better than Soda

Hereafter, instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Maginsia' in water any time for indigeston or sour acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

For fifty years genuine 'Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. It neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels, and gently urges the souring waste from the system without purging. Besides it is more pleasant to take than soda. Insist upon 'Phillips" Twenty five cent and fifty cent bottles any drug store. 'Milk of Magensia' has been the U. S. Registered Trade Mark of The Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

GOOD HATCH REPORTED IN STATE PHEASANT EGGS

Reports received by Carl Zech, secretary of the West Michigan Game and Fish Protective association, regarding the fifty settings into which the first one thousand ringneck pheasant eggs received from the state were divided, show that more than seventy five per cent were hatched.

The state game farm at Mason sent the eggs to the association for distribution to sportsmen and farmers and the percentage of hatching according to Zech is considered very fair. The ordinary percentage of young pheasants obtained from the eggs was reduced somewhat through transportation and distribution.

FINEST ZOO BEING BUILT IN DETROIT

Speeding by on Woodward avenue at the Ten Mile Road, Detroit, motorists see a new glass domed brick building west of the superhighway, and, farther back among tall trees, a rocky pile of reminiscent of a Rocky Mountain canyon.

A little investigation would disclose Detroit's new municipal zoo, the site of which was donated by the Detroit Zoological Society and the domed building is the new bird house, while the rocky piles make up the bear dens.

And there are not only buildings on the grounds but also animals whose number is growing.

For various reasons progress has had to be slow — slow that is, in comparison with the erection of a new skyscraper. But construction of a Zoological garden that shall be the finest in the world is not a matter of a few months, and that is just what Richard E. Folet, ditrector and the members of the Zoological Commission are endeavoring to build for the people.

It would be quite possible to open the park, now closed because of the public on Sundays, but this is not deemed advisable at this time. Next year, however, with several exhibit in place and an ambitious landscaping program completed, the park will be ready for public inspection.

The bird house is completed and this fall the commission will begin to import gorgeously hued tropical birds, with their cousins from other climes which will have their homes in the airy structure.

There are three compartments in all, which will house twenty four bears. Each compartment has a swimming pool, that of the Polar bears being the largest. The Polar bears are graceful divers and Michigan residents will spend many an afternoon watching them dive from the rocky heights into their bath. The bears have been contracted for and may reach Detroit this year.

The rocks are of artificial stone. made by hand on the spot and concea keeper's quarters and feeding compartments. As Detroiters know Detroit's new zoo is going to do away with bars and cages as much as posible. A moat concealed by shrubbery will keep the bears in their dens. There will be no iron fence separating observers from the animals. The moat has steep sides which no bear will be able to climb, and solves the problem of keeping the animals in their place nicely.

BEAVER FARMS SPRINGING UP

The requests for permits to engage in beaver farming in Michigan have reached the high water mark. The department of conservation reports that since beaver have increased so extensively, coupled with the ecouragement lent beaver farming by representatives of the Bureau of Biological Survey, requests for breeding stock as well as permits to operate farms have fairly swamped the department.

The State is perfectly willing to lend its support to any worthy project designed to encourage fur farming but insists that there will be no wild catting of stock or price boosting in breeding stock. It is necessary first to secure a permit from the State to hold the animals in capivity. This costs five dollars The State will furnish a limited number of breding beavers at a price equal to their fur value. This will run about forty dollars an animal and they will be trapped in the wild by State operators and shipped to the estbalished farms.

It has also seen decided that any beaver that may be settled upon the enclosed lands of the fur farmers may be kept for breding provided the department is notified of the number and location.

RAILS FIND SHELTER IN MICHIGANS MARSHLAND

The marshes that border our rivers, bays and lakes, the cat-tail and in swamps, in the grassy lowlands constitute the habitat of an interesting and secretive family of bird the rails or marsh hens.

In Michigan this family is represented by four members; The King Virginia, Sora and Yellow rails. The King and Yellow rails, the largest and smallest of the four spesies, inhabit the drier marshes and wet grassy prarie regions, the Virginia and Sora rail are at home in the inundated extensive marshes of our rivers, bays and lakes.

The rails as a family range generally over North America from Hudson bay to northern South America and from the salt marshes of the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific coast.

The King and Virginia rails do not go much north of the fortyfourth latitude, which runs through northern United States and southern Canadian provinces. The Sora goes northward to Hudson bay and occassionally to south Greenland. The Yellow rail is a species of the eastern United States ranging north to Hudson bay and Nova Scotia.

ACCESSORIES BIG FACTOR IN STYLE

Some are accessories and some ar necessities but all hail under the headline summer accessories.

The costume accesory must be smart and individual this season to attract attention. Gloves, shoes jewelry, corsages, belts scarfs and umbrellas are as carefully selected as the costume itself.

The most attractive glove at present is the slip-on-suede model in champagne or beige shade. While some of these slip on models are just a trifle higher than wrist-length, others extend midway between the wrist and the elbow and are crushed in folds above the wrist. With strictly tailored suits cuffed gloves continue to be popular, the cuffs usually being of contrasting color.

Handbags in medium sizes are preferred to the larger shapes of last summer. Reptile leathers and calf or suede leathers are those most popular. Neutral colors rule above more colorful types since the handbag should harmonize with the shoes this year.

Belts are an important accessory since most dresses at present are worn with narrow suede or leather belts. Here, too neutral colors are preferred to more colorful types. Belts this season often combine reptile skin with suede or leather and much emphasis is placed upon the clasps, which are made of metal in modernistic designs. Eyelets outlined in metal are also shown. Plain belt buckles are not considered extremely smart this year.

Not content with stockings of cobweb thansparency, manufacturers have now designed opalescent stockings combined with sheer qualities which make them almost undiscernible when on the leg. Opalescent stockings come in faint evening shades such as pinkish-mauve and flesh-pink since they are primarily for evening wear. The opalescent glow radiating from them casts a flattering sheen over the leg. One might almost call these stockings changable silk since they seem to take on the coloring of the shoe or frock with which they are worn. Slippers for evening also come in opalescent kind effects this season.

By bracelet stockings we refer to the stocking which has a ring of contrasting color about the ankle providing a bracelet effect. These stockings usually come in gray shades with black heels which extend as far up as the black bracelet or ankle ring. The ring is of almost half an inch in width and gives the effect of the anklet shoe which was popular some years ago

Velvet flanuts itsel f in sports wear, in tailored things, in chic street suits, in lovely afternoon frocks and it is supreme in the evening gown.

The question this season is not whether velvet is correct for any one type of garmert but WHAT kind of velvet is correct. Surely this material, for ages associated with royalty and luxury is best suited to the new trend towards luxuriousness and the desire to express the feminine, so evident in many phases of this season's mode.

Perhaps the newest note is the combination of printed velvet with plain velvet, the blouse of one, the skirt of the other, or vice versa.

The prints combine four or five colors in an indistinct splashy pat pattern but black is always one of these colors — it seems to enhance the georgeousness of the coloring and design.

The velvets for sports wear show plaided effects or a shower of black showing through the weave in all the plain colors.

A new material shown this season called crepe ibis, will be in high favor for the chic little tailored suit worn under the heavy top coat or for the smart street frock. It is a mixture of silk an wool of a sufficiently hard finish to stand up under the hardest kind of wearing and still remains fresh. Indeed, its texture is much like the old Canton crepe, but is has taken to itself all manner of designs — plaids and tiny checks, in the widest range of coloring imaginable.

In hats for fall the small, close-fitting crown looks as if it will be the favored type. Brims are turned up in front or down all around being shorter at the back and front than at the sides. Grosgrain satin, velvet trimmings are being shown. The short nose veil has been shown by Reboux, which may influence the winter millinery mode. Reboux is also showing fabric hats of taffeta or velvet. These hats are large dropping affairs for summer wear, so ho knows whether the velvet hat may not make its appearance for winter wear.

MAN WHO HOAXED FORD DEPORTED

George Robert Gabor Jr., the ninteen year old Hungarian who made a spectacular tour through the United States a few months ago posing as Baron Frederick von Krupp, Jr., faces deportation to Hungary, acording to press dispatches from the East.

He was taken from the Government detention house at Guichester N. J. and sent under guard to New York. He will be a steerage passenger on the trip across the Atlantic, his request that he be allowed return home a first class passengsenger having been denied.

Henry Frd, Thomas A. Edison and Harvey Firestone were among the prominent Americans who entertained Gabor in the belief he was a members of the famous family of Germany munitions makers.. The genuine Baron Frederick von Krupp was a classmate of the imposter and Gabor declares young Krupp gave him authority ta use his name during his American trip

He arrived in Detroit in an automobile owned by Harvey Firestone and driven by Mr. Firestone's chauffeur. Mr. Firestone had telephoned ahead to Herbert V. Book, one of the owners of the Book Cadillac Hotel and Mr. Book set aside his own suite in the hotel for the use of the imposter. Henry Ford sent his automobile to the hotel for Gabor the following day, and escorted him through the River Rouge plant.

CORN CROP POOR IN IONIA COUNTY

Fred B. Howard, Well Known Farmer Comments On Crop Conditions

Fred B. Howard well known farmer of Berlin township in commenting on the crop situation is generally optimistic on everything except the corn and this he states is "way backward".

"The corn is at least two weeks' behind and the stand all over the country is very thin," he says.

'But. if we should have a good rain spell with warm weather the crop would perk along and most of the farmers would have good results".

Practically all of the wheat in Ionia county has been cut and is far above the average, according to Mr. Howard. Farmers should be well pleased with this crop", he says.

"Beans will be a fairly good crop and a good rain would help them along a great deal. The early potatoes are fine, but I believe the late potatoes are below normal. There is a splendid crop of alfalfa. Some farmers lost a great deal by thinning out their stand. Clover is doing fine and so is cloverseed. Both should yield good crops.

"Oats, I believe are below normal at present although others may differ with me. I do not raise any barley, myself, but it looks good in the locality I am in. Rye is also very good near my farm and in other sections of the county where I have had an opportunity to observe."

There is still some hay in the rarvest and farmers were seen hauling it last week. The sugar beets are progresing in fine shape and large numbers of Mexicans are used in the cultivation.

The people of Clare County take partiular pride in their County fair and will stress every effort to make this an exposition that will long be remembered.

The fair grounds are located at Harrison and are the property of the county. The board of supervisors make an apropriation each year towards the support of the exposition and all the residents of the county look forward to the gathering as a social one rather than a place of exhibition and entertainment.

OLIVET WOMAN HOME FROM HAWAII WHERE SHE IS INSTRUCTOR

That there are few native Hawaiians in the Hawaiian islands, but that the population is largely made up of Japanese, Chinese, Porto Ricans, Philippinos and Portugnese is the statement of Laura Foster, daughter of Mrs. Alice Foster who is home at Olivet on a leave of absence from the islands where she is an instructor in the government school.

The volcano Kiluea of largest crater dimensions in the world, now erupting has left on the island of Kauia its traces of former eruptions in the great cracks in the earth and in the fourteen ton boulders and shower of ashes which have been shot forth, she said. Kiluea is located on the side of a mountain, whose top has a living volcano as yet unexplored.

Young Perow, was working at Northland, a short dstance from Escanaba and went to bed early one night. About eleven forty-five he began to move around and in a few minutes was going strong. An open window on the second floor of the Andrew Smalts, with whom he was staying, barred his progress. But not for long — he walked right throught it and landed solidly on the ground below.

Mrs. Smalts heard the lad fall and went to his assistance. Victor will be laid up for some time.

Quite a number from here are helping to build a foundation for the McCourtie Mausoleum at Somerset Center according to the Jackson Granite Co. The top of the mausoleum will be made of a single piece of granite, the largest yet quarried in the United States. The weight of the piece will be fifty five tons.

Saturday evening a man and a woman engaged in a rumpus while seated in an auto on the outskirts of town. Each consigned the other to Hades or there abouts and many so called Verbal brick bats flew through the air for the space of a few minutes after which they started their car and departed for parts unknown. Ordinarly such an affair might be overlooked were it not for the fact that a quarrel is such a scarcity in this section that most everybody is interested when one does take place. Evidentally the occupants of the car were a man and his wife from some other community who were out taking the evening air but be that as it may, the example is a good illustration of the married state in modern up to date civilized America. Of course, there are occasional couples who do not engage in more than half a dozen scraps during the course of a year but these peaceful pairs are probably about as scarce as are Republicans in Oscar Underwood's Alabama. Maybe Rev. Frank Kadey, the big Chicago preacher is right he advises young fellows who belong to the church to stay single and spend their lives and their money making the world better and consequently happier.

The bride looked lovely in a gown of white mosquito net with veil held in place with orange blossoms and carried a boquet of sweet peas and baby breath. The brides maid wore a charming gown of flowered georgette over yellow and carried an arm boquet of yellow Fall flowers. Mr. Bert Mahler officiated using the ring ceremony. TO THE PATRONS OF NORTH ADAMS SCHOOLS

School will open Monday, August 29. The High School students and grade students will meet in the Town Hall, Odd Fellows Hall and the basement of the Congregational church as at the close of the last school year.

We know that we will be working under difficulties during the first semester of the present school year but every means possible will be taken by the Board of Education in providing equipment and conveinences for the pupils.

The teachers selected are as highly qualified for their work as can be found in any high school in this part of the state. The three teachers employed in the Junior and Senior High school, including the Superintendent, all have degrees. This is very unusual. The school is on the University accredited list for coming two years. Following is a copy of the letter received from the University attesting to that fact:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN
January 24, 1927

"Mr. R. C. Young,
Supt. of Schools, North Adams
Michigan My Dear Sir:

At a recent meeting of the University Committee of accredited schools, the report on your high school was submitted. I was instructed to notify you that the Committee has voted to continue your school on the accredited list of this University for two years. This term of accrediting will expire June 30, 1929.

In re-accrediting your school for the term of two years, the Committee assumed that careful consideration was being given to the recommendations made by Mr. M. A. Kopke in his letter to you of November 10, 1926. It is the opinion of the Committee that attention to these recommendations will tend to strengthen your school.

Very truly yours
J. B. Edmondson, Sec'y
Committee on Accredited Schools"

Our school has had a higher rating for some time past and we feel sure that it will continue to be one of the best schools in this section.

We are not especially interested in asking students to come to North Adams who are nearer to other schools that have equal standing although they are welcome. We do feel, however, that the students living in our area should get their high school education here.

Various and conflicting reports have at times come to us regarding the standing of our schools, and at the present time about the tuition.

The above letter should clear up the matter regarding the standing of the school. As to the matter of tuition the price will be the same as usual.

We extend the invitation to the young people of this section to North Adams. This will be an especially interesting school year. They have already commenced work on the new school building and we have every assurance that early in January we will be housed in one of the best modern school buildings in Michigan.

Sincerely,
R. C. Young, Supt.

APPLE PARING ONCE REPLACED JAZZ AS SPORT FOR YOUTHS

The silver flasks, canophony of jazz orchestras, and other features of modern youth's parties are no more thrilling than the festive gatherings of three generations ago, Mrs. Hugh McNeight of Memphis said in announcing her plans for celebrating her ninety fifth birthday anniversary.

But there is this difference;

The parties she attended four score years ago were devoted almost exclusively to paring apples. Often the young couples pared as much as twenty bushels on the course of the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. Mc Neigth, whose husband is still living was born near Whitby, Canada in eighteen thirty two and came to Memphis a half century ago. Eight children of the couple are alive.

The children that attended the celebration were Frank and William Mc Neight, Mrs. John Morrison, Mrs. Robert Harrison, Mrs. James McPherson, all of Pt. Huron Mrs. Mary Hodgin of Ailsa Craig Ont.; Joseph Mc Neight of Lansing and Mrs. Cass De Land of Memphis.

WHITE LEGHORNS LEADING IN M. S. C. EGG MARATHON

A pen of white leghorn hens from Grand Blanc, a 'dark horse' in the fifth international egg laying contest at the Michigan State College has forged its way into the lead of one of the most spirited poultry races in the history of the local competitions.

Only a few weeks ago these hens were in tenth place but after gaining their "second wind" they pushed up rapidly. They were entered by F. G. DeWitt of Grand Blanc.

In rising to first place, Mr. DeWitt's hens displace a pen of Leghorns entered by Harry Burns, of Millington. Mr. Burn's hens have laid one hundred twenty more eggs than DeWitt's fowls, these eggs underweight and could not be counted in the official returns. DeWitt's birds have produced few undersized eggs.

Each boat has cabins in the bows and here the lake travelers sleep nights. Horling will portage his craft from Petoskey to Conway and then move down the famous inland route lakes and streams to Cheboygan, visit Mackinaw Island, St. Ignace and take a side trip but rain and auto into the woods of the Tah qua men non country to look after his wild ginseng lands.

GOLD KEYS TO CITY GO INTO PRODUCTION

Whether Detroit shall purchase one thousand gold plated keys to the city for presentation to distingushed visitors is up to Percy L. Monteith city controller and Edward Speyer, secretary to the Mayor. Unwilling to make the momentous dicision itself the Council placed the responsibility on their shoulders.

Isadore Rudolph, Philadelphia, manufacturer, stands eager to supply the keys at sixty five cents each They are five inches long and a thermometer in the business end lends them a certais utility. With Col. Charles A. Lndbergh coming and all, Mr. Rudolph said he really thought the city should have them.

But Mr. Monteith isn't sure that the key now in use is beter. This is in the nature of the property key It is large and wooden. Although it has been presented to scores of distinguished visitors, no one has yet offered to carry it away with him.

CLOSING ROAD FOR G. M. PROVING GROUND IS DENIED BY COURT

Closing of roads by public officials is declared illegal in a decision handed down by Judge Joseph H. Collins of Livingston county circuit court, Howell, directly pointed at General Motors corporation.

No road law now exists in Michigan which authorizes any public official to close or discontinue a highway, Judge Collin holds. He held unconstitutional the parts of Act tw hundred fifty three of the laws of nineteen hundred which relate to the discontanuance of highways. Therefore, he reversed the township highway commissioner of Livingston county in approving the petition of the General Motors corporation for the closing of King road which cuts the southwest corner of the motor corporation's twenty five hundred thousand dollar testing grounds between Brighton and Milford.

King road is the connecting high way between Pleasant Valley road from Brighton to Milford, and Brownson road, and constitutes a short cut from Brighton to Milford

SPECIALIZE, PLEA OF FARM EXPERTS

While experts of various kinds clamor for diversified farming as one of the highroads to farm prosperity, a lone voice comes out of Ithaca N. Y., to remind the experts that the tendency of the time is toward specilization instead.

The voice is that of Dr. George F. Warren, professor of agricultural economics at Cornell University, long recognized as a national authority in his field.

"The whole history of American agriculture shows increasing specialization on those products best adapted to a region, says Prof Warren. In some regions several products are about equally adapted, and such regions are usually diversified. But most regions are specializing in one or two products best adapted to the natural and economic conditions.

"Apples were formerly grown in all parts of New York state. More than half of the trees have disappeared in the regions outside of Western New York and the Hudson River Valley. Potatoes and other vegetables are increasing on the best soils of Long Island, but the growth of such crops in connection with general farming is decreasing Eggs are being produced in large numbers near the ocean in a way that was formerly unknown.

"The increase in scientific knowledge and technical skill favors the production of a few products. Machinery also favors specialization. To equip a small area for any one crop is too expensive. Improved transportation enlarges the market for the region that has a natural advantage. The farmers are gradually specializing on the product for which their region has the advantage. Some persons still insist that their home region is best for everything, but competition is gradually replacing false patriotism by knowledge.

'The agricultural depression is eliminating the regions that are not best for the products and is so increasing specialization. High handling charges favor the production of home food supplies, but commercial production is rapidly being specialized. Many well-meaning persons think that the trouble with agriculture is lack of diversity. They do not know the agricultural history of the past century.

Approximately fourty roads leading from the twenty three Southeastern counties under quarantine will be patroled by the department agents. MICHIGAN MAN SAYS WAR NOT FORGOTTEN ABROAD

"Europe cannot forget the war. There are to many reminders, especially in France and Belgium—shattered villages, fields where the guns abandoned still remain. The European nations keep the war idea constantly before them, cherishing war relics, constructing their statues and monuments around the theme. It will be many years before Europe wholly accepts disarmament."

Secretary H. H. Malladay, of the Michigan State College who has just returned from a seven week's trip abroad, thus summarized his impressions of continental Europe He atended the International Rotary conference at Ostend, Belgium in June and then is company with some two hundred and fifty Rotarians, toured France, Belgium, Germany and England.

ALFALFA SAVES FARM LOSSES

Because he discovered he could not sell his farm without a forsage crop on the ground V. W. Montgomery, of Reed City, started to plant alfalfa on his land, and has achieved a remarkable record.

Seven years ago, Montgomery sold the farm, located five miles west and one mile north of Reed City to an Ionia farmer. The new owner could not raise sufficient forsage for his stock, and abandoned the farm two years later. Montgomery decided to sow the land to alfalfa so that it could be sold permanently the next time.

He first sowed ten acres using twelve pounds of seed to the acre and two tons of lime. The next year he doubled the acreage. He now has ninety acres of alfalfa on his one hundred twenty acre farm. For the first time, he tried out sweet clover this spring. He also introduced the cultipacker, and secured better initial stands. Montgomery leaves his alfalfa for three or four years, then plows it down and reseeds. He has found that the second seeding gives better stand and thriftier growth.

Because of his fine field of alfalfa Montgomery's farm was chosen for one of the Hay Day demonstrations recently conducted in twenty three counties of the state by farm crop specialists of the Michigan State College.

THE GOOD ROADS OF MICHIGAN

Michigan has 6,299 miles of her state surfaced and ranks seventh among the states of the United States in this regard according to the Bureau of Public Roads. Two of the neighboring states Ohio and Wisconsin exceed this total the former with 9,591 miles and the latter with 8,420 mlesi Three hundred and fifty four miles of surfaced state highways were added to Michigan's total in 1926 Twenty two states added greater totals during the past season, Ohio leading with an addition of 2,411 miles

Michigan has made great strides in the improvement of her highways during recent years A score of years ago the state was more or less notorious as a result of the unimproved condition of her road system. Other state had similar reputations The motor car, however brought about a great development and at the beginning of the present year the mileage of the combined state systems, which had been surfaced aggregated 163,059 The above figures do not include mileage surfaced by counties or other local governments

Good roads have added materially to the wealth of this state Automobile travel has been made a pleasure by the paved and surfaced roads which network the state Motor car registrations reflect this condition Cities, towns and hamlets which formely were almost naccessible or accessible only by rail are now a pleasant drive by automobile The improved highway has brought the world to the hidden beauty spots of our state

Paved roads have linked together the industrial cities of Michigan into almost a single manufacturng unit. The day's productions of part and supply maufacturers are now trucked by night over the state's highways and are at the plant of the finished product producer when he starts operations in the morning Heavy inventories have been largely eliminated Industrial shut downs due to delays in the delivery of materials are now practically unknown Hand to mouth buying with its many advantages is becoming the rule rather than the exception with manufacturers Improved highways have effected these changes

The tourist trade of Michigan this year is expected to return a revenue to the state of $300,000,000 Improved roads are the answer to the increase in the annual number of visititors. Michigan is laying claim to the title of "The Summer Playground of the United States" Innumerable island lakes of beauty, state parks excellent hunting and fishing, hundreds of lake resorts — these are among the numerous attractions which Mich. offers. Good roads have laid these resources at th running boards of the motor cars of the nation.

CALIFORNIA WOOD USED FOR SEATS IN MICHIGAN STADIUM

California redwood treated with oil and pitch proof, will be used for the seats of the new million dollar University of Michigan Stadium. The wood was purchased at a great expense, but will pay for itself because it needs little repair and will last considerably longer than pine wood, which was used in the south concrete stands of Ferry Field.

With the gridiron completely sodded, the entrance from the east already completed one half of the stands laid with concrete and the several main arteries leading to the stadium nearing completion, work on the structure and its environs is progressing at a rate far in excess of that anticipated earlier in the spring.

CITY BUILT ON INDIAN GRAVES

The "Great Spirit", after searching far, discovered the charms of the Grand River valley and walking across the rapids, decided that the present site of Grand Rapids indeed was the home road and designated it the burying ground of warriors according to a tradition related by Captain Charles E. Belknap an uthority upon Indian life of Michigan.

Forty eight Indian mounds were found clustered closely together along the west bank of Grand River where business blocks now are situated, when the white man first came into the valley said Captain Belknapw ho as water boy toiled with gangs of laboring men who leveled the mounds and carted the contents to the nearby swamplands to fill the low places.

That these burial places possessed wide repute is attested by the discovery in them of various Indian articles fashioned of flint and clay, which must have been carried hundreds of miles, he said.

From Muscle Shoals and the Yellowstone Pary country and other faraway places were brought for burial with the braves the articles of the hunt and battle as well as the containers which were heaped with food and covered with earth to satisfy the needs of those who had gone down the home road. The skeletons uncovered showed the dead were buried either in the standing or sitting positions. Bars of pur silver were also dug up.

So many skeletons, in all their gruesomeness, were distinterred that the Irishmen, superstitious as they were struck on the job and the work had to be completed by Hollanders", Captain Belknap said.

While serving as water boy, Captain Belknap made a large collection of Indian relics gathered from the mounds. After he enlisted for Civil War service and before he was called to active duty, he placed the collection in the attic of his home. Returning after the war he discovered the home had burned and the collection was destroyed.

INSECTS PERIL HUMAN RACE

For every species, of mammal known to the scientific world there are one hundred species of insects. For every additional member born of the mammal parentage, one hundred come into existence via the insect route. So, turning to mathematics we find that one plus one equals two while one hundred times one hundred equals one thousand. This gives us some idea of what mankind is up against in its fight for existence in a world populated with untold myriads of insects If there were as many human beings on the face of the earth as there are insects, this old sphere would be so crowded that some of us would have to migrate to Mars for standing room.

Insect life is fighting for world domination twenty four hours out of each day, and there are many scientists who are bold enough to predict that mankind's domination of the world is not only challenged, but seriously threatened by the ever increasing army of insects. The advance of such parasitic hordes as the boll weevil, the corn borer the Japanese beetle, miltitudious tree borers leaf devourers and fungus organisms are held up as examples of the seriousness of the situation and unles held in control are quite likely to create an economic crisis.

Upon occasions the urban resident has been confronted with bits of evidence of this menace. He awakes upon a morning to find that some horde of leaf eating insects have nearly defoliated his shade threes or that cabbage worms hve mde sieves out of the succulent leaves of a few plants he has nursed through the late spring months.

Of late years practically every village and city in the country has been mintaining a crew of men whose sole duty is to wage constant war against shade tree parasites and diseases. This is carried on through the use of chemicals, thoroughly sprayed on trees, by trimming and cutting out infected parts and limbs by burning infestations either upon the living tree or the severed branches.

"The original home of the trees we plant along our highways and around the home is the forest," says Mr. Kotinsky. "There, whatever disadvantages they are exposed to, they have acquired a certain degree of resistance to and immunity from insect and probably other normal enemies. Transplanted to our streets, parks and home grounds, they are relieved of the keen competition and other adverse conditions of wild forest life, but lose most of the natural advantages of their customary associations— sun shade moisture and humus — and their proper growth is hampered besides, especially in our cities, by a variety of unfavorable conditions. Hard packed ground, frequently disturbed, often poisoned with oils or gases or charged with electric current, and uncertain and erratic water supply handicap the roots, while constant struggle with thoughtless or reckless men and greedy beasts, limited sunshine and other vissititudes above the ground render their struggle for existence uphill work indeed. Trees so hampered lose much of their native power of resistance and are there by rendered inviting easy prey to a variety of disintegrating agencies most prominent among which are insects.

BROKEN NECK FAILS TO STOP BANCROFT FARMER

Few men work at all after they break their neck but a little thing like that didn't bother John Nichols twenty-four, a farmer living near Bancroft

Nichols walked into the Memorial hospital, recently and said that his neck had been hurting him since July third when he fell off a barn that he was shingling. An X-ray discovered a broken vertebrae in the neck.

Nichols was placed in a cast and is expected to recover. He has been working every day since the accident.

PIERCE DAD OF STATE SCHOOL

When after his induction into office, Webster H. Pearse crossed the west corridor of the State Capitol to take upon himself the duties of superintendent of public instruction of Michigan for the next two years, his shadow fell upon the bronze bust of John D. Pierce, first to fill that honored station.

This bust is one of but two bronzes that grace the Capitol, the other being the Blair statue. It was erected by the teachers of the state, from contributions by the teachers and school children of Michigan, in grateful honor of Pierce's services as our first superintendent of public instruction, and founder of our public school system.

From Pierce to Pearce is a cry of ninety one years. A lot of water has gone over the educational dam through the race. John D. Pierce was called to the arduous task of creating a school system for Michigan while still a young man in Eighteen thirty six. During that period Michigan completely organized and functioning as a full fleged and legitimate State, stood hat in hand, so to speak at the door of the Union, waiting to be invited in. It was then that Mr. Pierce a Congregational missionary with Marshall and Western Calhoun County as his field of pioneer labor was laying his plans for erecting the fabric of one of the most celebrated educational organisms the world has ever known.

Webster H. Pearce, the new incumbent is not a minister, but he is the son of one. So for him to be superintendent of public instruction would no doubt please "Father" Pierce and Father Pearce equally well. The latter was a Michigan Methodist minister who served his generation faithfully and loyally.

The office of superintendent of public instruction has been at Lansing since Eighteen fifty one. Before that time it flitted about the State with its incumbent and that was something of a flit. As a matter of fact, the office was just about where the learned gentleman hung his hat. As the superintendent was expected by thrifty legislators to keep his hat on the move while he was incubating schools in the vast wilderness, the office had an abiding place like that of the children of Israel journeying to the Promised land.

Will Prohibition Come By Education?

We have assumed that prohibition is to come by compulsion. It is becoming increasingly evident that the enforcement of the Volstead Act upon unwilling citizens is not only an exceedingly costly but a highly dangerous undertaking. In the large centers of population, where there is a considerable minority opposed to prohibition, it is seriously questioned by many whether the law can ever be enforced. No doubt enforcement has been rendered difficult by reason of defects in the law itself, the vagueness of its wording, the complicated and cumbersome machinery, the division of responsibility between state and federal authority, the clogging of the courts, inadequate resources, corruption of officials, and, perhaps, half hearted purpose at the top. But all these are only concrete ways of saying that considerable and determined minorities opposed to any particular law can always find ways for making it ineffective. The problem then remains, How get rid of this opposition?

THE EDUCATIONAL PROCESS

If this element in the population cannot be coerced, can it be brought voluntarily to the observance of the law? The alternative to force is reason. If compulsion fails, can we accomplish the desired end by persuasion? Authority in a democracy rests back upon convictions, and convictions are the product of educational processes.

This has been strikingly true in the past history of the prohibition movement. A century ago the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts despaired of controlling the liquor evil, for the per capita consumption of spirits had nearly doubled in the period from 1810 to 1825. But the movement for total abstinence, an educational movement, which began about that time, succeeded within the next decade in forming over eight thousand societies whose members voluntary pledged themselves to abstain from all intoxicating beverages. Two million people ceased drinking spirits. Four thousand distilleries were closed. It became unfashionable to serve spirits in company.

This promising educational movement was interrupted by the Civil War and many of the gains already won were temporarily lost in the period of demoralization which followed the war. But the tremendous industrial development which took place soon afterward turned the attention of thoughtful men once more to the problem of ridding society of this social menace. The age of steam and electricity required a clear head and a steady hand for the operation of its dangerous machinery. Great corporations lent their influence to the movement for sobriety. And while the demand for labor drew to our shores vast multitudes of people accustomed to the free use of wine and beer, railroads and other hazardous enterprises were increasingly insisting that their employees refrain from all use of intoxicating beverages. Total abstinence societies sprang into being. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union waged a vigorous educational campaign through the public schools the churches, and the public press The Anti-Saloon League brought to bear upon the voters a large volume of information regarding the corrupting influence of the saloon and brought home to legislators the realization that their activities were being watched. Under the plan of local option, thousands of communities freed themselves from the open liquor traffic. State after state adopted prohibition. Federal legislation was passed in 1901 prohibiting the sale of liquor in military establishments and the transmission of liquor by mail was prohibited in 1908. The difficulty of enforcing state laws led to agitation for national prohibition and the resolution for an amendment to the Constitution was introduced into both houses of Congress in 1913. In 1917 Congress voted to submit the amendment to the states. In just a little over a year it was ratified by the necessary thirty six states and became a part of the Constitution January 16, 1920. But by this time state prohibition had already gone into effect in thirty-two states. Soon a thirty-third adopted it. and in twenty-four of these adoption had come about by popular vote.

Inter State Garages

Announcement was made today that 48 towns in Michigan have been selected as locations for units of a nation-wide chain of garages now being established throughout the United States.

These cities were selected, it was stated, after a survey of highways and the average flow of inter city and inter-state automobile traffic throughout the state.

According to an estimate made by 862 automobile associations, 1927 is expected to set record figures for motoring, it being estimated that 40,000,000 people will be out on the highways—for business and pleasure—in 10,000,000 cars. This traffic movement and its steady growth each year is responsible, it is said, for the establishment of a country-wide chain of bonded garages rendering a nationally standardized insured automotive service.

"In locations where satisfactory chain affiliations can not be made with established local garages," said Mr. J. M. Coates, general manager of the chain company, "our plan includes the building of super-service stations for motorists for motorists' needs."

The chain of bonded garages is already operating more than 200 units in 14 states, and the additional locations are said to be included in the 1927 expansion program of the chain company.

Forests and Drought

Eminent foresters take the position that the cutting of Michigan forests has had much to do with the lowering of lake levels throughout the state in recent years. They contend that the forests serve as reservoirs for holding the moisture letting it out gradually during the dry season and preventing floods when heavy rainfalls come. They claim that the steady seepage from the woods keeps the lakes at a uniform level, while the moisture in the depth of the woods is drawn up by the sun, causes local showers and keeps a perfect rotation of the water supply. If this is true the forests play an important part in the success or failure of our agricultural interests. Our various farm crops must have ample rainfall if they are to hold up to standard and if the rainfall is decreased by the cutting of our forests we are not only losing the timber, but we are cutting down our other crop production as well. If it is true that by depleting our forests we are reducing the rainfall we are also seriously affecting our navigation and water power possibilities. If these foresters are right in their contention that timber depletion is responsible for the lack of rain in recent years we already have paid a handsome price for our wastefulness and should take immediate steps to overcome this handicap that we have acquired as the result of our own folly.

Detroit Music Carnival

Detroit's Music Carnival to be held on Washington Boulevard August 16-17 in a few years will surpass the famous Mardi Gras of New Orleans if the vision of the committee in charge is realized. While more than 200,000 persons are expected to participate this year, the sponsors regard it only as a beginning.

Next year, if plans are fulfilled, the carnival will last a week. It will not only include dancers and other arrays of entertainment features, but will include industrial parades, telling the story of the city's greatness.

It is planned also to have as many other events as possible coincide with the music carnival. Efforts will be made to hold the national balloon and airplane meet at the same time.

Silo Is Tomb For Rowdy Corn Borer

The silo is an effective and practical device to control the European corn borer, according to Professor H. H. Musselman, agricultural engineer at M. S. C.

Tests, which have been performed by entomologists, have shown that the ensiling process destroys corn borers. For this reason, the silo has become known as the corn borer's tomb.

It is very important in harvesting the crop, Prof. Musselman says, that the corn be cut within two inches of the ground; otherwise, the remaining stubble is very likely to contain a high percentage of borers. Low-cutting attachments for corn binders have been found to be practical in keeping the height of stubble down within two inches, which is considered good control practice.

The silage cutter should be set to cut the fodder corn in one-half inch lengths. The borers which escape this destructive operation are destroyed by the silage acids.

The silo is generally recognized as one of the best means of supplying succulent feed to dairy animals Where a number of milch cows are kept, the use of the silo represents good farm practice and saves considerable labor when the work of feeding and harvesting is taken into account.

The silo as a means of corn borer control fits into present farm practice and does not involve extra operations, except when it is not possible to cut the crop within two inches of the ground. This problem can be met by plowing under the stubble. As Michigan is a dairy state to a large extent, Prof. Musselman says that farmers should take advantage of the silo as a means of borer control.

Muskegon Paper Asks Support For Good Shepherd Fund of Grand Rapids

Muskegon—In the leading editorial of a recent issue of the Muskegon Chronicle, the campaign for $442,000 being conducted by the Sisters of the Good Shepherd for the erection of a new home in Grand Rapids is enthusiastically praised. The editorial urges cittizens of Muskegon, regardless of creed, to support the campaign.

The editorial is in part:

"Ministering to the misled, wayward and incorrigible girlhood of Michigan during the past 22 years, the House of the Good Shepherd, at Grand Rapids, has given an exemplification of Christian healing of damaged souls, of social reclamation as a method of dealing with society's wards who have gone astray.

"These have to be taken care of, somehow. And society has to pay the bill. The Good Shepherd sisterhood, inspired by the rebuke given by the Man of Galilee to those who were about to stone an erring woman, not only has shown to the world the least expensive way, but the most productive way in results that restore social liabilities to the world as social assets.

"The work of the House of Good Shepherd is carried on by a Catholic order of women who have consecrated their lives to this task, with a self-sacrificing devotion that challenges the admiration of an all too selfish world. But the service is non-sectarian. Nearly half the wards of the home are non-Catholic. Proselytism is studiously avoided.

"Demand for the service rendered by this institution has far outgrown its capacity. The Sisters who are giving their lives to the work have been housed in a wretchedly appointed old road house. The capacity of the home is for 125 girls but 30 more than that are accommodated, with a long waiting list. There has been no provision for separating the young erring girls from older and embittered offenders. There is no place for housing girls who have no homes to which they can return. The usual commitment is for six months only.

"With the cordial approval of the Grand Rapids Association of Commerce and the Grand Rapids Civic Round Table of service clubs, the Sisters have launched a $442,000 project for providing adequate building facilities for the work. Grand Rapids, with less than half the population of the home from that city, was asked to raise half the amount. It oversubscribed that sum by several thousand dollars. The other half has been asked from the people of Michigan.

"Muskegon, which has found in the House of Good Shepherd a refuge for years for its wayward girls, will want to give its share in the project."

ST. IGNACE PASTOR PRESIDE AT STATE HISTORICAL MET

St. Ignace—The Rev. Fr. John T. Holland, pastor of St. Ignatius' Catholic church, here, will preside at the forthcoming session of the Michigan Historical society convention. The session will be the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the burial of Pere Marquette on the site of the old St. Ignace mission and the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of his grave. It will mark the formal reopening of the old church building, at which services were held for the first time in 1837. The Rt. Rev. P. J. Nussbaum, D. D., Bishop of Marquette, and the Rev. Fr. William F. Gagnieur, S. J., of Sault Saint Marie, will be among the speakers.

PRIEST WAS NOBLEMAN; SUCCUMBS TO HEART ATTACK

The Rev. Louis Von Kovacs, pastor of Holy Cross (Hungarian) church, Detroit, was buried recently from the church he had built. He succumbed to a sudden heart attack. Father Von Kovacs, who was the son of a Hungarian noble and who was entitled to call himself "Count Von Kovacs", came to the United States 18 years ago to do missionary work among his countrymen in America. He was highly successful in his work and at the time of his death Holy Cross Church was one of the largest Hungarian edifices in the U. S. John Cardinal Csernoch, primate of Hungary, made a special visit to the church last year on the occasion of his trip to the Eucharistic Congress at Chicago.

FORMER GRAND RAPIDS NUN HEADS GOOD SHEPHERD HOME

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Sister Mary of St. Patricia, a native of Grand Rapids, whose family name is Golden, has been appointed superior of the House of the Good Shepherd here. The new superior is a sister of Sister Mary of St. Anne, who for 18 years has been an influential worker among wayward girls in this city. The two sisters will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of their entrance into the order next year.

ALL CREEDS GIVE TO CATHOLIC HOSPITAL

Protestants and Jews Among Donators to New Escanaba Institution

Escanaba—Because Protestant and Catholic, Jew and gentile, churchgoers and those who sometimes scoff at religion contributed whole-heartedly to the fund, heeding only the call of charity without thought of creed, the new $250,000 St. Francis hospital, in this city, is a reality. The institution was dedicated and blessed, recently, by the Rt. Rev. Paul J. Nussbaum, D. D., Bishop of Marquette, for the Order of the Sisters of St. Francis, which conducts the hospital.

Prominent among the list of contributors to the fund are the Swedish Baptitst Ladies' Aid Society and the Ladies of the Escanaba Jewish Churches. The campaign offered everyone an opportunity to give and a large majority of the citizenry of the community accepted.

The Order of the Sisters of St. Francis purchased the site which now bears the name of their patron saint in 1913. The first brick buildings were erected in 1914 and were dedicated the following year. Older frame buildings, in the rear of the brick structure, were used to house some of the departments of the institutions until April 4, 1926, when a disastrous fire wrecked all of the original frame buildings.

The hospital, however, long had been crowded and it was decided to replace the buildings destroyed by fire with new fireproof wings which cost approximately $210,000 and an additional $40,000 to furnish and equip. The new wings are four stories in height and will add 45 private rooms for patients, in addition to living quarters for the Sisters and employees, a chapel, laundry, heating plant, isolation ward, X-ray department and other facilities. New sun parlors will add to the comfort of convalescent patients.

Space formerly occupied by the X-ray department has been converted into an infants' room and a children's ward will be added.

St. Francis hospital in 1926 admitted 1,395 patients. There were 163 births during the year and 59 deaths. More than 2,000 laboratory tests were made, 1057 plates developed in the X-ray room in addition to 68 cases treated by the X-ray and 34 fluroscopic cases handled. In the surgical department, more than 900 operations were performed.

There are at present 24 Sisters employed as dieticians, office clerks, laboratory technicians, surgical and drug supervisors and special nurses. One of the Sisters has a record of having witnessed more than 15,000 surgical operations, assisting the operating surgeon in most of them.

The hospital is the city uttilities largest consumer of water, light and gas.

JNG MEN COLLECT SEMINARY PLEDGES

15 Are Now Engaged at Suggestion of Bishop Gallagher

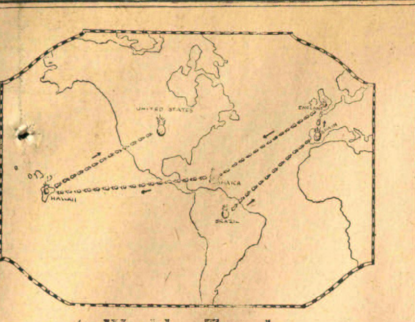
Fifteen Detroit young men, most of them seniors in major seminaries in various parts of the United States, are at work in the diocese on a campaign for the completion of collection of pledges made to the Sacred Heart Seminary Fund. The seminarians are working at the suggestion of the Rt. Rev. Michael J. Gallagher, D. D., Bishop of Detroit, whose plan it is that every donor to the fund, whose pledge has not been paid in full shall be called upon.

In 1920 Bishop Gallagher asked the Catholic people of his diocese for a fund to erect, equip and endow Sacred Heart Seminary. Priests and laymen, in one of the most thorough and comprehensive campaigns ever undertaken here, covered the diocese and in a "drive" lasting two weeks, obtained pledges of $4,000,000 for the building and $5,000,000 for endowment. The generous response caused Bishop Gallagher and his advisers greatly to enlarge plans for the institution and today 450 boys are cared for in what is said to be one of the largest and finest diocesan seminaries in the world.

The endowment feature of the plan is the reason for the present campaign for the completion of pledge collections. While a large percentage has been paid in full, the amount outstanding represents a considerable portion of the endowment fund necessary for the perpetual care and operation of the institution.

The young seminarians undertaking the work of collection are Detroit boys who have returned to their homes for vacation. Several of them are students in the major seminaries in Cincinnati and Baltimore.

Grand Rapids—Mother Mary of St. Rosalie, founder of the Grand Rapids House of the Good Shepherd, and its mother superior for nine years, left recently for the Marybrook home of the order, near Toledo, Ohio. While in Grand Rapids, Mother Rosalie made extensive improvements at the home along social, physical and educational lines. She planned and promoted the group of buildings which forms one of the city's most serviceable centers. The senior unit, which she built five years ago, now houses 165 girls.



A Wealthy Traveler

CENTURIES ago, when white men first went to the Amazon, they were presented with pineapples by the Indians, as choice gifts. The strangers took suckers from which pineapples are grown with them in their ships to Spain. It was grown there, and later in England. The pineapple that is now grown in Hawaii, known as the Smooth Cayenne variety, was brought there from Jamaica by Captain John Kidwell in 1893. It now comes back from the Hawaiian Islands to the United States at the rate of 200,000,000 cans a year.

Thus the pineapple is a globe trotter that has grown in many lands. It is wealthy too, rich in food values as well as taste. Ripe pineapple contains about twelve per cent of sugar, equal to cane sugar, and is a wholesome food. It stands well in calories, and is also rich in vitamins A and B, and especially rich in vitamin C. Professor Cary D. Miller, of the University of Hawaii, who has conducted experiments to ascertain its vitamin content, says:

"As an all-around source of vitamins, the pineapple takes an unusually high rank. Canned pineapple is an article of diet of substantial food value, and is not to be regarded as a luxury of pleasing flavor."

A Dessert and an Entree

The pleasing flavor is there, however, in whatever way you serve pineapple. Here are a few suggestions for its use.

Pineapple - Butterscotch Parfait: This is a rather rich but delightful dessert for a company occasion. Boil one-half cup white sugar, one-half cup brown sugar, two tablespoons butter with one-half cup water until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Beat two egg whites; pour syrup over them, beating until cool. Chill, and fold in one-half pint whipped cream with one and one-half cups drained crushed Hawaiian pineapple and one teaspoon vanilla. Soak one and one-half teaspoons gelatine in one-quarter cup cold water, then melt over hot water and add to mixture. Beat thoroughly and put in icebox for two hours. Serve in parfait glasses topped with maraschino cherries.

Pineapple Stuffing for Egg-Plant: Cut an egg plant in two lengthwise. Scoop out most of the pulp, cut in small pieces, and boil in salted water until tender. Drain well and mix with one cup breadcrumbs, three-fourths cup crushed Hawaiian pineapple, two tablespoons butter, one-half teaspoon grated nutmeg, a beaten egg, and enough rich milk to make a good stuffing consistency. Stir all together and season with salt and pepper and stuff egg plant shells. Cover the top with buttered crumbs. Place in a deep pan, with enough hot water to reach half-way up the sides of the egg plant. Bake slowly for one hour.

1

Matches — Be sure your match is out. Break it in two before you throw it away.

2

Tobacco—Be sure that pipe ashes and cigar or cigarette stubs are dead before throwing them away. Never throw them into brush, leaves or needles.

3

Making Camp—Before building a fire scrape away all inflammable material from a spot 5 feet in diameter. Dig a hole in the center and in it build your camp fire. Keep your fire small. Never build it against trees or logs or near brush.

4

Breaking Camp — Never break camp until your fire is out—dead out.

5

Brush Burning—Never burn slash or brush in windy weather or while there is the slightest danger that the fire will get away.

No one would knowingly cause forest fires. Yet 725,928 acres of timber land were burned last year, in Michigan alone. Thoughtlessness caused practically all of it.

Every resident of Michigan and every visitor to Michigan enjoys and profits by Michigan's resources. And everybody loses when timber, one of the greatest of these resources, is destroyed.

Three great losses come from timber fires: (1) The timber loss itself, (2) the cost of fire suppression, (3) the loss of beauty,—wooded lands are despoiled of their attractiveness, and this in turn causes partial drying up of lakes and streams.

You can help by making these facts more widely understood. Then care will replace thoughtlessness. Our forests will be used and enjoyed but not destroyed.

Death of General Leonard Wood

With the death of General Wood on Sunday at Boston came to an end the last vestiges of the picturesque Roosevelt regime in America. Gen. Wood was the right hand man of Theodore Roosevelt for many years beginning about 1898 during the Spanish war. When the famous Rough Rider regiment under Colonel Roosevelt went to Cuba General Wood went with them as Chief Surgeon. In the beginning he studied medicine in Boston, but about the time of the Indian campaigns in the west he joined the staff of General Miles where he served with distinction in the war against the Apaches and Sioux in Arizona. Here he learned the rudiments of real stern discipline and hardship which was to be a part of his army life thence forth. He also served in Mexican skirmishes across the border. He was recognized as a cool courageous leader and man of ability. He finally assisted in the capture of the notorious Chief Geronimo, in such brilliant fashion he was promoted to Captain and given a medal of honor by Congress. About this time he met Theodore Roosevelt and a close friendship sprung up between them which only terminated with the death of the illustrious commander of the Rough Riders.

In Cuba Wood took command under Roosevelt at the famous battle of San Juan Hill up which the Westeners charged like wildfire, losing a few dead and wounded it is true but never wavering. Owing to their scattered formation they sustained practically small damage fromthe frightened desultory firing of the Spanish. Here again Leonard Wood showed his metal, and was at once made Brigadier General. After the fall of San tiago Wood was appointed Executive Governor-General and the way he went about the duties of "cleaning up" this mammoth cess pool was a caution. The natives found it mighty hard to kick against the pricks, for General Wood was stern and hard as adament. Streets well-nigh impassable from every kind of filth from dead horses and dogs to human bodies were cleansed, sewers and pavements were cut through the centurv-old slime, and the Cubans here learned their first rather severe lesson about neatness and sanitation. Often they had to be punished for negligence but Wood was equal to the occasion; his hand was like iron. In the prisons and jails he made himself chief magistrate and the malefactors were brought from gloomy moldy cells one by one and summarily dealt with. Many of these poor criminals had been locked in the most remote dungeons for years and nobody knew what they were there for and their names even were lost. Wood dug up the last one of these miserable remnants of Spanish cruelty and either meted out justice instantly or discharged the culprit.

No doubt he found it necessary to shoot a number of the worst criminals but he never hesitated one moment and the victims trembled in his presence In 1902 he quit his command in Cuba and returned to America, having had the satisfaction of seeing Cuba placed on the list of accredited republics of the world through the far-sightedness and beneficance of United States. His life since that time is familiar to the smallest child. His campaign for President on the Republic ticket resulted in defeat but there is no doubt but the mass of lies promulgated by his opponents at the time were mostly responsible for the turn-down. While lies are the steck-in trade of most of the Presidential promoters of these days it seemed the speed limit was exceeded in his case. He was not long out of the arena however for the Philippines needed a capable Governor and he was appointed to that high office which he held up to his death. Probably one his greatest disappointments was his failure to take part in the World War in France, although he successfully passed the examination at the age of 58 years. For some strange reason he was ordered to remain at home although his valuable advice was much esteemed by President Wilson. This passes one of the most notable characters of Rooseveltia, into history.

Michigan solons have removed the restriction on driving with automobiles on state highways, and instead of 35 miles an hour as formerly, the law will allow a speed anywhere above that if not excessive according to the judgment of the driver and this will take effect August 15th, 1927, and the automobile drivers will use their own judgment as to the right speed wherever they may be driving, but however speed cops will be watching closely on all the state roads and principal highways to see that no reckless or drunken driving takes place.

Watch a good woodsman light his pipe. He shakes the match out feels it with his finger, and nine times out of ten will break it in two and then look for a safe place to throw it. A match can not be broken with ease and safety unless it is thoroughly out, and a match that is thoroughly out can not start a fire. The carelessly flipped match is responsible for a considerable percentage of the disasterous fires both in city and forest. When you have finished lighting your cigar, or cigarette break the match in two pieces, cautions the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Word came herethe first of last week that a woman had been murdered on M-14 in Jackson county, and that a thug had been shot and seriously wounded and was headed this way, but he failed to materialize. The Sheriff's department got busy and posted watchers but nothing developed.

The outstanding success of the "vigilantes" in curbing bank robbery in the State of Michigan, even though the movement was started only recently, demonstrates clearly the power of organized citizenship. When the citizens indicate that they are in earnest against crime or vice, the criminals and the vicious persons generally seek shelter. Not a bank holdup has been attempted in Jackson county since the enlistment of "vigilantes" to protect the banking institutions; and the remainder of the state has been equally fortunate. The knowledge that the little bank in the most obscure community is guarded by its squad of armed citizens, ready to shoot at a minute's notice is sufficient to dissipate the shallow boldness of the ordinary criminal. —Jackson Citizen Patroit.

Here It Is Dinner-Time Again!

By CAROLINE B. KING
Culinary Expert and Lecturer on Domestic Science

WHAT shall we have for dinner when everyone is tired of the same old things? Tired of steaks and chops and tired of vegetables baked and boiled and stewed in the same old way. Well, why not eliminate meat for a change and substitute a main dish of some kind—not one of the ordinary affairs, however, but one that combines some tasty, wholesome, substantial vegetable and nutritious Swiss cheese, straight from Switzerland—piquant and aromatic in flavor and cheaper as well as more nutritious than meat? Such combinations as these, for instance, which amply supply all vitamine needs and are both delicious and digestible.

Cheese Stuffed Peppers:

Select six green peppers or pimientoes of regular size. Clip the tops from them and remove all seeds and fibres. Place in boiling water to which a pinch of soda has been added. For the filling melt 1½ tablespoons butter, add 2 tablespoons of flour, stir to a paste, then add ½ cupful milk and cook to a thick sauce. Fold in ½ cupful of Switzerland cheese cut in small pieces, one well beaten egg and one cupful of soft bread crumbs. Season with salt and paprika, drain the peppers and fill. Top with dry bread crumbs and a wafer thin slice of genuine Swiss cheese. Place in a dripping pan, pour one-half cupful of water or tomato juice about the peppers and bake one-half hour. Serve at once.

Egg Plants a la Suisse:

Cut a medium sized egg plant in halves and boil till tender. Peel and cut in dice, removing seeds. Make a tomato sauce, as follows: Melt 1½ tablespoonfuls butter and add 2 tablespoonfuls of flour, cook to a paste, then add 1½ cupfuls strained tomato pulp, season to taste and simmer to a thick sauce. Arrange the diced egg plant in layers in a baking dish covering each layer with very thin slices of Switzerland cheese. When the dish is full, pour in the tomato sauce, sprinkle the top of the dish with bread crumbs, dot with bits of butter and bake one-half hour.

Stuffed Potatoes With Cheese:

Select large potatoes and halve lengthwise. Rub all over with fat and bake. Remove the pulp from the skins and mash it well, season with salt, pepper, butter and add a little milk. Return to the potato shells and place a thin slice of real Swiss cheese on each. Sprinkle with paprika and place in the oven until the cheese melts and browns slightly. Garnish with chopped chives.

Corn and Cheese Pudding Creole Style:

Cut enough corn from the cob to make two cupfuls, or use one can of corn. Add 2 tablespoonfuls sugar, 2 tablespoonfuls flour, 2 tablespoonfuls melted butter, 2 eggs well beaten, 1 teaspoonful salt, ¼ teaspoonful each paprika and pepper and one canned pimiento cut in small pieces. Mix all well and place in greased baking dish. Cover with thin layers of Switzerland cheese and bake one-half hour in a moderate oven.

CHERRY TREES ARE INFECTED

Cherry orchards in Western Michigan, from Benton Harbor to Charlevoix are rapidly being defoliated by one of the worst infections of shot hole fungus in the history of Michigan horticulture. This condition was forecast four weeks ago by H. D. Hootman of East Lansing, secretary of the Michigan State Hortculure Socety who discovered the infection present in the orchards as he made a survey of the fruit belt.

Only a few warm dys were needed, Hootman said at that time, to show the extent nd seriousness of the infection. The weather man supplied the necessary heat shortly before the Fourth of July, and now many trees are leafless just as the pomologist predicted.

Half ripened fruit now clings to the leafless branches. It will be a total loss as it will not mature and the cherries will be tasteless.

As the eaves began to turn yellow and drop the fungus incubated under a burning sun, growers began spraying in vain to save the foliage. All three defoliated prematurely this year will bear ittle or no fruit next year, and pomologists fear many of these trees many winter kill should very low temperatures prevail next December, January or February. In their present weakened condition they could easily fall prey to unfavorable weather conditions.

Sprayed and unsprayed orchards are infested with the fungus this season. This is probably due to unfavorable weather conditions at spray time last spring. Spores of the leaf spot fungus thrive in cool wet springs and conditions were ideal early in the season for the development of the diease. Unsprayed orchards are reported to be infected more than sprayed.

J. L. Karker of Buelah, reported that growers in the Grand Traverse Region were spraying once a week and after each shower in an effort to save the foliage. He estimated the sour cherry crop in the region would not exceed ten per cent and if the leaf spot inury is not checked the crop may not be two per cent normal. Last year the Grand Traverse Region harvested one million dollar crop of nherries.

OFFICERS ARE NAMED FOR SUNIELD PICNIC

A committee is now working diligently to complete plans and sign up entertainers for Sunfield's big day, August twenty five when the farmer's picnic and the Eaton County pioneer society unite one of Sunfield's big celebrtions. The following oficers have been elected and the success of the day must be credited to their untiring efforts; President, Archie Strichcomb; Secretary, D. W. Knapp; treasurer L. Washsink.

FIRM INSURES VALUES OF LAND

It is the purpose of the orgnizers of the MICHIGAN LAND VALUE INSURANCE COMPANY, primarily, to protect purchasers of real estate against dealers who over value their holdings and unload same up on the public at prices far beyond present day value, which should be established by careful scientific analysis of all factors contributing to the establishing of correct values such for instance as location, transportation facilites, nearness to schools churches, educational and social advantages, proximity to satisfactory employment, healthful surroundings and conditions, freedom from undesirable factors, etc. It all too frequently happens that real estate operators purchase a tract of land subdivide into building lots and by means of high pressure salesmanship mislead the public by their statements and wild promises as to future growth of values, and wonderful possibilities of immense profits to be realized, sell such lots to people unskilled in determining of land values, and thus the savings of many persons who can ill afford to lose are tied up for many years, according to L. M. Rishel, executive vice president of the company.

It is to stand between over zealous real state operators and these unskilled land purchasers that this corporation is being formed. Land values will be determined by this company by a most critical and careful examination and appraisal of the property by thoroughly experienced and wholly disinterested men not engaged in the real estate business, who take into consideration all the elements necessary and requisite to establish correct and conservative land values; when such values are established they wil lbe referred to the actuary department, which will figure the risk involved and determine the proper premium to be charged to protect the value established. These matters thus being determined the company will then issue its policy upon the land in question for the value fixed, which policy is a guarantee that the land will not depreciate below this esatblished value within the policy period, or protect that value to the purchaser in this way protecting the purchaser's investment therein and thereby establishing stable conservative values, unbiased by optimistic selling representations and by the hope for large personal gain.

The economist makes some interesting observations, also on general farm price levels.

PEWAMO PIONEERS TO MEET IN AUGUST

Preparations are under way for the annual picnic of Pewamo pioneers, an affair which has been held for several years and which has drawn increasing crowds on each occasion. The date this year, will be the same as in years past. Sunday, August twenty eight and for the first time will be held at Pewamo.

Hi Ditez, now in the publishing business at Battle Creek, agrees to furnish some interesting data of that village from Eighteen sixty to Eighteen eighty, the days when he was a boy in that part of Ionia county.

The idea of a Pewamo pioneers picnic originated a few years ago among a number of former residents of the village who agreed to meet place each year at some convenient place and spend a day in recalling the old days and old scenes All that time the membership consisted entirely of those who had at one time lived in Pewamo, but who had drifted away during the course of years. For three or four times it was held at the Agricultural college at Lansing, last year's event taking plce at Mc Curdy park, near Corunna.

Each year has seen new faces added to the gathering until now nearly a hundred of the old settlers and their descendents annually make up the throng.

WINS FAME AS CANE CARVER

When inspiration comes to some, they write poems, others paint pictures, musicians compose songs, but A. J. Pennock of Detroit, expresses himself differently— he carves a cane.

Time doesn't figure in the completion of Pennock's idea. To carve his thoughts in wood may require twelve months, or as in one instance, four years. But, in the end his production is a perfect work of art. If it has a flaw the cane is destroyed.

On Nov. 11 1918 millions were electrified with the news that the World War had ended. Poets dug up their pens; artists and sculptors hied to their studios, all intent upon memorializing the world's greatest event. The day found the Detroit carver in Washington Park N. J. Looking back over the great struggle, he thought of the dog heroes who helped win the war, of the brave Scotch Collie that saved a whole regiment, and he planned to perpetuate their memories in a cane. He cut a young white holly tree and that night started on a work that continued for one thousand hours.

The Pennock Dog Cane is known in the wood carving circles, everywhere and its owner might name his own price, but the work is not for sale. Place of honor is given the brave collie. Sent with a message to the general in command by the colonel of the trapped regiment the dog rushed through a hailstorm of machine gun bullets. Once he fell, struck by a bullet. But, up again, he rushed on untill he reached the American lines, where another bullet shatterdel his backbone, robbing him of the use of his legs. Yet he crawled onward, over the ridge and into the friendly line. At the foot of the general he dropped dead, but his message was safe and the regiment rescued.

I don't know of anything that has impressed me as much as the deed of that brave dag," declared the artist.' What fortitude". Where can human beings match such bravery.

'Naturally the dog deserves the place of honor in the work of mine by which I have attempted to help keep alive his memory."

Honored, too, by the artist, is the memory of the St. Bernard dog, "Barry". Forty lives were saved by the great shaggy dog; the forty-first rescue proved fatal for himself.

EATON WOODS BEAUTY SPOT

Beauty county contains two forest preserves which rank high, not only in local interest and pride but are scarcely to be excelled in the state. One is Bennett park in Charlotte, consisting of one hundred and twelve acres, a primitive beauty spot with its nativity but slightly changed by the hand of man to meet the requirements of park conditions.

The other preserve probably consists of the largest single tract of hardwood timber in Michigan located in Vermontville township. This tract contains three hundred acres standing as a virgin forest, never a single tree having been cut or its natural beauty diminished in any way. Having been a staunch nd true sportsman for years, E. D. Barber, the owner takes pride in maintaining this wooded area solely as a preserve for the protection of wild game and timber.

The trees in this tract are growing to large heights and proportions, and in variety are composed principally of beech, maple, cherry black and white ash; rock, red and gray elm, baswood, oak and partically every other trend that thrives in this state. Many of the larger trees range in diameter from two and a half to four and a half feet, and rise in height from sixty five to eighty feet before the lowest timbers are reached.

This is a favorite rendezvous for all small wild game. Barber allows no hunting, believing that wild game will soon be extinct unless such precautions are taken. The woods are stocked with golden pheasants by the state, quail, partridge, woodcock and many other birds increase in number yearly in this protected area.

The small animals such as red and fox squirrels, rabbits and coon are very plentiful and occasionally a badger or fox is caught.

A spring brook with its source in the woods winds its way through on the north side and joins a largeer stream which runs almost directly through the center of the property. The brook is an ideal hiding place for trout, the other stream a favorite home for ducks mink and muskrats.

During the spring and autumn months this three hundred acre virgin forest is one of the rare beuty spots of nature, clothed in undefiled garb and especially in the springtime assuming the appearance of a veritable paradice with its wild flowers and dense foliage all n its natural state.

SUNFIELD PROTECTED BY NEW FIRE TRUCK

Sunfield is coming to the front in a civil way, the latest acquisition being a new fire truck purchased of the Boyer Fire Apparatus Co.

A map will be made showing the location of every farmer who has signed up for the truck and this will enable every fireman to study and learn the exact location in case of a fire.

SNAPPY SUSPENDERS AND 'SNAPPY' PANTS!

DON'T blush—men. Don't blush. But— ye gods and little fishes —look what the tailors are trying to foist on us now in place of our regular heman trousers.

The photo tells the sad news. It pictures William Peterson of Chicago wearing the new so-called "rage"—Barnderine Trousers held up by Price of Wales Suspenders. Yep, they are enough to make any sane man "rage" — and wonder what this world is coming to.

What next.

CATTLE PRICES PEAK IN 1931

The highest prices in several years for both beef cattle and dairy cattle and similarly for milk and beef, may be expected about Nineteen thirty one if predictions of Dr G. F. Warren, Cornell University price expert are accurate.

Dr. Warren bases his forecast on previous experiences which indicate, what the future holds. Following nineteen thirty one, however, he predicts that these prices will drop abruptedly and decidedly.

"The market for heifers will doubtless be good until about that time," says Dr. Warren, "and increasing numbers of them probably will be raised in the next few years

The best time to raise calves for the future is probably already past Farmers who plan to raise cattle to sell later at a profit should start now. Far too many calves will be raised later,

The cycles of changes in price from high to low and back again in the beef and dairy cattle industries have certain fairly definite characteristics. One of these is the long period of low prices which is followed by a short period of high prices. The period between high and low prices is about eight years."

Dr. Warren points out that the period of waiting for better prices islong and tedious, but that when they come they stay only a relative ly short time. Those farmers will lose, he said, who start too late to produce cattle to sell.

"Although prices of most farm products declined strikingly in the last year, the lowest point apparently is past, at least for the present, he says.

'During the last year the index of prices paid to farmers for food products dropped from one hundred sixty one to one hundred forty-two, while the index for all farm products dropped even more. Some of the facts which indicate that the low point in farm prices is past are the shortage of cattle and the increases in grain prices. The shortage of cattle is beginning to have an influence on the price of beef, butter and milk, while unfavorable weather is responsible for a rise of twenty cents in the price of corn o nthe Chicago market during May. During the same time wheat rose twenty cents.

"Athough the level of prices of the major food products except hogs and poultry has improved materially, they are far behind the level of retail prices of things farmers buy. Eggs are very cheap, and the price of hogs which has fallen rapidly, will probably fall further.

AUTUMN TINTS IN CLOTHES VOGUE

The rich autumn tints with which Dame Nature touches up the woodlands during October and November will lead in the colors to be worn during the fall season. Silvered green, mellowed reds, brilliant yellows and golds, soft tans and rich purples and browns will be reproduced in their natural color harmonies as nearly as fabric can be made to imitate nature's color blending.

One set of colors chosen for the fall frock and coat wil be designated as 'burnished copper" and will include lovely reddish-brownish-gold tones while dark mahogany shades wil cover another set designed for more practical wear.

In the search for novelty for colors for evening wear even the precious stones and semi precious stones have been called upon to lend their delicate tints and shafts of light to the creation of new color tones, and the results will be known as the "Opera Tints" and will include pale blues and pinks yellows, greens and lavenders. A pale tea rose will be known as Ibis pink, a yellowish green shade similar to that so popular last winter is called "Liqueur green" and the much favored orchid rose will be included in a tone to be called, "Opera Mauve.' '

For sports wear every tone and blending of color in the autumn leaf will be reproduced, the new colors to be laurel oak, a deep brown: copperleaf a burnt sienna tint; Autumn glory, a reddish orange. Amberglow, an old gold; Flaming Maple a vivid scarlet. The popular beiges will be included with a new straw shade and the silver grays, popularly known as the Gull and Crane, will enter the list for another season.

The new copper shades will be called 'Cherokee" and "Chinook", and a special copper tint that promises to be popular in the Tarrabona Among the blues are deep turquoise shades, which have been named Venezia called Directoire and Napoleon. The Vineyard Oporto and Port Wine are claret shades among the white tones of last year.

In all there will be eighty shades from which choice can be made, all chosen and arranged so that any ensemble ide desired my be carried out in perfect harmony.

Perhaps the interest in aviation is responsible for the way the newer tailored suits are fastened Many of the jackets are buckled at the left side much like an aviator's leather coat. Even skirts are treated the sme way. The wrap around skirt models also are fastened with one or two straps and buckles also at the left side.

Mille Chanel, one of the greatest designers in Paris is wearing low heeled shoes.

Which means that the entire shoe mode will undoubtedely be influenced.

Not only Chanel, but the good sense and taste of the majority of smart women will eventually bring this low heeled mode about. The tremendously high heels that have been creping up on us, almost inch by inch are clearly impossible. If women do like them, feet naturally protest.

For sports and even street wear several kinds of modified ofordxs are now smart. The so-called Deauville sandal is still very good in America, but not worn much in Europe. The smart European woman prefers sport shoes of buck skin and calf combinations of reptile skins and of kid or calf and reptile.

For street and afternon wear biege kid, and biege kid and lizard are extremely good.

The all patent leather shoe is not worn much except the opera pump which has become a classic here and abroad.

Combination of beige kid and black patent leather are very smart

CITIES HIT BACK AT SUBDIVIDERS

Western Michigan cities are placing a ban on the furnishing of water, sewage, fire and other services to districts outside of the corporate limits.

The action is being taken to hit back at the subdividers who coax people from the cities with the statement that they can obtain the conveniences of the municipalities and at the same time avoid high taxes.

During the last two or three years the cities have started to feel the effects in their assessment rolls of the movement of people to districts outside the limits.

The Muskegon city commission recently adopted a policy of refusing water and sewage service to all subdivisions outside the limit. Holland, Grand Rapids and other cities have refused to furnish fire protection outside of the limits unless a contract is signed providing for payment. For years it was customary for the fire departments to respond to alarms outside of the cities and to make no charge. The average cost of a fire alarm is more than one hundred dollars according to the cities.

It is the contention of the cities that persons residing outside should share the expense of the general taxes if they want the service.

Recenty the writer visited the thriving little town of Sunfield, with its well appointed stores and various business paces and noted the autos, especaly, lined up along the main streets.

We knew there must be a reason for this general activity and were not long in discovering it. Inquiry among several on the streets brought forth a general reply. We have a live town because the people in it are alive. That is the whole penut in the shell. A town is just as live as its citizens.

We asked one merchant and he he said, Go see the Editor and we did. We found a live wire, a man devoted to the best interests of the town and who did his share of the boosting..

Co-operation between tre citizens and the local editor with a liberal amount of advertising in the home paper that spreads the activities of the town throughout the state will make any town grow.

Let's All Pull Together For a Greater Michigan and Greater Nation

A SALE

By Guy DeManpassant

The defendants, Cesaire-Isidore Brument and Prosper-Napoleon Cornu, appeared before the Court of Assizes of the Seine-Inferieure, on a charge of attempted murder by drowning, of Mme Burment, lawful wife of the first of the afore named.

The two prisoners sat side by side on the traditional bench. They were two peasants; the first was small and stout, with short arms, short legs, and a round head with a red pimply face, planted directly on his trunk, which was also round and short, and with apparently no neck. He was a raiser of pigs and lived at Cacheville-la-Goupil, in the district of Criquetot..

Cornu (Prosper-Napoleon) was thin, of medium height with enormously long arms. His head was on crooked, his jaw awry, and he squinted. A blue blouse as long as a shirt, hung to his knees, ad his yellow hair, which was scanty and plastered down on his head, gave his face a worn out dirty look a dilapidated look that was frightful. He had been nicknamed 'the cure" because he could imitate to perfection the chanting in church and even the sound of the serpent. This talent attracted to his cafe—for he was a saloon keeper at Criquetot—a great many customers who preferred the "mas at Cornu" to the mass in church.

Mme Brument, seated on the witness bench, was a thin peasant woman who seemed to be always asleep. She sat there motionless, her hands crossed on her knees, gazing fixedly before her with a stupid expression.

The Judge continued interrogation.

"Well then, Mme Brument, they came into your house and threw you into a barrel full of water. Tell us the details. Stand up."

She arose. She looked as tall as a flag pole with her cap which looked like a white skull cap. She said in a drawling tone.

"I was shelling beans. Just then they came in. I said to myself, 'What is the matter with them. They do not seem natural they seem up to some mischief.' They watched me sideways like this especially Cornu because he squints. I do not like to see them together, for they are two good for nothings when they are in company. I said, 'What do you want with me." They did not answer. I had o sort of mistrust——'

The defendant Brument interrupted the witness hastily, saying, "I was full".

Then Cornu, turning towards his accomplice, said in the deep tones of an organ,

"Say that we were both full, and you will be telling no lie."

The judge, severely

"You mean by that, that you were both drunk"

Brument, "There can be no question about it."

Cornu; "That might happen to anyone."

The judge to the victim; "Continue your testimony, woman Brument."

"Well, Brument said to me 'Do you wish to earn a hundred sous." 'Yes,' I replied, seeing that hundred sous are not picked up in a horse's tracks. Then he said; 'Open your eyes and do as I do', and he went to fetch the large empty barrel which is under the rain pipe in the corner, and he turned it over and brought it into my kitchen and stuck it down in the middle of the floor, and then he said to me; 'Go and fetch water until it is full.'

"So I went to the pond with two pails and carried water and still more water for an hour seeing that the barrel was as large as a vat, saving your presecence, m'sieu le-president.

"All this time Brument and Cornu were drinking a glass, and then another glass, and then another. They were finishing their drinks when I said to them; 'You are full, fuller than this barrel,.' And Brument answered me; 'Do not worry go on with your work, your turn will come each one has his share.' I paid no attention to what he said as he was full.

"When the barrel was full to the brim, I said, "There's that's done.'

"And then Cornu gave me a hundred sous, not Brument, Cornu; it was Cornu gave them to me. And Brument said; 'Do you wish to earn a hundred sous more. 'Yes' I said, for I am not accustomed to presents like that. Then he said; "Take off your clothes.'

"Take off my clothes."

'Yes,' he said.

"How many shall I take off."

"If it worries you at all, keep on your chemise, that won't bother us.

"A hundred sous is a hundred sous, and I have to undress myself; but I did not fancy undressing before those two good for nothings. I took off my cap, and then my jacket and then my skirt, and then my sabots. Brument said. 'Keep on your stockings also we are good fellows.'

"So there I was, almost like mother Eve. And they got up from their chairs, but could not stand straight, they were so full, saving your presence m'sieu le president.

"I said to myself; 'What are they up to."

'And Brument said, 'Are you ready.'

'And Cornu said, 'I'm ready.".

"And then they took me, Brument by the feet and Cornu by the head, as one might take, for instance, a sheet that has ben washed Then I began to bawl.

'And Brument said, 'Keep still, wretched creature.

'And they lifted me up in the air and put me into the barrel, which which was full of water,, so that I had a check of the circulation, a chill to my very insides.

"And Brument said, "Is that all.'

'Cornu said, 'That is all."

'Brument said, The head is not in that will make a difference in the measure.'

"Cornu said, "Put in her head.'

'And then Brument pushed down my head as if to drown me so that the water ran into my nose, so that I could already see Paradise. And he pushed it down, and I disappeared.

"And then he must have been frightened. He pulled me out, said 'Go and get dry, Carcass.'

'As for me I took to my heels and ran as far as M. le cure's. He lent me a skirt belonging to his servant for I was almost in a state of nature, and he went to fetch aitre Chicot, the country watchman who went to Criquetot to fetch the police who came to my house with me.

Then we found Brument and Cornu fighting each other like two rams.

Brument was bawling. "It isn't true, I tell you that there is at least a cubic metre in it. It is the method that was no good.'

"Cornu bawled; "Four pails, that is almost half a cubic metre. You need not reply, that's what it is.'

"The police captain put them both under arrest. I have no more to tell."

She sat down. The audience in the court room laughed. The juror looked at one another in astonishment. The Judge said.

"Defendant Cornu, you seem to have been the instigator of this infamous plot. What have you to say

And Corn rose in his turn.

"Judge", he replied, "I was full."

The Judge answered gravely.

"I know it. Proceed."

"I will. Well, Brument came to my place about nine o'clock, and ordered two drinks, and said, There's one for you, Cornu.' I sat down opposite him and drank, and out of politeness, I offered him a glass. Then he returned the compliment and so did I, and so it went from glass to glass until noon, when we were full.

"Then Brument began to cry. That touched me. I asked him what was the matter. He said, "I must have a thousand francs by Thursday.' That cooled me off a little, you understand. Then he said to me all at once, "I will sell you my wife.'

"I was full and I was a widower. You understand, that stirred me up I did not know his wife, but she was a woman. wasn't she. I asked him. How much would you sell her for.'

"He reflected, or pretended to reflect. When one is full one is not very clear headed, and he replied; "I will sell her by the cubic metre.'

"That did not surprise me, for I was as drunk as he was, and I knew what a cubic metre is in my business. It is a thousand litres, that suited me.

"But the price remained to be settled. All depends on the quality. I said, "How much do you want a cubic metre.

'He answered, "Two thousand francs.

"I gave a bound like a rabbit, and then I reflected that a woman ought not to measure more than three thousand litres. So I said, "That's too dear.'

"He answered, 'I cannot do it for less. I should lose by it.'

'You understand, one is not a dealer in hogs for nothing. One understands one's business. But, if he is smart, the sellor bacon, I am smarter, seeing that I sell them also. Ha, Ha, Ha., So I said to him 'If she were new I would not say anything, but she has been married to you for some time, so she is not as fresh as she was. I will give you at fresh as she was. I will give you fifteen hundred francs a cubic metre not a sou more. Will that suit you."

"He answered; "That will do. That's a bargain."

"I agreed, and we started out, arm in arm. We must help each other in the world.

"But a fear came to me" How can you measure her unless you put her into the liquid."

'Then he explained his idea, not without difficulty for he was full. He said to me, "I take a barrel, and fill it with water to the brim. I put her in it. All the water that comes out we measure that is the way to fix it.'

"I said, 'I see, I understand. But this water that overflows will run away; how are you going to gather it up.

'Then he began stuffing me and explaining to me that all we should have to do would be to refill the barrel with the water his wife had displaced as soon as she should have left. All the water we should pour in would be the measure. I supposed about ten pails; that would be a cubic metre. He isn't a fool all the same, when he is drunk that old horse.

"To be brief, we reached his house and I took a look at its mistress. A beautiful woman she certainly was not. Anyone can see her for there she is. I said to myself; 'I am disappointed, but never mind, she will be of value; handsome or ugly, it is all the same is it not monsieur le president." And then I saw that she was as thin as a rail I said to myself; 'She will not measure four hundred litres. 'I understand the matter, it being in liquids.

"She told you about the proceeding. I even let her keep on her chemise and stockings, to my own advantage.

"When that was done she ran away. I said; 'Look Brument, she is escaping.'

"He replied; 'Do not be afraid. I will catch her all right. She will have to come back to sleep. I will measure the deficit.'

'We measured. Not four pailsful. Ha, Ha, Ha."

The witness began to laugh so persistently that a gendarme was obliged to punch him in the back. Having quieted down, he resumed;

"In short, Brument, exclaimed; Nothing, that is not enough.' I bawled and bawled and bawled again, he punched me, I hit back. That would have kept on till the Day of Judgement, seeing we were both drunk.

"Then came the gendarmes. They swore at us, they took us off to prison. I want damages."

He sat down.

Brument confirmed in every particular the statement of his accomplice. The jury, in consternation, retired to deliberate.

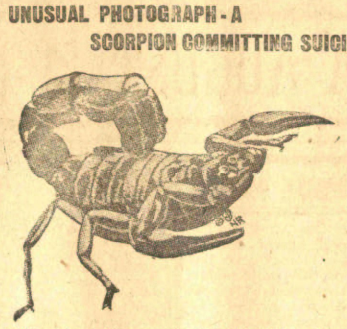
At the end of an hour, they returned a verdict of accquittal for the defendants with some severe strictures on the dignity of marriage, and establishing the precise limitations of business transactions.

Brument went home to the domestic roof accompanied by his wife.

Cornu went back to his business.

The End.

AN UNUSUAL PHOTOGRAPH - A SCORPION COMMITTING SUICIDE!



NEW YORK sends us this most unusual photograph depicting a scorpion i nthe act of committing suicide.

Scorpions, it migh be explained, abound in warm and dry countries throughout the world. They resemble a small lobster, except that they carry a formidable sting at the end of their lobes. The venom of six scorpions is said to be more dealy than that of a single adder.

One of their chief traits is a habit of killing themselves by actually inflicting their deadly sting on themselves. The picture above was made just as the scorpion jabbed its back with its own poisonous weapon.

THUGS RETAKE $100 WHEN HE LEARNS VICTIM IS OFFICER

Abraham Lenhoff, a deputy clerk in recorder's court, en route to Mt Clemens stopped at a soft drink stand to quench his thirst. In his pocket was one hundred dollars of which Lehoff was taking to Mt. Clements to pay his bill at a hospital where his wife is ill.

Returning from the stand, Lenhoff found a stranger sitting in his automobile.

'Get in" and drive on, and say nothing," commanded the stranger leveling a gun at the deputy clerk.

Lenhoff obeyed.

Farther down the road, under the thug's orders, he brought his machine to a stop, and was relieved of his money, a valuable gold watch and some papers which he carried in his pockets. The passenger then ordered Lenhoff to turn around and drive him to Detroit.

"That money", ventured Lenhoff some time after they were safely headed toward Detroit, "was what I expected to pay my wife's hospital bill with. I was driving to Mt. Clemens to pay the bill tonight."

"That so',' asked the stranger. "The wife sick."

"Um—mm—m—m,' nodded Lenhoff, despondently.

Words led to more words, until, after a short while a most amazing thing happened. The thug returned Lenhoff's money to him.

The thug began to finger the papers he had taken from the deputy clerk's pockets.

"Say look here', queried the stranger after a moment. 'What is your line anyway".

Lenhoff explained that he was employed in recorder's court.

"Oh you are, eh" sneered the thug. "Well gimme back that money." Lenhoff complied.

STATE IS ASKED TO INSPECT FIELDS OF CERTIFIED POTATOES

More than three hundred farmers of the state have requested inspection of their potato fields this year by inspectors furnished thru the Michigan Crop Improvement association.

The farmers are the growers of Michigan certified seed potatoes. The reputation of this seed stock has been built up by several years of careful work, and Michigan farmers are finding no difficulty in finding ready markets.

Since the inspection and certification service was started in nineteen twenty, the Michiga seed potato crop has improved in both quality and in yield, experiments have proved. The first crop inspected averaged only one hundred thirty eight and five tenths bushels to the acre, while last year's crop produced at the rate of two hundred fifty six bushels to the acre.

CHINESE ENVOY ASKS U. S. HELP

If China is freed from the interference of foregin powers and the Cantonese faction gains control, the present turmoil of civil war will be a unified nation by December according to Dr. Tien Lai-Huang, unofficial ambassador to United States, who visited East Lansing on his "good wil.' tour.

Dr. Tien has addressed thirty nine colleges and universities, pleading for a more comprehensive view of China's problems. He believes the United State can furnish trade by recognizing the Cantonese government politically.

The influence of foreign powers is hindering China greatly, according to Dr. Tien. He characterized the civil strife n his country as "inevitable", but predicted it could not continue long. China, he said is tired of war and longs for a solution of her problems. As soon as the Cantonese or Nationalist party gains complete control, unification will be brought about, he believes.

A NEW AIR LINE TO BE STARTED

Flying operations on the Detroit Grand Rapids air line are suspended until special planes and radio direction equipment can be applied for the line's extension across Lake Michigan to Milwaukee and ultimately a new line, to St. Paul. Meantime a new line, to be inaugurated Sept, first wil be operated between Detroit and Cleveland.

The Grand Rapids line has served as experimental laboratory for testing equipment rates and schedules so that further operations could be based on fact and experience. Revenues did not pay, operating expenses but they did pay more than expected.

Because of the peculiar geographical location of the two cities, the Detroit - Cleveland service will render the greatest saving in time that can be made between any two cities in the United States. It will cut the fastest train time by half. Actual running time, including a thirty minute drive to and from the air ports will be only two and one half hours. New expenditures are to be made to insure the utmost passenger comfort on the planes and a passenger waiting room is to be erected on the Cleveland airport.

TURKEY BUZZARD ASKED FOR CHILDRENS MUSEUM

The Children's Museum of Detroit through W. Bryant Tyrell taxidermist will attempt to get possession of a large turkey buzzard, a rare bird in Michigan, that was caught in a trap by Wellington Dunn, a farmer living near Albion several days ago. Dunn offers the buzzard which was captured alive to anyone who wants it for mounting.

Constant thefts of his chickens caused Dunn to set out a trap with a portion of dead foul. The first night he caught an owl and on the second the buzzard was captured. Both birds are being kept in a coop on the farm.

Tyrell believes that the buzzard would make an excellent subject for the museum.

Recently the museum staff obtained a group of Caspian terns, herring gulls and great blue herone at Sugar Island in the St. Clair Flats. The birds, both adult and young, were taken in the brooding season and one small blue heron is being kept alive in the museum.

Tyrell reported that many ducks were nesting in the vicinity of Sugar Island, particularly red breasted mergansers and bluebills.

SIXTEEN YEAR HUNT ENDS IN UNITING FAMILY

Sitexen years spent in investigation of clues had their reward in Detroit when Mrs. Karl Westphal, of Jacksonville, Fla., saw once again her daughter and son whom she had not seen since the former was six years old and the latter four.

She saw her daughter an attractive young woman, engaged to be married and her son a clear eyed youth almost six feet in height.

Sixteen years ago the mother was granted a divorce and was awarded the custody of her two children. Then their father disappeared with the children.

The mother and Mr. Westphal, a Jacksonville, manufacturer, were married and together took up the search for the children.

The search led to Germany, to Lithuania and through Europe.

Then came a clue that pointed to Detroit. They came to Detroit from Florida. Within four hours the missing children had been located.

SWISS AMAZED AT TREE SPRAY HERE

Farmers in Switzerland have grown apples for centuries but it remained for Ernest Lauber of Fribourg purchasing agent for a Swiss Co-Operative Association to come to Michigan to see his first demonstration of an orchard sprayed with dust.

Swiss orchardists have been required to do little or no spraying until recent years Mr. Lauber reported and they use liquid sprays exclusively. Control of insects and diseases has become so serious a problem is Switzerland, however, that his employer sent him to the United States to spend a year studying cultural methods. After completing observations in Michigan he proposes to spend six months in California, Oregon and Washington.

Lauber was one of five hundred orchardists to witness the world's fastest exhibition of spraying in O. H. Roths apple and pear orchrard near Fennville. Prof. H. A. Cardinell Michigan State College extension pomologist gave a demonstration of night spraying dusting 20, year old pear trees and fifty, six year old Baldwin apple trees 'on the run. The dust was shot at the trees as fast as a team of Missouri mules and a twenty horse power tractor could haul the sprayers. Complete coverage was obtained and Lauber was one of the most amazed among the spectators.

Growing fruit is more of a problem in Switzerland than marketing it Lauber reported. His organization sells its entire output of apples direct to consumers in cities.

Apple trees are planted farther apart in Europe than in America, Lauber said, and all orchards are in sod. The grass is cut for hay or is used as pasture.

o

SILO IS DEATH TO CORN BORER

The silo is an effective and practical device tocontrol the European corn borer, according to Professor H. H. Musselman agricultural engineer at the Michigan State College.

Tests, which have been performed by entomologists, have shown that the ensiling process destroys corn borers. For this reason the silo has become known as the corn borer's tomb.

It is very important in harvesting the crop, Prof. H. H. Musselman says, that the corn be cut within two inches of the ground; other wise the stubbles left is very likely to contain a high percentage of borers. Low cutting attachments for corn binders have been found to be practical in keeping the height of stubble down within 2 inches, which is considered good control practice.

The silage cutter should be set to cut the fodder corn in one half escape this destructive operation inch lengths. The borers which are destroyed by the silage acids.

The silo means corn borer death in the present farm practice and does not involve extra operations, except when it is not possible to cut the crop within two inches of the ground. This problem can be met by plowing under the stubble. As Michigan is a dairy state to a large extent, Prof. Musselman says that farmers should take advantage of the silo as a means of borer control.

LIVES CLOSE TO BIG CITY—YET NEVER SAW A MOVIE OR EVEN LISTENED TO A RADIO!

ALTHOUGH he has seen 70 years of life on his farm close to two big cities, William Kister, above has never seen a movie or heard a radio. And mind you his farm is located on the Lincoln Highway only six minutes from the heart of Newark N. J. and about fifteen minutes from New York City. He says he just doesn't like "them there new fangled notions."

IONIA APPLES SOLD TO CHICAGO COMPANY

Rep. Luther E. Hall's farm in Orleans township is looking prosperous and flourishing to the scores of Ionians and tourists who pass the place daily. In some instances they stop and inspect the immense orchrads and see the coming crop of exceptional northern spies.

Representative Hall believes the crop this year will be much better in quality than last year, but the output will be about the same. The harvest last year was thirty five hundred barrels from the sixty five acres. About sixty per cent are northern spies and the balance of odd varieties.

The crop has been sold this year to a Chicago concern on a tree run basis with the cider apples out, and Mr. Hall says the cider varieties will be very light this year.

The spraying of the trees was completed this week and preparations are being made for the annaual harvest which is always a busy time on the place.

Mr. Hall has about fifteen acres of Alfalfa which he reseeded in the spring and expects to put in twenty five acres of wheat in the fall. He has no stock with only one team of horses on the place. His sons, Louis and Frank atlernate in looking after the farm, with the help of one man employed by Mr. Hall.

Mr. Hall says the corn crop in general as he has observed it in this country and over the state will be very poor. The beans are yet to be made and potatoes will be a good crop if there is rain. The sugar beets look like a healthy crop.

Tiling farm land will not always correct the evils of poor drainage. Open ditches sometimes will prove beneficial on soils when tile may be ineffective. This is true of those soil types which have subsoils consisting of dense, impervious clay which closes around the tile, sealing them as with paraffin or wax.

STATE PARK PLACE AS BIRD SANCTUARY

What is destined to be one of the finest wildfoul sanctuaries east of Mississippi is to be established in Michigan. Seven miles east of Pickford in Chippewa County lies the Munuskong State Park embracing some twenty four hundred acres of land and water.

It was formerly the summer home and hunting camp of John and Horace Dodge and after their deaths was deeded to Michigan.

The site, so far as water attractions for wildfoul are concerned, approaches the ideal. For years it has been famous as a stopping place for ducks, coots, geese, brant and shore birds on both the north and south migratory flights but it has always been open hunting territory, drawing hunters from all parts during the shooting season. Owing to this continual bombardment while the birds are on their way south, Munuskong Bay has never functioned as a sanctuary or a refuge where the birds could stop feed and rest. They were kept upon a continual move, and with in a few days after their arrival they would continue their flight southward.

Several hundreds of acres of the site extends out into the bay proper This will be fenced off, planted to rice, wapato, celery, and other aquatic foods and be forbidden to trespass by hunters or trappers. Under water soil conditions are such as to furnish an excellent seed bed for duck foods.

Very smart straight line coats of flannel in pastel colors are shown for summer wear. Many are stitched, others have small full collars.

Your Prosperity Hinges on the Prosperity of Your Home Town

A SALE

By Guy DeManpassant

The defendants, Cesaire-Isidore [illegible]ent and Prosper-Napoleon Cornu, appeared before the Court of Assizes of the Seine-Inferieure, on a charge of attempted murder by drowning, of Mme Burment, lawful wife of the first of the afore named.

The two prisoners sat side by side on the traditional bench. They were two peasants; the first was small and stout, with short arms, short legs, and a round head with a red pimply face, planted directly on his trunk, which was also round and short, and with apparently no neck. He was a raiser of pigs and lived at Cacheville-la-Goupil, in the district of Criquetot..

Cornu (Prosper-Napoleon) was thin, of medium height with enormously long arms. His head was on crooked, his jaw awry, and he squinted. A blue blouse as long as a shirt, hung to his knees, ad his yellow hair, which was scanty and plastered down on his head, gave his face a worn out dirty look a dilapidated look that was frightful. He had been nicknamed 'the cure" because he could imitate to perfection the chanting in church and even the sound of the serpent. This talent attracted to his cafe—for he was a saloon keeper at Criquetot—a great many customers who preferred the "mas at Cornu" to the mass in church.

Mme Brument, seated on the witness bench, was a thin peasant woman who seemed to be always asleep. She sat there motionless, her hands crossed on her knees, gazing fixedly before her with a stupid expression.

The Judge continued interrogation.

"Well then, Mme Brument, they came into your house and threw you into a barrel full of water. Tell us the details. Stand up."

She arose. She looked as tall as a flag pole with her cap which looked like a white skull cap. She said in a drawling tone.

"I was shelling beans. Just then they came in. I said to myself, 'What is the matter with them. They do not seem natural they seem up to some mischief.' They watched me sideways like this especially Cornu because he squints. I do not like to see them together, for they are two good for nothings when they are in company. I said, 'What do you want with me."' They did not answer. I had o sort of mistrust——'

The defendant Brument interrupted the witness hastily, saying, "I was full".

Then Cornu, turning towards his accomplice, said in the deep tones of an organ,

"Say that we were both full, and you will be telling no lie."

The judge, severely

"You mean by that, that you were both drunk"

Brument, "There can be no question about it."

Cornu; "That might happen to anyone."

The judge to the victim; "Continue your testimony, woman Brument."

"Well, Brument said to me 'Do you wish to earn a hundred sous." 'Yes,' I replied, seeing that hundred sous are not picked up in a horse's tracks. Then he said; 'Open your eyes and do as I do', and he went to fetch the large empty barrel which is under the rain pipe in the corner, and he turned it over and brought it into my kitchen and stuck it down in the middle of the floor, and then he said to me; 'Go and fetch water until it is full.'

"So I went to the pond with two pails and carried water and still more water for an hour seeing that the barrel was as large as a vat, saving your presecence, m'sieu le-president.

"All this time Brument and Cornu were drinking a glass, and then another glass, and then another. They were finishing their drinks when I said to them; 'You are full, fuller than this barrel,.' And Brument answered me; 'Do not worry go on with your work, your turn will come each one has his share.' I paid no attention to what he said as he was full.

"When the barrel was full to the brim, I said, "There's that's done.'

"And then Cornu gave me a hundred sous, not Brument, Cornu; it was Cornu gave them to me. And Brument said; 'Do you wish to earn a hundred sous more. 'Yes' I said, for I am not accustomed to presents like that. Then he said; "Take off your clothes.'

"Take off my clothes."

'Yes,' he said.

"How many shall I take off."

"If it worries you at all, keep on your chemise, that won't bother us.

"A hundred sous is a hundred sous, and I have to undress myself; but I did not fancy undressing before those two good for nothings. I took off my cap, and then my jacket and then my skirt, and then my sabots. Brument said. 'Keep on your stockings also we are good fellows.'

"So there I was, almost like mother Eve. And they got up from their chairs, but could not stand straight, they were so full, saving your presence m'sieu le president.

"I said to myself; 'What are they up to."

'And Brument said, 'Are you ready.'

'And Cornu said, 'I'm ready."

"And then they took me, Brument by the feet and Cornu by the head, as one might take, for instance, a sheet that has ben washed Then I began to bawl.

'And Brument said, 'Keep still, wretched creature.

'And they lifted me up in the air and put me into the barrel, which which was full of water,, so that I had a check of the circulation, a chill to my very insides.

"And Brument said, "Is that all.'

'Cornu said, 'That is all."

'Brument said, The head is not in that will make a difference in the measure.'

"Cornu said, "Put in her head.'

'And then Brument pushed down my head as if to drown me so that the water ran into my nose, so that I could already see Paradise. And he pushed it down, and I disappeared.

"And then he must have been frightened. He pulled me out, said 'Go and get dry, Carcass.'

'As for me I took to my heels and ran as far as M. le cure's. He lent me a skirt belonging to his servant for I was almost in a state of nature, and he went to fetch aitre Chicot, the country watchman who went to Criquetot to fetch the police who came to my house with me.

Then we found Brument and Cornu fighting each other like two rams.

Brument was bawling. "It isn't true, I tell you that there is at least a cubic metre in it. It is the method that was no good.'

"Cornu bawled; "Four pails, that is almost half a cubic metre. You need not reply, that's what it is."

"The police captain put them both under arrest. I have no more to tell."

She sat down. The audience in the court room laughed. The juror looked at one another in astonishment. The Judge said.

"Defendant Cornu, you seem to have been the instigator of this infamous plot. What have you to say

And Corn rose in his turn.

"Judge", he replied, "I was full."

The Judge answered gravely.

"I know it. Proceed."

"I will. Well, Brument came to my place about nine o'clock, and ordered two drinks, and said, There's one for you, Cornu.' I sat down opposite him and drank, and out of politeness, I offered him a glass. Then he returned the compliment and so did I, and so it went from glass to glass until noon, when we were full.

"Then Brument began to cry. That touched me. I asked him what was the matter. He said, "I must have a thousand francs by Thursday,' That cooled me off a little, you understand. Then he said to me all at once, "I will sell you my wife.'

"I was full and I was a widower. You understand, that stirred me up I did not know his wife, but she was a woman. wasn't she. I asked him. How much would you sell her for.'

"He reflected, or pretended to reflect. When one is full one is not very clear headed, and he replied; "I will sell her by the cubic metre.'

"That did not surprise me. for I was as drunk as he was, and I knew what a cubic metre is in my business. It is a thousand litres, that suited me.

"But the price remained to be settled. All depends on the quality. I said, "How much do you want a cubic metre.

'He answered, "Two thousand francs.

"I gave a bound like a rabbit, and then I reflected that a woman ought not to measure more than three thousand litres. So I said, "That's too dear.'

"He answered, 'I cannot do it for less. I should lose by it.'

'You understand, one is not a dealer in hogs for nothing. One understands one's business. But, if he is smart, the sellor bacon, I am smarter, seeing that I sell them also. Ha, Ha, Ha., So I said to him 'If she were new I would not say anything, but she has been married to you for some time, so she is not as fresh as she was. I will give you at fresh as she was. I will give you fifteen hundred francs a cubic metre not a sou more. Will that suit you."

"He answered; "That will do. That's a bargain."

"I agreed, and we started out, arm in arm. We must help each other in the world.

"But a fear came to me" How can you measure her unless you put her into the liquid."

'Then he explained his idea, not without difficulty for he was full. He said to me, "I take a barrel, and fill it with water to the brim. I put her in it. All the water that comes out we measure that is the way to fix it.'

"I said, 'I see, I understand. But this water that overflows will run away; how are you going to gather it up.

'Then he began stuffing me and explaining to me that all we should have to do would be to refill the barrel with the water his wife had displaced as soon as she should have left. All the water we should pour in would be the measure. I supposed about ten pails; that would be a cubic metre. He isn't a fool all the same, when he is drunk that old horse.

"To be brief, we reached his house and I took a look at its mistress. A beautiful woman she certainly was not. Anyone can see her for there she is. I said to myself; 'I am disappointed, but never mind, she will be of value; handsome or ugly, it is all the same is it not monsieur le president." And then I saw that she was as thin as a rail I said to myself; 'She will not measure four hundred litres. 'I understand the matter, it being in liquids.

"She told you about the proceeding. I even let her keep on her chemise and stockings, to my own advantage.

"When that was done she ran away. I said; 'Look Brument, she is escaping.'

"He replied; 'Do not be afraid. I will catch her all right. She will have to come back to sleep. I will measure the deficit.'

'We measured. Not four pailsful. Ha, Ha, Ha."

The witness began to laugh so persistently that a gendarme was obliged to punch him in the back. Having quieted down, he resumed;

"In short, Brument, exclaimed; Nothing, that is not enough.' I bawled and bawled and bawled again, he punched me, I hit back. That would have kept on till the Day of Judgement, seeing we were both drunk.

"Then came the gendarmes. They swore at us, they took us off to prison. I want damages."

He sat down.

Brument confirmed in every particular the statement of his accomplice. The jury, in consternation, retired to deliberate.

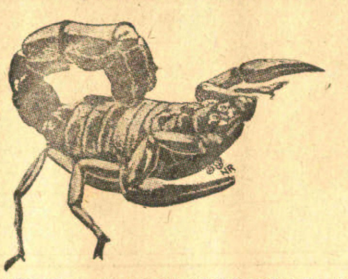
At the end of an hour, they returned a verdict of accquittal for the defendants with some severe strictures on the dignity of marriage, and establishing the precise limitations of business transactions.

Brument went home to the domestic roof accompanied by his wife.

Cornu went back to his business.

The End.

AN UNUSUAL PHOTOGRAPH - A SCORPION COMMITTING SUICIDE!



NEW YORK sends us this most unusual photograph depicting a scorpion i nthe act of committing suicide.

Scorpions, it migh be explained, abound in warm and dry countries throughout the world. They resemble a small lobster, except that they carry a formidable sting at the end of thei lobes. The venom of six scorpions is said to be more dealy than that of a single adder.

One of their chief traits is a habit of killing themselves by actually inflicting their deadly sting on themselves. The picture above was made just as the scorpion jabbed its back with its own poisonous weapon.

THUGS RETAKE $100 WHEN HE LEARNS VICTIM IS OFFICER

Abraham Lenhoff, a deputy clerk in recorder's court, en route to Mt Clemens stopped at a soft drink stand to quench his thirst. In his pocket was one hundred dollars of which Lehoff was taking to Mt. Clements to pay his bill at a hospital where his wife is ill.

Returning from the stand, Lenhoff found a stranger sitting in his automobile.

'Get in" and drive on, and say nothing," commanded the stranger leveling a gun at the deputy clerk.

Lenhoff obeyed.

Farther down the road, under the thug's orders, he brought his machine to a stop, and was relieved of his money, a valuable gold watch and some papers which he carried in his pockets. The passenger then ordered Lenhoff to turn around and drive him to Detroit.

"That money", ventured Lenhoff some time after they were safely headed toward Detroit, "was what I expected to pay my wife's hospital bill with. I was driving to Mt. Clemens to pay the bill tonight."

"That so',' asked the stranger. "The wife sick."

"Um—mm—m—m,' nodded Lenhoff, despondently.

Words led to more words, until, after a short while a most amazing thing happened. The thug returned Lenhoff's money to him.

The thug began to finger the papers he had taken from the deputy clerk's pockets.

"Say look here', queried the stranger after a moment. 'What is your line anyway".

Lenhoff explained that he was employed in recorder's court.

"Oh you are, eh" sneered the thug. "Well gimme back that money." Lenhoff complied.

STATE IS ASKED TO INSPECT FIELDS OF CERTIFIED POTATOES

More than three hundred farmers of the state have requested inspection of their potato fields this year by inspectors furnished thru the Michigan Crop Improvement association.

The farmers are the growers of Michigan certified seed potatoes. The reputation of this seed stock has been built up by several years of careful work, and Michigan farmers are finding no difficulty in finding ready markets.

The first crop inspected averaged only one hundred thirty eight and five tenths bushels to the acre, while last year's crop produced at the rate of two hundred fifty six bushels to the acre.

CHINESE ENVOY ASKS U. S. HELP

If China is freed from the interference of foregin powers and the Cantonese faction gains control, the present turmoil of civil war will be a unified nation by December according to Dr. Tien Lai-Huang. unofficial ambassador to United States, who visited East Lansing on his "good wil.' tour.

Dr. Tien has addressed thirty nine colleges and universities, pleading for a more comprehensive view of China's problems. He believes the United State can furnish trade by recognizing the Cantonese government politically.

The influence of foreign powers is hindering China greatly, according to Dr. Tien. He characterized the civil strife n his country as "inevitable", but predicted it could not continue long. China, he said is tired of war and longs for a solution of her problems. As soon as the Cantonese or Nationalist party gains complete control, unification will be brought about, he believes.

A NEW AIR LINE TO BE STARTED

Flying operations on the Detroit Grand Rapids air line are suspended until special planes and radio direction equipment can be applied for the line's extension across Lake Michigan to Milwaukee and ultimately a new line, to St. Paul. Meantime a new line, to be inaugurated Sept, first wil be operated between Detroit and Cleveland.

The Grand Rapids line has served as experimental laboratory for testing equipment rates and schedules so that further operations could be based on fact and experience. Revenues did not pay, operating expenses but they did pay more than expected.

Because of the peculiar geogaphical location of the two cities, the Detroit - Cleveland service will render the greatest saving in time that can be made between any two cities in the United States. It will cut the fastest train time by half. Actual running time, including a thirty minute drive to and from the air ports will be only two and one half hours. New expenditures are to be made to insure the utmost passenger comfort on the planes and a passenger waiting room is to be erected on the Cleveland airport.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Will Prohibition Come By Education?

This educational movement extending over the better part of a century is not without its elements of romance and its dramatic aspects, the most striking of which was, perhaps, the apparent suddenness with which the movement came to its climax in the ratification of the amendment and the passage of the Volstead Act. The dramatic effect was heightened, no doubt, from the fact that these final steps were taken during war time and were popularly regarded as another of the restrictions upon individual liberty imposed upon us by the exigencies of the situation, to be lifted again when the emergency was passed. But to anyone who will take the trouble to review the history of this movement, it is evident that the final passage of the amendment at this particular time was a mere coincidence, and that it was really the culmination of a long educational process. The disastrous feature of the whole situation is this, that with the passage of this legislation the educational efforts of those who had worked to bring about the measure halted.

Not so, however, with those opposed to prohibition. Since the passage of the amendment, attention has been diverted from the question as to the physiological and social effects of alcohol, and of the saloon as a social institution to the question as to the right of society to pass sumptuary legislation, limiting the freedom of men to engage in certain forms of manufacture and trade and denying to the individual the privilege of determining the course of his private conduct.

THE CHALLENGE TO PROHIBITION FORCES

This campaign of those opposed to prohibition must be met by an educational program that shall be both vigorous and convincing. It would seem necessary once again to traverse the whole area already covered, but to do so with a somewhat different objective and a reconstructed program.

For example, we must take account first of the social effects of prohibition itself. Many children today are having an earlier personal experience of this problem than was formerly the case, owing to the fact that the scene of activity has been transferred from the saloon to the home. Once again it will be necessary to build up convictions, attitudes, habits of children and young people in respect to this whole matter; the effects of alcohol upon the human system, the relation of the individual to the law-making agencies, the social effects of alcohol, the responsibility of all for securing the passage of just laws and for law observance.

Now convictions and attitudes are not matters merely of occasional and rather infrequent indoctrination. There must be a scientific basis, to be sure; but there must also be opportunity for weighing alternatives, making judgments and arriving at decisions. This involves a different educational procedure from that to which we have been accustomed, a cumulative educational process which enters into the very life of the pupil, helping him to analyze situations and solve real problems.

SOCIAL GROUPS WHICH MUST BE REACHED

Young people in high schools and colleges today are feeling a new sense of freedom, a new resentment against all restraint, a new determination to live their own lives and find their own experiences. Part of this self-assertiveness is, no doubt, one of the results of the war. But we cannot expect adequately to meet their present needs unless we know what they are feeling and thinking in regard to this whole problem. We shall need to take them into confidence, catch their point of view, and sympathetically work with them toward a rational solution.

Organized labor is, quite generally, opposed to prohibition. We shall hardly succeed in compelling this great body of people, many of them accustomed from childhood to their glass of wine or beer at their meals, to acquiesce in the restraints which prohibition imposes upon them. We shall best succeed if we are able to show them that this new experiment will bring to them added energy, less fatigue, more real happiness and wealth, than they enjoyed before. And we shall need a much longer array of unquestioned facts than are at present available in order to persuade them of this.

There are, of course, numbers of individuals, some of them wealthy and respectable, who have always been accustomed to the use of liquor and have kept their own private supplies. This type of citizen is usually opposed to any law which interferes with his own desires or habits. There are lawyers who are opposed on theoretical grounds to extending the scope of federal authority. And there are persons who are discouraged at the apparent failure of the Volstead Act and are ready to agree that it ought to be repealed. The church itself needs again to be reminded of its responsibility as a social agency and many church members need to have their sense of social obligation quickened and intensified.

If we are to meet the issues raised by this new social experiment we must study anew the types of people who are opposed to it. We must seek to discover the reasons for that opposition. We must seek a new procedure of education, based upon assured scientific fact, aimed at the very problems which these people face and in the form in which they face them, and we must then push this program with systematic, patient, and sympathetic earnestness, realizing full well that the task is not one for a day, but for continuous weeks and months and years.—Benjamin S. Winchester.

Weekly Report of the Sheriff's Office, Week Ending August 20th, 1927

Morris Schlorff and Frank Kenney, two of the Sturgis boys who tried to follow in the footsteps of the James brothers, were released in custody of the Branch Co. official on Sunday afternoon. On Aug. 20th they were sentenced to a term of 3½ to 10 years each in prison.

John Hutchins, who was sentenced to 6 months in Ionia for violating the liquor law, was taken there to serve his sentence on Monday.

Lee Fletcher, an inmate of the County Farm who escaped from there on Tuesday, is being held at the County Jail awaiting transfer to one of the State Hospitals for the insane.

Otto Ziegler, who has been "in again", "out again" at the County Jail during the past 6 months, was surrendered to the Sheriff this past week due to a disagreement on the part of his bondsmen. Otto is waiting for a new bond.

On Thursday night the Marsh store at Litchfield was again burglarized and about $150 taken. Officers are working on the case.

Gala Day A Big Success

Taken all round the Gala Day held in this village early last week was one of the best affairs held in this vicinity in several years and the vast crowd of people in the evening testified to the popularity of the town as a get-together village, as people were here from Hanover, Moscow, Addison, Hillsdale, Jonesville, Osseo, and other surrounding burgs, who went home with the conviction that North Adams knows how at least, to entertain the crowd. The eighty foot high dive by Captain Charles Cole of Adrian proved to be the principal drawing card and much surprise was expressed at the daring exhibited in this hazardous act.

The ball game between Addison and North Adams resulted in a complete victory for North Adams, in fact the game was pretty near a "skunk" although some very good plays were pulled off by both teams in the last stages of the game. Score 14 to 0.

The Consumers Power Company band of Jackson were on the scene early in the afternoon, and furnished splendid music.

The Chorus in the evening was composed of picked men from Camden Mich under the direction of Prof. Frank Perkins of Hillsdale, and kept the audience spell bound for the evening.

The dance in the Community hall was so largely attended that there was not sufficient room for the waltz.

More automobiles were on the streets of this village than at any previous time in years.

A couple of men driving a big Nash sedan headed west in Moscow on Thursday, Aug. 18 collided with the train on the Cincinnati Northern at the village crossing. The Nash was completely demolished and the driver sustained a badly lacerated chest from being jammed against the steering wheel and the passenger sustained a fractured skull. Dr. McFarland was summoned and the men taken to Hillsdale Hospital for treatment where it is reported they are convalescing.

MORTGAGE SALE

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage bearing date May 4th, A. D, 1917, executed by Franklin I. Kinney and Sarah Kinney his wife, to Sidney Denning and being recorded on the 4th day of May 1917 in the office of the Register of Deeds of Hillsdale County, Michigan, in Liber 157, of Mortgages on page 102, and which said mortgage is now owned by the said Sidney Denning, and upon which mortgage there is claimed to be due and unpaid at the date of this notice, the sum of Thirty-nine hundred dollars ($3900) principal and Five Hundred, Thirty-eight Dollars ($538.00) interest, together with an Attorney fee provided for in said mortgage, and by the statute in such cases made and provided of Thirty-five dollars, and which said sums together with said attorney fee is the whole amount claimed to be due and unpaid upon said mortgage.

And whereas, no suit or proceeding either at law or in equity has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Therefore, notice is hereby given, that on the 24th day of Sept., A. D., 1927, at ten o'clock in the forenoon at the west front door of the Court House in the city of Hillsdale, Hillsdale county, Michigan, that being the place of holding the Circuit Court in said county, because of said default, and by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale at Public Auction to the highest bidder of said premises therein described, or so much thereof, as shall be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage as above set forth with interest thereon and the costs, charges and expenses allowed by law and provided for in said mortgage, including the said attorney fee

Said premises are described as all those certain pieces or parcels of land situate and being in the Township of Wheatland, in the County of Hillsdale, State of Michigan, and described as follows to-wit: The south half of the north-east fractional quarter of Section 6 in Town 6, south Range 1 west, excepting 15 acres off the north side, leaving 70 acres more or less. Radio Outlook Promising For Summertime Listeners

Broadcasters and Engineers Have Collaborated to Provide for the Continued Enjoyment of Radio During the Summer Months.

Once more summertime rolls around in the eventful career of radio broadcasting. Yet its advent this year goes by hardly noticed, in contrast with the earlier years of the young art when the first signs of warm weather sounded the curfew for radio entertainment. Radio broadcasting then had not yet become as indispensable a part of modern life as it is today.

The whole picture has changed in this, the sixth summer of radio broadcasting. The high standard of broadcast entertainment is not lowered with the advent of spring and the early approach of summer. Programs continue in full force, providing the highest type of entertainment and enlightenment. Outdoor life, while beckoning with its many new pastimes after the long winter, need not interfere with radio's enjoyments. Indeed, there is every indication that radio will occupy its just place in summertime activity through its addition to camping and vacationing paraphernalia in the form of the small and compact superheterodyne portable set.

Clearing the Summertime Air

No better impetus to radio this summer could be wished for than the activities of the Federal Radio Commission, whose good work is already beginning to be felt. In a methodical and judicious manner this new Governmental body has made commendable progress in untangling the wavelength snarl of radio broadcasting. Already the interference which was experienced in some areas due to unregulated and misguided broadcasting activities, has been eliminated in large measure by greater separation between broadcast frequencies in congested radio districts. Instead of the entire broadcasting establishment of the nation operating at one time, with a resultant confusion comparable with the Tower of Babel of biblical renown, the Federal Radio Commission has very wisely sought to reduce the number of broadcasters operating at one time to proportions in keeping with the limited though adequate traffic facilities of our broadcasting wavelengths. Throughout their work the rights of the radio listener as the prime consideration have been respected, while broadcasters have been assured better conditions for the transmission and reception of their efforts.

Adding Radio to the Pleasures of the Picnic

The beneficial effects of the new broadcasting regulations will become more and more evident during the next few months. Radio fans in the congested centers are again experiencing the thrills of clean-cut reception. Long-distance or "DX" reception which, during the usual hours of listening-in had become almost a lost art, is now being reinstated with the elimination of the thick fog of interference heretofore enshrouding the air. Good tone quality, the ultimate aim of all broadcast reception, has now been made possible to a fuller extent.

Better Programs for Summertime Listeners

On the other hand, there need be no fear that the work of the "radio traffic officers" will reduce the volume or the quality of radio entertainment. Far from being the case, this work actually aims at the encouragement of good programs by alloting exclusive wavelengths and more time to organizations in a position to provide the highest type of entertainment. After all, so it is realized more and more, radio broadcasting is a public forum of vast proportions, and only those with something worthy of the attention of the vast gathering it commands should be permitted to take this invisible stage and rostrum. In broadcasting, we have the key to some six million homes. Surely this great opportunity must not be misused.

Due in large measure to the steady expansion of the ouside pick-up system of broadcasting stations, whereby program material may be gathered outside the studio, summer programs are certain to be on a par with those of the indoor season. For the outdoor season provides the program director with opportunities to gather exceptional program material in the form of outdoor concerts, sporting events, giant public meetings and national celebrations. Radio "reporters," with portable microphone and wire and in some instances with shortwave radio relay transmitters, are sent out into the field in search of stirring events for the radio public.

Network broadcasting has done as much to raise the level of broadcasting as any other single factor, first, by making the same fine programs available to whole portions of the country and to a collective audience running into the tens of millions; and secondly by warranting the expenses of any program feature no matter how elaborate. No individual broadcasting station could for a moment consider the tremendous costs of providing the professional entertainment features which are now usual in network broadcasting, for this young art, as in the case of the newspaper, depends on the size of its audience for the magnitude of its efforts.

Defeating Static at Its Own Game

Yet the finest of programs would be of little avail if garbled as the result of static interference. This phenomenon of nature is no more avoidable than rain or snow or wind; and at the present state of the radio art, there is no such device as a static eliminator. Hence the only weapon against static is brute force, or outdoing static with increased signal strength at the receiving end. Broadcasting power must be increased sufficiently to break its way through atmospherical interference and triumphantly over-ride its disturbing noises.

This competition of nature's broadcasting forces has been met by broadcasters through the steady increase of their transmitting power. In fact, it is generally agreed today that broadcasting began with an altogether too limited conception of the amount of power required for reliable service, just as modern illumination began with the candle as the basis of house lighting, which feeble illuminant would today be hopelessly inadequate for our more brilliantly lighted homes and streets. From 500 watts as the standard for good broadcasting service, we have gone to 5,000 watts in the case of many leading stations, and even to higher power in the case of a few broadcasting stations, notably WJZ of New York (owned by the Radio Corporation of America) with 45,000 watts, WGY of Schenectady with a rating of 56,000 watts, and KDKA of Pittsburgh with 50,000 watts (owned by the General Electric and Westinghouse Companies, respectively).

Today, in the parts of the United States where most people are found, there is ample signal strength from one or more broadcasting stations to combat successfully average summertime conditions. Radio engineers have measured the average strength of static throughout the year, and present-day broadcasting stations are providing local service fully capable of coping with it.

Higher power broadcasting, more than any other factor, has converted radio broadcasting from a seasonal entertainment to an all-year-round service. Especially is this felt in rural districts, far removed from the centers of population, which could be reached on a daily basis only during a few months of the year, with the low power formerly employed.

At the Receiving End

Yet the broadcaster alone cannot entirely overcome summertime interference single-handed. It must have co-operation at the receiving end as well. The radio enthusiast can, within reason, contribute his share by selecting programs from local and powerful stations that provide ample signal strength to over-ride the interference level and by being content with fair volume from the loudspeaker, so as to enjoy the radio entertainment without bringing up the objectionable undercurrent of disturbance to a degree where it impresses itself on the listeners' consciousness. Placing the loudspeaker at a reasonable distance from the listener helps somewhat.

Considering all the contributing helpful factors, it is sure that this summer will see the continued enjoyment of radio broadcasting by those whose lives have been brightened by the many good things which this new art brings into the home.

North Adams To The Front Again

Some of our well wishing citizens have been at times down the mouth with anxiety concerning the business welfare of the town, but they need not be so. North Adams business chances are as good as any other small village in this country without doubt. We might say the good roads are largely responsible for this, then again we might say the class of business men we have here are a large sight more responsible. We have a live wire Chautauqua this summer, we have had a real old-fashioned Gala Day such as Ezra Whitmore, Ev. Borden and "Puss" Young used to put on —verily North Adams is coming to her own after a sort of Rip Van Winkle sleep. There are those skeptics who talk of the good old days when the town was full of traders from morning until night but they get the horse laugh quite often. Their twaddle of the old days has about frittered out in a squawk. The good old days are the present days and there is never a time since the completion of gravel pikes in all directions when you can't see twenty-five automobiles on our streets. Now they come here, why? Well, in the first place we have a top notch creamery which they patronize and many of them tote their own cream, second we have as good stores as you will find in the county—hardwares, groceries, dry goods, meat market always stocked up with the best goods money can buy and the money is always forthcoming to buy the goods. Prices are at all times reasonable, nobody complains that they are "soaked" in North Adams Our merchants are always glad to wait upon customers, match the lowest prices anywhere, even to the mail order houses. For years our merchants have made it a practice to request your mail order catalogue and add the price of carriage and they can undersell the mail order house. What more than this could you ask.?

In spite of this we find here and there a disgruntled one who goes to Hillsdale to buy him a loaf of bread or some hard-to-obtain trifle and he glories in it. We have noticed the calamity howlers are conspicuous by their absence late years although we are a village of retired farmers, men who come here calculating to spend little or nothing for up-keep. They're learning how to conduct a village on the prosperity plan, viz; by trading at home, letting the Semitic gents like Shears & Sawbuck severely alone and shelling out for public improvements. That's what makes North Adams so popular. While it is true our Saturday night crowd is scattered, it is also true that our average through the weeks of summer is much higher. Atta Boy! Another feature which the country folks enjoy is free movies. These free movies are a drawing card here and no country-side home can feel anything but gratitude to our business men for the way we cater to their amusements. We calculate that if we can have the trade of the surrounding section, we can afford to entertain you free, and we're doing it. Come along boys, we need you and you need us. Let's run things along this line and see how far Hillsdale and Jackson will carry their screams to attract attention.

The Hagenbeck—Wallace shows at Hillsdale August 11 were extremely well spoken of and many of the performers and bosses of the show were entertained by Hillsdale people. One of the clowns spoke before the Rotarians, also one of the lady animal trainers. Probably the most notable performance of the whole show was the handling of the fierce lions and tigers and leopards in the big iron cage in the arena by a young lad not much more than a boy. The abandon and dare devil with which he handled the ferocious full grown animals was rather of a startler. The lions and one tiger exhibited signs of temper and refused to obey at times but were eventually cowed down and scared into submission. The trainer is of course heavily armed for emergencies but this would not save his life if the big beasts went on a rampage as anyone knows. The big audience at times shuddered during the performance and some ladies turned their eyes away expecting to see the trainer mangled. The big group of lady performers about the show were certainly a clean appearing bunch and for good looks could hardly be equaled anywhere. The average novice has little idea of the strict regulation necessary among the personnel of such a large aggregation. The men and women must not be about the sleeping coaches at the same time, and any unmarried employees who are caught speaking to each other or holding any kind of conversation about the show grounds are fined and severely penalized. Great care is required to keep the sexes segrated at all times. This is not so much observed by other big shows. It is safe to presume that the Hagenbeck—Wallace personnel are as clean physically and morally as it is possible for a show troupe to be.

Village Planning Big Factor In Community Life

City planning as practiced in metropolitan centers has its counterpart in the development of villages that serve as social and trade centers for farming communities. The automobile affords the farmer a wider range of choice in selecting his recreation and in selling his products and buying supplies. Some of the elements of good physical make up of towns and villages according to Wayne C. Nason, of the Division of Farm Population and Rural Life of the Department of Agriculture, are convenient and pleasing exits and entrances, broad tree-lined streets, a common or village green as a civic center, park and playground space, sanitation, good architecture in private dwellings, as well as in public buildings which should be conveniently located, and all set back from the streets and surrounded with ample lawns and clean and attractive borders. Villages that do not minister to the needs of the farming communities are likely to complain of the drift to the cities and of ruinous competition. Villages that are attractive, as well as serviceable, also profit from the ever-increasing army of summer tourists.

Preventive planning, which foresees and prevents expensive mistakes in building, is recommended to village communities. As in the cities, rebuilding after a bad start may be expensive but cheaper in the long run. Exceptional new villages planned recently, with an eye to the future, include Mariemont, Ohio; Longview, Wash.; Pinehurst, N. C.; and Palo Verde, Calif. Other villages are rebuilding either in large-piece reconstruction work at one time or by adoption of long term plans for replacement of undesirable buildings as they wear out. The movement is country wide and supported by planning associations and boards in several States. A long list of towns and villages which have initiated planning practices includes such scattered communities as Weston, Mass.; Leroy, Ohio; Forrest City, N. C.; Cape Girardeau, Mo.; Post, Tex.; Pipestone, Minn.; Logan, Utah; and Durham and Patterson, Calif. Mr. Nason concludes that village planning is in its infancy. It represents not a waste but a saving of money in forestalling the need to spend great sums in the future for reconstruction and in providing for the economic, social and esthetic welfare of the 20,000,000 people who live in villages or small towns and of the 30,000,000 farm people who use them.

Report Of The Sheriff's Office, Week Ending August 13th, 1927

Marion Seeley, 29 of Jerome, was arrested Aug. 12 and charged with stealing a sack containing money from the store of Walworth and McGregor in Jerome. Seeley pleaded guilty before Justice Fitzsimmons and was fined the costs and sentenced to 30 days in jail. The days were later suspended and he was placed on 1 years probation.

On the night of the ninth, the City night watch observed three young men loitering in the alleys and becoming suspicious, attempted to arrest them. Assisted by R. Morlock, he brought 2 of them to the Sheriff for detention and investigation. The third member evaded arrest by running away. The two boys were shut up in the detention rooms up stairs and during the night, one of them, Kenney, by taking a part of his bed spring, managed to pick the lock on his door and escaped. He was arrested disguised as a woman, before noon on the following day on U. S. 112 near Allen, and with him was the boy, Miller, who ran away the night before. From then on, all the members of the Department have been busy checking up on their stories and today these boys and two others from Sturgis stand charged with: 1. Oil station hold up near Sturgis. 2. Robbing Snyder's Bakery at Coldwater. 3. Breaking and entering Graves & Ford Lumber Co. Jonesville. 4. Burglary of the mill at Jonesville. 5. Burglary of Williamson's Shoe Store at Jonesville. 6. Stealing Chrysler Coupe at Vicksburg. 7. Stealing Chrysler Coach at Coldwater. 8. Robbery of Roy Hall's cleaning shop at Hillsdale. 9. Robbery of Bakery in Union City. 10. Stealing Erskine Sedan in Three Rivers. 11. Attempted burglary of Garage at Jonesville. Miller was delivered to the Chief of Police at Sturgis and Kenney and Schlorff will be sent to the Sheriff at Coldwater, where their major operations took place. This ends a chapter from a 10 cent thriller and the officers of four counties breathe easier.

Clinton Calkins, now of Sturgis was arrested as an accomplice in the Mill robbery at Jonesville, and will be arraigned early next week. Calkins admits his part in the transaction.

Jack Johnson, late of Chicago who was employed in Moscow Township was killed Aug. 13 afternoon when the hay hoisting machinery gave way and a pulley struck him on the head. Coroner, Prosecuting Attorney and Sheriff visited the scene of the accident and decided that no inquest would be held.

No. of prisoners in the County Jail 11. Under sentence 5. Waiting trial 6. Total 11.

THE CANNING OF PINEAPPLE

By Capitola Williams Ashworth

THE story of the canning of pineapple is a romantic one, from the picking of the fruit on the plantations to the actual packing in the cans, cooking and labelling in the canneries.

To begin with, the labor employed represents many different nationalities. There are Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, Filipinos, Fiji Islanders, Americans, and native Hawaiians, called kanakas (men) and wahinis (women). These people may be seen in the fields during the picking season and in the canneries during the canning season, mingling in friendly fashion and humming the popular airs of their native lands, or more often singing an Hawaiian tune. In fact, many a can of pineapple is packed and sent spinning along its way to the tune of Aloha Oe or some hula song.

The interior of a canning plant in Honolulu during the busy season is unique and picturesque. Many different races and a hundred different types may be seen. Dark skins, yellow skins, and fair skins burned red by the tropical sun are seen side by side. All are clean as there are rooms in the plant provided with shower baths for their convenience, and they are required to wear long white aprons and caps and rubber gloves, thus assuring the most sanitary conditions for the fruit. But the Hawaiian maidens, while very efficient in their work will not permit anything to kill their love of color and life, and insist on wearing bright flowers tucked under their ears and leis, which are long ropes of bright and fragrant flowers, about their necks. Thus the cannery is not only a place where the fascinating process of canning pineapple may be seen, but a place where many interesting human traits and racial characteristics may be observed.

The actual steps through which the ripened and properly matured pineapple goes before it reaches the American table are somewhat as follows:

The pineapples are graded at the plantation according to size. Here it is the diameter that counts,—not the length of the pineapple.

They are packed into big boxes in the fields and loaded on motor trucks and hauled to the nearest railway loading point where they are put into the pineapple cars and taken to the plant.

At the plant they are unloaded and placed on travelling chains which carry them into a machine where they are shelled, cored and the two butt ends are cut off. The pineapple meat comes out in the form of a cylinder.

Inside the rind which is thus removed is much good fruit which is cut out by a knife to be used for crushed pineapple, which is also canned here.

From this machine the cylinder shaped fruit comes down onto a travelling belt where women are lined up on either side, to trim from the fruit remaining bits of the shell or any imperfection in the fruit.

Now the cylinder of fruit goes through a slicing machine, after which it is again separated into three grades. For the first and best grade the fruit that is ripest and most golden in color, also the most neatly sliced is chosen, is put into cans with the addition of a larger amount of sugar than the other fruit, and, upon reaching the market is sold as "fancy canned" at a price somewhat higher than the other grades.

The second grade which is sold as "standard" is almost equally as good as the fancy, but has not quite so much sugar added and may not represent quite the perfection of slicing as the fancy grade.

The third grade is the pineapple that has been broken in the slicing machine or elsewhere. Much of it is equal to the best in color, ripeness and flavor, but, being broken, it is put on the market at a considerable reduction in prices.

Some pieces are too badly broken to be canned as sliced pineapple and are sent over to the department where crushed pineapple is being prepared.

After this grading is done the fruit is packed into cans and sent through a vacuum machine where the fruit cells containing air are exploded. Then hot syrup made of refined pineapple juice and pure cane sugar is added.

Now the cans travel into an exhaust box where the air is driven out and the temperature is raised. Here the fruit stays for about six minutes at a temperature of 135 degrees.

The cans are now ready to be sealed, and are then cooked at a temperature of 195 or 200 degrees Fahrenheit for about ten minutes, according to the size of the can and the nature of the contents.

After cooking, the cans are sent through a lacquer bath to receive a protective coating against rust and to give an attractive appearance. Now the cans pass through a cooler where the temperature is reduced so that the fruit will not continue to cook. The complete process of canning the pineapple is almost automatic, the only hand work being the trimming of the fruit after the shell has been removed and the packing into cans. The entire process takes only about 35 minutes, though this varies according to the size of the can.

APPLE PARING ONCE REPLACED JAZZ AS SPORT FOR YOUTHS

The silver flasks, canophony of jazz orchestras, and other features of modern youth's parties are no more thrilling than the festive gatherings of three generations ago, Mrs. Hugh McNeight of Memphis said in announcing her plans for celebrating her ninety fifth birthday anniversary.

But there is this difference;

The parties she attended four score years ago were devoted almost exclusively to paring apples. Often the young couples pared as much as twenty bushels on the course of the evening's entertainment.

Mrs. Mc Neigth, whose husband is still living was born near Whitby, Canada in eighteen thirty two and came to Memphis a half century ago. Eight children of the couple are alive.

The children that attended the celebration were Frank and William Mc Neight, Mrs. John Morrison, Mrs. Robert Harrison, Mrs. James McPherson, all of Pt. Huron Mrs. Mary Hodgin of Ailsa Craig Ont.; Joseph Mc Neight of Lansing and Mrs. Cass De Land of Memphis.

WHITE LEGHORNS LEADING IN M. S. C. EGG MARATHON

A pen of white leghorn hens from Grand Blanc, a 'dark horse' in the fifth international egg laying contest at the Michigan State College has forged its way into the lead of one of the most spirited poultry races in the history of the local competitions.

Only a few weeks ago these hens were in tenth place but after gaining their "second wind" they pushed up rapidly. They were entered by F. G. DeWitt of Grand Blanc.

In rising to first place, Mr. DeWitt's hens displace a pen of Leghorns entered by Harry Burns, of Millington. Mr. Burn's hens have laid one hundred twenty more eggs than DeWitt's fowls, these eggs underweight and could not be counted in the official returns. DeWitt's birds have produced few undersized eggs.

GOLD KEYS TO CITY GO INTO PRODUCTION

Whether Detroit shall purchase one thousand gold plated keys to the city for presentation to distingushed visitors is up to Percy L. Monteith city controller and Edward Speyer, secretary to the Mayor. Unwilling to make the momentous dicision itself the Council placed the responsibility on their shoulders.

Isadore Rudolph, Philadelphia, manufacturer, stands eager to supply the keys at sixty five cents each They are five inches long and a thermometer in the business end lends them a certais utility. With Col. Charles A. Lndbergh coming and all, Mr. Rudolph said he really thought the city should have them.

But Mr. Monteith isn't sure that the key now in use is beter. This is in the nature of the property key It is large and wooden. Although it has been presented to scores of distinguished visitors, no one has yet offered to carry it away with him.

CLOSING ROAD FOR G. M. PROVING GROUND IS DENIED BY COURT

Closing of roads by public officials is declared illegal in a decision handed down by Judge Joseph H. Collins of Livingston county circuit court, Howell, directly pointed at General Motors corporation.

No road law now exists in Michigan which authorizes any public official to close or discontinue a highway, Judge Collin holds. He held unconstitutional the parts of Act tw hundred fifty three of the laws of nineteen hundred which relate to the discontanuance of highways. Therefore he reversed the township highway commissioner of Livingston county in approving the petition of the General Motors corporation for the closing of King road which cuts the southwest corner of the motor corporation's twenty five hundred thousand dollar testing grounds between Brighton and Milford.

King road is the connecting high way between Pleasant Valley road from Brighton to Milford, and Brownson road, and constitutes a short cut from Brighton to Milford

SPECIALIZE, PLEA OF FARM EXPERTS

While experts of various kinds clamor for diversified farming as one of the highroads to farm prosperity, a lone voice comes out of Ithaca N. Y., to remind the experts that the tendency of the time is toward specilization instead.

The voice is that of Dr. George F. Warren, professor of agricultural economics at Cornell University, long recognized as a national authority in his field.

"The whole history of American agriculture shows increasing specialization on those products best adapted to a region, says Prof Warren. 'In some regions several products are about equally adapted, and such regions are usually diversified. But most regions are specializing in one or two products best adapted to the natural and economic conditions.

"Apples were formerly grown in all parts of New York state. More than half of the trees have disappeared in the regions outside of Western New York and the Hudson River Valley. Potatoes and other vegetables are increasing on the best soils of Long Island, but the growth of such crops in connection with general farming is decreasing Eggs are being produced in large numbers near the ocean in a way that was formerly unknown.

"The increase in scientific knowledge and technical skill favors the production of a few products. Machinery also favors specialization. To equip a small area for any one crop is too expensive. Improved transportation enlarges the market for the region that has a natural advantage. The farmers are gradually specializing on the product for which their region has the advantage. Some persons still insist that their home region is best for everything, but competition is gradually replacing false patriotism by knowledge.

'The agricultural depression is eliminating the regions that are not best for the products and is so increasing specialization. High handling charges favor the production of home food supplies, but com mercial production is rapidly being specialized. Many well-meaning persons think that the trouble with agriculture is lack of diversity. They do not know the agricultural history of the past century.

MICHIGAN MAN SAYS WAR NOT FORGOTTEN ABROAD

"Europe cannot forget the war. There are to many reminders, especially in France and Belgium—shattered villages, fields where the guns abandoned still remain. The European nations keep the war idea constantly before them, cherishing war relics, constructing their statues and monuments around the theme. It will be many years before Europe wholly accepts disarmament."

ALFALFA SAVES FARM LOSSES

Because he discovered he could not sell his farm without a forsage crop on the ground V. W. Montgomery, of Reed City, started to plant alfalfa on his land, and has achieved a remarkable record.

Seven years ago, Montgomery sold the farm, located five miles west and one mile north of Reed City to an Ionia farmer. The new owner could not raise sufficient forsage for his stock, and abandoned the farm two years later. Montgomery decided to sow the land to alfalfa so that it could be sold permanently the next time.

He first sowed ten acres using twelve pounds of seed to the acre and two tons of lime. The next year he doubled the acreage. He now has ninety acres of alfalfa on his one hundred twenty acre farm. For the first time, he tried out sweet clover this spring. He also introduced the cultipacker, and secured better initial stands. Montgomery leaves his alfalfa for three or four years, then plows it down and reseeds. He has found that the second seeding gives better stand and thriftier growth.

Because of his fine field of alfalfa Montgomery's farm was chosen for one of the Hay Day demonstrations recently conducted in twenty three counties of the state by farm crop specialists of the Michigan State College.

Your Prosperity Hinges on the Prosperity of Your Home Town

The Sign of The Mogi

"Yep, as I was saying, those 'Dagoes' are queer ones', mused old Twonik, as he carefully deposited a cascade of tobacco juice in the corner, and proceeded to replenish the stock in his mouth with another quarter section of plug. Twonik was now about to start on the drain notice, which contained approximately three galleys nonpareil, but he passed with stick uplifted as if he meant to brain somebody, which really was a favorite attitude with him when about to begin a rattling good "yarn".

"By the way, Johnson, did I ever tell you about the little Eyetalian who worked on the Daily Sanscript when I was down in New Orleans". Meantime Twonik glanced apprehensively at the office door before settling on a comfortable stool, for the 'boys" knew the signs were right for a good story, and gathered around expectantly.

Twonik turned to the office boy rather prematurely, saying, "See here kid you run over and take a peek into the sanctorium and let me know if the boss is out."

Jimmy did as he was bidden, not forgetting to turn the key in the composing room door as he returned. Twonik, feeling sure the coast was clear, shifted his "cud" and launched forth as follows,

"While I was employed on the Sanscript, the boss experienced many difficulties, in getting good comps, which probably explains why I was trying to learn the preservative at that particular time and place. Most of the printers of that time devotees of Bacchus—so much so, that to find a good comp who would remain strictly sober for a fortnight—was like picking pearls from oyster-beds, only a durned sight more rare; and the boss, after many weary attempts to reform his help, decided to purchase a linotype, a machine practically unknown to the trade at that time, but used extensively by the New York dailies, and manufactured by a firm there.

"Of course all hands were fairly beside themselves with curiosity concerning the new machine, even the foreman Jerry Bednio getting the microbe into his system. Every man in the shop talked of nothing else during the day, and probably if they had nightmares it was all laid to the same cause. To be plain with you it became a regular 'bogy' with the force.

"At last the much motted question was settled by the arrival of the new 'contraption'; also the expert who was to install it and act as operator for a time at least. In due season the machine was uncrated and assembled and such an array of levers, cams gears and sprockets as then rose before our astonished eyes was a stunner— a combination of cunning ingenuity worthy of Satan himself. The expert gravely informed us that when the linotype was once in commission he could set more ems in a day than the whole bloomin' outfit; whereat a loud laugh was raised at his expense. In fact we all took our turn in guying him; so that, when a week had elapsed, and the machine positively refused to work, because of some misplaced part, the ridicule we heaped upon the operator's defenceless head would have caused the wooden Indian in front of the cigar store to forsake his pedestal, and tomahawk every mothers son of us. But through it all, the expert kept sweet; and finally got his machine working and then, how he kicked out the shining slugs.

'Things traveled along pretty smoothly after that at the Sanscript; but one night, the expert, true to his early training, got gloriously drunk, and coming in at eight thirty p. m. tried to run out his 'take', but he might as well have tried to brush the cobwebs off the moon, for the influence of his potations hung like a fog over a marsh. After jamming his machine two or three times, he seemed to realize the hopelessness of it all, and faded—this is he retired to the back room, where the boss found him an hour later lying on the floor thoroughly 'corned'. Well it happened that we were able to loan a goodly number of ocmps in times of need to other offices, so that compliment was returned that night; but we worked hard on that edition and she looked mighty nifty when she came out, 16 columns of news all hand set. I hardly need to tell you that Mr. Expert was in a condition which lasted four days at the end of which time he was duly and unceremoniously' canned'; and he didn't care a little bit about it at that inasmuch as he had been very sore on the foreman for a long time back and the feeling was reciprocated.

"Well, to get down to business, the new linotype had to stand idle for several weeks, as no common printer could operate a machine in those days; and none wanted to try any stunts with the new 'contraption.' Meanwhile the boss fumed and swore—but what of it.

'One day, as he was blaspheming in monotones at a piece of badly-written copy, and the proof reader was jacking up his assistant strenuously—in fact the whole front office seemed to be resting on the edge of a volcapo ready to erupt at any moment—softly the front door opened, and a little brown man stepped into the sanctum. His oily greeting, "Good day, Monsieur", was hardly noticed by the irate proprietor, who swearing still more savagely, glared at the aforesaid copy and suddenly jammed it onto the file with the motion of a gladiator about to deliver the coup-de-grace. When he finally did look, he was surprised to find before him a short thick set, dark little chap, whose olive skin and curly black hair plainly indicated his Eastern nativity. His eyes were a black as his hair, and they seemed to take in the whole office at a single glance. Withal, he was a perfect picture of your fruit dealer just around the corner, but vastly more intelligent, and his face was really superb had it not been for an ugly mark across the right temple which looked like the scar from a saber-cut.

"In answer to the boss's questions, he replied, in halting broken English, that he was from New York City, and had learned the linotype from start to finish. He had heard that the Sanscript desired an operator, so there he was!

"All queries in regard to his former work he adroitly parried, and the upshot of the matter was he was hired forthwith to take the place of the discharged expert. The boss thought he looked capable, and anything that knew a shooting-stick from a hatchet was welcomed at that particular time. The next morning found us all rather skeptical about the new man, and the foreman intimated to some of the boys that if the forunner, as he called him, stayed two days, it would be a hoodoo on the whole force. The boys didn't seem to take kindly to the rara avis; in fact they froze stiff right from the beginning.

"The new operator worked like a Trojan, but that wasn't all the passport he needed to the good-will of the foreman.

"It was one of the iron-clad rules of the office, that any man who could not stand at least one bottle of Vernor's best before the evening resume of work, was a mollycoddle, and no mollycoddles would be tolerated for three days by Jerry Bedino. The newcomer did exactly the opposite: he positively refused to drink, on any provocation, stood aloof at the noon hour, and did not enter into conversation beyond a few monosyllables; though he proved himself a very good listener. Each time when the bottle was passed he declined—and it was obvious at once that he had violated the hospitality of the force, and to this day I can see the dark scowling face of the foreman, who was of French descent, leering at the foreigner, who apparently cared no more for Jerry's good-will than he did that of the office cat.

"However, things progressed thusly for several weeks, with no open hostility; for the new operator was certainly a lightning-artist on the machine, and the cleanness of his galleys brought radiant smiles upon the face of the proof-reader. He did not seem to mind the snubs of the printers in the least, but calmly pursued his daily routine with a sang froid characteristic of the Oriental.

INGHAM CROPS PROMISE TO BE BEST IN YEARS

Ingham county farmers are obtaining one of the best yields in years from all early farm crops.

This is the information from the state department of agriculture J. C. Wells, county agricultural agent and Michigan State college farm crops department.

Wheat, barley, rye, oats and hay are unusually good crops and potatoes and beans will be fair, according to present indications. Corn and fruit however will yield much less than last year.

The yield of wheat in this vicinity is better than the average over the state, according to the state department. Many fields in Ingham county are yielding thirty to thirty five bushels per acre while a few run as high as fifty. The highest average yield for the state is twenty four. This probably will not be exceeded this year, due to low yield in other parts of the state. The wheat is large and plump and is weighing from sixty to sixty three pounds per bushel. The usual weight in Michigan is fifty eight.

Hay also was a good crop, and will probably have the largest value of any crop in the county. Timothy, clover, the first cutting of alfalfa were exceptionally good though the second alfalfa crop is short because of dry weather.

A larger acreage of barley was saved this year than last, absorbing, much of the usual corn acreage which was reduced because of the corn borer activities. The yield of both barley and rye is better than the average. The grain is of good quality and the straw is clean and long. Oats sowed early and in fertilized fields are better than the average.

The corn crop will be small unless the weather remains unusually warm throughout September the experts say. The crop is now three weeks behind its usual growth and is suffering from cold and drought. Late potatoe and beans also are suffering from the dry weather, though beans in this county are better than in other localities.

BANK GUARDED BY OWN POLICE FORCE

If you had chanced to pass the private bank of C. A. Ives, at Jeffeson avenue and Griswold street, Detroit early any morning sixty four years ago, you would have seen young Willie De Graff sorting money in the tellers cage.

You could look through the big window and watch the youthful teller count the bills issued by the state banks. There was the roaring wood stove he had just started, and overhead were the blinking kerosene lights, which he had just cleaned and lighted.

You wouldn't have thought anything then, of seeing him prepare the cash drawer for business with no policeman within blocks.

He was alone and unafraid. The Detroit banks of sixty four years ago knew counterfeiters but not bank bandits.

Today William Thompson De-Gramm octogenarian vice president of a big Detroit bank chuckles just a bit when he tells how he counted the money there in Ive's Bank sixty four years ago.

This modern banks presents a state of armed preparedness for the brotherhood of crime, which in the past few years has made office buildings and banks a special prey.

It has its own police department of thirty five members, who maintain day and night vigil over the vertical city of fourteen thousand population and who are prepared to repel bank bandits with machine and riot guns, tear gas and hand grenades.

And it has one of the finest, modern system of fire and a burglar alarms in the country, a system that was installed eighten months ago, and which is capable of serving a city of fifty thousand people.

The entire building and banking area is divided into police zones, the most vital points of which are strengthened by police lines; and all, a total of five hundred points of vantage, are connected with the fire and burglary alarm system, which transmits code mesages to a telegram register. Patrolmen have their beats and 'pull their clocks', like those of the city's police department; lookouts are stationed at points of advantage, a reserve squad is ready at the building's police headquarters in the basement for any emergency.

Four members of a narcotic smuggling ring stood before Judge George Wilson sitting in High Court of the Kings Bench at Montreal for sentence. They were arrested through the courage and initiative of Arnold Lachanauer Federal narcotic agent working out of Detroit in co-operation with Canadian naroctic agents. Millions of dollar's worth of opium, morphine, cocaine and herroin were siezed in consequence of investigations lasting nearly a year and a narcotic smuggling ring that fed many cities in Canada and the United States with illegal drugs was broken up.

At the completion of their prison terms in Canada the prisoners will face charges in this country of smuggling and violating United States narcotic laws.

Last June Lachanauer was standing in front of the Michigan Central Railroad station in Detroit when he recognized Wm. Morton an old time Detroit dope peddler, now in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, and another man not known to the agent Lachanauer arrested both on suspicion.

This cance arrest involved Lachanauer in an exploit that reads like the detective story of fiction. From a clue found in a notebook carried by Morton, the Detroit agent followed a crooked trail that led him to the ringleader of a powerful dope selling organization; he was enabled to arrest not only the lieutenants but the leader himself.

The notebook of Morton, who incidentally was sent to the penitentiary, showed that he was connected with Farley's Montreal - Detroit ring and had a partner in Chicago named Sharkey. Sharkey is a favorite name with pugilists and this one had some ring reputation in his home city.

Lachanauer learned that Sharkey was not known personally to Farley, and conceived the idea of impersonating him and thus being able to reach Farley and "get the goods' on the big chief. Lachanauer had been a pugilist known to the ring as Young Willie Meehan, and in addition learned that he bore a striking resemblance to Sharkey.

In the meantime arrests of several dope peddlers in Windsor and Detroit brought further knowledge of the Montreal ring, so Lachanauer determined to put his plan into operation.

NEW SPECIE OF BASS BELIEVED DISCOVEREY BY U. OF M. SCIENTIST

Carl L. Hubbs curator of fishes of the University of Michigan museum has announced a recent discovery of a new species of black bass which he calls the Kentucky bass for want of a better name or until such time as scientists in fish culture either approve or disapprove his alleged discovery.

Hubbs, like other ichthyolagists has received specimens of this fish taken during a fish survey now under way in the state of Oklahoma.

At first taken for a hybrid between small and large mouth he now announces that it is a distinct and entirely different species from the well known small mouth and large mouth members of the bass family.

The new bass looks as if he had the tail fin of a small mouth grafted onto the body of a young largemouth.

Other characteristics Hubbs call attention to are; Near the back rather indefinite crosswise markings of distinctive appearance are developed as a sort of imitation of the cross bars of young smallmouth. Down toward the belly the spots such as found in a large month are numerous and are regularly arranged to from lengthwise rows.

The form of the new bass is rakish suggesting the build of a wall eye. The front or shiny part of the back fin is almost as low and as rounded as in the small mouth not being almost trangular in outline and cut from the rest of the fin as in the large mouth.

LINDBERGH HOUSE OF BIRTH IN DETROIT MARKED BY TABLET

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, trans atlantic flier, who is touring the country by airplane to stimulate interest in aviation was schéduled to visit Detroit August ten.

A feature of the ceremonies in honor of Col. Lindbergh was the unveiling of a tablet at 1120 Forest avenue west, marking the place where the flier was born.

The tablet was unveiled by Miss Adelaide Lodge, a daughter of the late Dr. Edwin Lodge. Her father was an uncle of Mrs. Evangeline L. Lindbergh, the flier's mother.

MICHIGAN MOUSE IS CHAMP JUMPER

A Michigan mouse holds the worlds record for the standing broad jump in proportion to his size of course. The jumping mouse known to science as 'zapus hunsonicus' a diminutive rodent about eight inches long, five of these inches being tail can, and does cover in a single leap a distance of twelve feet, eighteen times its total length.

If a deer could do this it would make forty five yards in a bound, which would come mighty near to changing stalking into wing shooting.

"Zap" is found throughout Michigan and incidentally from Bering Straits to Nova Scotia and from Hudson Bay to Virginia — a little yellow brown mouse with a tail a long way behind him.

Now you must not get the idea that Zap makes these record jumps every time he desires to go somewhere for he does not. Ordinarily he gets along just like any other mouse: but when in the pursuit of life, liberty and happiness he has to jump, and it is often, he has a fancy brand of pick up.

You see, just about every flesh-eating bird or animal considers mice as staple items of diet; as a famous naturalist once remarked; "the principal function of the rodents seems to be to turn grass into flesh for the benefit of their betters". He might have said "for their biggers."

This is quite true, for were itnot for the millions of small rodents we should have few carnivorous animals and birds and on the other hand were it not for the carnivorous birds and animals we should soon be overrun by the most prolific order of animals the world has ever known—the rodentia or gnawers.

ABSENT VOTER'S ERRORS UPSET ELECTION RESULT

Failure to place absent voter's ballots in the mail is a fatal defect. Circuit Judge Vanderwerp ruled in Muskegon court. Fifty-two absent voter's ballots were handed to the township clerk by other than the voters, and Judge Vanderwerp ruled that they could not be counted. As a result, Edward S. Upton replaces John Sternberg as highway commissioner in Norton Township. Another absent voter's ballot cast by Mrs. Caroline Torent, who died eight days before the election was thrown out also.

But back to Zap and his tail. Another well known naturalist estimates that he, Zap has to jump for his life on the average of three times a day.

The articles which appeared last week in the daily papers concerning Judge Gary, furnish an up-to-date example of the manner in which the Associated Press employs its tremendous power in white washing the misdeeds of the Country's Big Business men. This attitude might be expected when it is remembered that the Associated Press with 80,000 correspondents is controlled by only 15 men most of them being wealthy publishers whose interests are identical with those of Gary's. Five years ago, Mr. SinClair who has the honor of being the most widely read American writer in European nations furnished a more accurate picture of Gary than did the A. P. Said SinClair in speaking of Gary: "This man pays more money to spies and provocateurs in one year than the Czar of all the Russians paid in ten years —whose hands are slimy with the blood of union organizers shot down in cold blood" In addition Gary practically controlled the great Methodist institution, Northwestern University by financial gifts yet the Protestant churches as a whole were strongly opposed to Gary's tactics as is shown by the report of the Inter-church Federation which bitterly criticized his methods.

Canada Is Sopping Wet in Principle and In Deed

We note by late advices that the Dominion of Canada has given our own government to understand no toleration will be given dry patrols in Canadian waters, which is as good as a warrant that the present administration of Ontario is wet in principal and a long site wetter in character. Whisky has again gone on record in the neighboring province as "boss." Nothing so unfortunate could have happened to America as this. The facts are that previous to the backsliding of Ontario's electorate it was difficult to keep the boozers on this side of the border where they could be watched, and now it is simply impossible to keep the law intact, although the state is well policed. The fact remains however, that the Canadian and the Britisher alike are long-time satellites of the jug and the barrel, and they probably always will be. Temperance agitators have as a rule been rough housed in England, the Mother country. In London and other cities the sentiment is largely controlled by the great middle class and in cities the slums produce a hodge podge of anti-temperance.

In our own state we do not hear as much about Canadian rum runners as we did simply because a great mob of thirsty Americans are rushing across the border to satiate their burning throats and returning in a more or less soggy condition. This is perhaps an improvement on the old style of bringing liquor into this country and drinking it at home.

Nobody knows where it will all end and the Anti Saloon League has a far call to get busy and produce a propaganda to overcome such succulent states of mind. Boat load after boatload and train-load after trainload of Americans now go across for these reasons. Of course they aren't the highest type of civilization—just such folks as we have always had with us and always will, people who obey the laws when they are forced to it—but who will not if they can escape it. They are a fun-loving happy-go-lucky lackadaisical set. Their good times have to come at the expense of sobriety; they have scruples against strict Sunday observance and are always rooting for Sunday ball games or barnyard golf. We are not designating the happy-go-luckys as bad citizens—far from it—but they're a law unto themselves, and when the constitution of the good old U. S. A. is laid aside by any class in favor of a preamble of their own manufacture, there is something "rotten in Denmark".

Obituary

Catherine McGregor, daughter of Hamilton and Eliza McGregor, was born in Canandaigua, New York January 15, 1850 and departed this life at her home in Wheatland, Hillsdale Co. on August 21, 1927

When a young girl she came to Michigan and lived in the home of her uncle, Robert McGregor until 1873 at which time she was united in marriage to Joseph L. Beecher of Wheatland.

The demise of Mr. Beecher occurred on June 7, 1925.

Mrs. Beecher leaves to mourn one sister, Mrs. F. C. Crego of Ionia Mich., two brothers, Wm. and George McGregor of Shepherd, Michigan, many neices, nephews and friends.

After the loss of her husband, Mrs. Beecher seemed to lose interest in life and eagerly awaited the time when they would be united in the great Beyond.

The influence of Catherine Beecher was wide spreading. Her expressions of love and kindness to all who came in touch with her will be long remembered and cherished. To help others always gave her delight and pleasure.

A quieting hand was laid upon her as she slept and the summons "to join the innumerable caravan" was a quiet drifting, a gentle touch without sound or hurt like a door that is softly closed.

The funeral services were largely attended and were conducted Wednesday at 10:00 a. m. A profusion of beautiful flowers testified to the esteem in which she was held. Rev. Wylie of North Adams officiated and interment took place in the Pease cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our gratitude to all those contributing flowers as tokens of esteem; to Mrs. Grace Westcott and Frances Young for music and to Rev. Wylie for words of consolation.

CAUTION

gets results

70% of the accidents at grade crossings last year occurred in daylight.

63% occurred where there was no obstruction to a clear view of the crossing.

In a large majority of the accidents the automobile drivers were familiar with the crossings.

And 20% of the accidents were caused by the automobile running into the train.

These are the outstanding facts about grade crossing accidents—the growing number of which has become a national problem.

The railroads were the prime movers in the inauguration of organized safety. And for years they have undertaken every measure within their ability to promote it.

Passenger fatalities have been reduced by more than 67%, and accidents to railroad employees are less than a third of what they were twenty years ago.

Caution gets results.

Grade crossing accidents can be reduced tremendously if caution will be exercised by the individual, encouraged by the authorities and enforced by public opinion.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE ANYWAY

Mr. Tex Rickard will some day write an enlightening book on prize figthers— after he gets thru with both. Just now he feels that the radio takes part of his profits.

At the million dollar fight there was one seat unsold, until quite late in the afternoon. Mr. Rickard suggest that listeners on the radio should pay twenty five cents each for the pleasure of enjoying fight details. That would produce a five or ten million dollar fight and enable Mr. Rickard to begin, sooner writing his book, "Gloves I Have Put on Others."

Some people suggest that as the Government can control radio it should forbid broadcasting brutal and bloody details of prize fighting in millions of homes. Government will not allow moving pictures of prize fights to be carried from one State to another. Why allow the story by radio to be carried into every State.

It is the broadcasting of prize fights that eventually will STOP prize fighting. Clergymen. listening in, will combine to stop the brutality and they wil be able to do it. The wonder is that they have not done so already. Prize fighting is a REAL moral issue and important than Jonah and the whale or Darwin and monkeys.

FEED HAY FIRST—THEN SILAGE

In general it makes little difference in production what order of feeding is used so long as the same order is milking cows that must consume large practice each day. But with heavy quantities of both silage and legume hay, it is probably better to feed the hay first and then fill up on silage; if silage is fed first they will not eat enough of the hay to furnish all the minerals needed for milk production. To prevent silage flavors from getting into the milk, the silage should be fed just after rather than before or during milking. Grain may be fed either before or after the roughage.

ADVANCE IS SEEN IN CATTLE PRICE

Prospects for the cattle industry during the next year or eighteen months appear decidedly favorable the department of agriculture said in its August cattle outlook report but do not justify expansion in breeding herds.

"Market receipts of cattle and calves during the fall of nineteen twenty seven are expected to be the smallest for any corresponding period in the past five years" said the report. "The number of cattle on farms and ranges has decreased about ten millon head during that period, most of the reproduction being in cattle kept primarily for beef production."

Favorable feed and pasture conditions in most of the range states and the 'general optimism" pervading the industry, the report said, are expected to result in holding back considerable numbers of breeding cattle and young stock curtailing market receipts.

'Prospects favor a continuation of the general upward trend in cattle prices which has been in evidence for the past three years", the department added, although a seasonal decline probably will occur late in the fall, the prospects are that it wil be less than usual."

TELEVISION DEVICE IS USED IN PAPER MILL

The photo-electric cell, the marvellous new device that has made television possible, is being used expermentally at one of the Kalamazoo paper mills to regulate the flow of paper through rollers so as to give it a uniform thickness.

Whether it is to be a success in paper manufacturing can not be definitely told yet, it was stated if it is, the photo-electric cell will have a wonderful future in the commercial and industrial world it was stated by Prof. Paul Roid, of the Western State Normal School who first announced that the device was being tried out in Kalamazoo. It already is being used in food factories for the automatic control of ovens and produce dealers are experimenting with it to separate good from poor seed corn.

The photo electric cell is highly sensitive to charges in the density of the light that strikes it. By means of auxiliary apparatus, it decreases the thickness of the paper as it flows through the roller when the light passing through the paper to the cell grows dimmer, as it does when the paper is too thick Conversely, it increases the thickness of the sheet when the light is passing through the paper is too bright, as it is when the paper is too thin.

Some idea of the delicacy and precision of the instrument may be gained from the fact that it is capable of varying the thickness of paper by one five thousandth of an inch. By passing an opaque object between the cell and the stream of light that controls it, the machinery can be stopped entirely.

GLACIAL LAKE IS BIRD SANCTUARY

Ancient glaciers giuged out of the rolling plains of south Central Michigan, a depressio nabout seven miles long and from one to two miles wide. Springs and brooks filled it up and settlers come into the land and named the resultant body of steel blue water Gull Lake. It shimmers in the sun like a mirror laid down in northwestern Calhoun County, overlapping into Kalamazoo and Barry Counties. It is framed in hills of gentle slopes that the yet clothed considerably with the primeval forest growth which James Fennimore Cooper made famous in literature as the "Oak Openings".

Gulls habited there in the early days, and are still to be seen, in diminished numbers. Of wild fowl, not to speak of other forms of desirable wild life. there must have been legion in those early days but the trail of the hunter lies over alll. The honk of wild geese may still be heard occasionally by the human denizen of Gull Lake. but far off. and high up. It is planned now to call down and invite again to tarry on this and nearby lesser lakes the high flying flocks of geese and other boreal birds that seasonally wing between the feeding grounds of lower latitudes.

Gull Lake is to become the wildfowl sanctuary. The first .steps have been taken. The state legislature has decreed that the lake and a land zone eighty rods wide all around it shall be sanctuary henceforth for wild fowl, and W. K. Kellogg Battle Creek food manufacturer. whose name is on the the lake. has acquired a great area of land on and contiguous to the lake for the purpose of furnishing refuge and feeding grounds

Modern Gull Lake is a summer resort. In the forest growth of the shores and islands nestles what amounts to widespread town. Houseed indwellings that range in size and pretension from the cottage of the week-ender to stately brick and stucco mansions of the wealthy is a population of seven or eight thousand

IMLAY PREPARES FOR FAIR RACES

PAGE MR. JONAH—JUST LOOK AT THE SIZE OF THIS SHARK!

THE whale that held Jonah in his innards for three days had nothing on this shark. This finny masticator— (safely caught and killed)--was found to have a mouth capacity large enough to accommodate a good sized man. Our photo shows one fellow completely submerged within the shark. Incidentlly, these same two fellows caught the big walloper.

DEBUTANES GRAB 'OLD LADY' COLORS

For a time designers had extreme difficulty getting some of their patrons into gray and mauve. The reason was that these are known as old ladie's colors. But the debutantes. who take what they want when they can get it, seized on the soft tints with avidity and the women in their thirties followed soon. Tans and brown are coming back, but are more often chosen for early fall ensembles.

Even though milady's attention may wander to her fall wardrobe, her immediate interest is this summer's wardrobe.

The feminine imagination seems utterly unable to give up printed materials, even though the designs themselves change with the seasons.

The secret of being chic in a printed frock is simply this. The color or colors must be becoming to your coloring, fairly smart in the mode and the size of the print must be considered in relation to the size of your figure and, of course of your personality. A tiny dainty floral print for instance, looks ridiculous on a statuesque lady who takes a size forty four, but enormous circles or chevrons in a bold colored design completely snuff out the individuality of the smaller woman.

It would be an error to say that the prints of this summer are either smaller or larger than heretofore.

But enough of prints, because while they are actually worn and sponsored by smart women this summer they are not necessarily imperative to chic.

Why has the smart woman actually sponsored lace after figuratively snifling at it for so many seasons. Because lace has grown up. It has followed the urge of the age, and acquired a studied simplicity, which makes it eligible to the smart wardrobe.

Even shadow lace lends itself to tailoring and in so doing acquires just the proper blend of femininity and sophistication that is the keynote of the summer mode.

But there will always be the woman who looks her best in single tone and this does not mean that she is any the less smart by this preference. If you can not wear prints with assurance, do not attempt them.

White is always a summer favorite—smarter this season when softly tinged with beige or grey. Greens and blues are no new story, but yellow is. Almost over night this golden color of the sun is sponsored by smart women in a variety of shades that range from a cream color to orange. An occsional frock of soft rose is noted more for individualism than style.

We read much of the sleeveless sport frock this spring, but here it is August and it is not yet actually sponsored by l'elegante.

MALLARDS ARE NESTING IN MONROE CLUB MARSH

Many mallard ducks are nesting in the marshes owned by the Pointe Mouller Shooting club, north of Monroe in Berlin township along Lake Erie.

Most of these ducks formerly were in the marshes east and south of the government canal, but left because of the distasteful water in the creeks running through the marshes. This water at times has a yellow color. also black and green, being waste water dumped into the River Raisin. some of which spreads out into the creeks The River Raisin and these creeks empty into Lake Erie.

As the wild rice, an ecellxent food. is plentiful this year the feathered tribe will remain along time here abouts, it is predicted. There is also a great quantity of wild celery at the bottom of Lake Erie this year, another great sustenance for the duck family.

COMMERCE ROAD NOW IS OPENED TO TRAFFIC

In order to permit traffic over the new Commerce road, Oakland county road authorities have opened the stretch of concrete. CLASSES OF HALF CENTURY STILL NEIGHBORS

Four members of the Central high school's graduating class of Grand Rapids fifty years ago still reside in Grand Rapids. They are O. B. Wilmarth, secretary of the Grand Rapids Store Equipment corporation; General W. H. Loomis, insurance representative; Charles E. Miller and George B. Daniels.

These four met recently at a dinner at the Peninsular club to recall their experiences of a half century ago when they had just been graduated from high school. That year the seniors in the high school had mustaches and wore long coats, tight trousers and boots.

In those days farmers used to haul stove wood into the city over Ionia avenue, which is nowadays congested with automobile traffic. Their boy companions drove cows to pasture in the fields along Grand river on a part of which is located the Union station and the railroad yards.

Professor E. A. Strong, after whom Strong junior high school was named was principal of the high school in eighteen seventy seven. There were twenty seven members of the graduating class that year.

TRUCKS GAINING IN FRUIT REGION

The motor truck is becoming of increasing importance in the marketing of Michigan's fruit crop. H. H. Shoemaker local representative of the United States Bureau of Agricultural Economics, reports in his summary of last years fruit deals in this state. Copies of the summary were received here recently.

While accurate data on the amount of apples, peaches pears and grapes moved by motor trucks is lacking. Mr. Shoemaker said it is conservatively estimated that fully as many carloads of fruit were moved to market last year by motor vehicles as were hauled by rail and boat.

Peach shipments formed a big share of the truck business. Michigan's peach crop last year filled approrimately one million five hundred sixty four thousand bushels yet only six hundred seventy five cars were shipped by rail and boat. In the days before the commercial development of the motor truck a fifteen hundred thousand bushel crop would yield from one thousand two hundred to two thousand cars for shipment by rail and boat. The difference between these totals and the actual rail movement last year is taken to represent the tonnage hauled to market by motor trucks and the quantity purchased by canning factories near sources of production.

Mr. Shoemaker observed that commercial truck lines have been developed to haul Michigan fruit direct to consuming markets.

'Careful estimates of the amount of grapes trucked from southwestern Michign to Chicago during the months of September and October indicate approximately six hundred forty one cars, his summary states.

Michigan fruit growers can safely plant more Bartlett and Seckel pears, the Federal market specialist says. He believes there will be a good strong demand for these varieties if the fruit is well graded and packed.

Canners he said have opened a new market for Kieffer pears.

CORN SHIPPING METHOD CHANGED

An amendment to the European corn borer quarantine just announed by Secretary of Agriculture William M. Jardine, will simplify the methods of making inspections of shelled corn for shipment from the infested districts this fall

The department states that the season's administration of the regulations requiring the inspection and certification of shelled corn has resulted in the general adoption of adequate cleaning methods throughout the infested areas.

This fact makes it possible to administer the regulations by subsituting for the separate examination of each car or sack of corn, less expensive but equally efficient measures, namely, inspection of dealers premises at frequent intervals; dealer's agreements to comply with the regulations, and regular inspection of corn in transit to see that dealers are complying with such agreements.

Under the amended regulations each dealer who desires to ship corn out of the infested areas will be required to shell the corn and to maintain equipment capable of cleaning it so as to eliminate cobs and debris; also to file a signed a-agreement not to ship to uninfested States until it has been shelled and carefully cleaned. Inspections will be made from time to time to be sure that the dealers are complying with these provisions.

Certificates good for thirty days from the date of inspection will be issued in place of the forms used last year which were valid only on the individual shipments examined

Those affected by the change are dealers in both seed corn and corn for feeding, in the European corn borer infested parts of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan Indiana West Virginia, New Jersey, New York and the New England states.

The simplest plan to provide a more or less permanent pasture of sweet clover is to permit the crop to go to seed. After several years the surface soil becomes so full of sweet clover seed that a volunteer crop appears each year. Fields of this kind, which have been in sweet clover continuously for 10 or more years, are not uncommon.

BEET AVERAGE LARGE IN GRATIOT COUNTY

With the outlook for the Gratiot county beet crop considerably above the average the company is making extensive improvements at the Holland -- St. Louis plant, preparatory to the annual sugar campaign. Beet dumps are being moved and remodeled, which will greatly relieve the congested traffic conditions. This change will be much more convenient for the farmers to unload. There is an increase of about 1,000 acres of sugar beets in Gratiot county this year. Indications point to an early harvest.

WORLD'S RAREST TURTLE GIVEN MICHIGAN SCIENTIST

Dr. A. G. Ruthven, zoologist of the University of Michigan, has been presented with one of the rarest turtles in existence. It is the only soft shelled turtle in the world and came to the university from the Smithsonian Chrysler expedition to Africa. The annimal is more at home on dry land than in water and is kept confined in a small glass case and, like all members of the turtle family is content to sleep away most of its existence.

EATING PEAS IS EASY WITH THE RIGHT 'TOOL'

THE next time you're served peas and find them hard to catch, do what pretty Alyce Mills above did. Not being able to corral them on the ordinary table knife, she hit on the idea of inventing a special "pea knife"—a broad blade of steel grooved wide and deep down the middle to accommodate a row of peas perched side by side. Photo shows how it works.

That invention should prove welcome to long-suffering humanity—especially to those of us whose lips and mouth ends bear the scars of many a sharp knife tussle with the peas. Thanks—Miss Mills.

PIRATE RUM SHIP ONCE PRIDE OF G. L.

The recent capture of the steamer Turner, seized by New York coast guardsmen as a liquor runner, revealed that thirty five years ago the ship was the pride of the Great Lakes ore carriers.

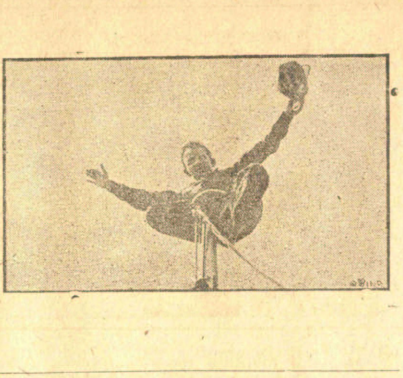
When the Turner made her maiden voyage through the Soo locks as an ore boat, few imagined the checkered career that was in store for her. Built by Alexander McDougall at Superior, she was designed as a whaleback upon the supposition that the waves would break more lightly over the cigar-shaped hull. Very few of these boats known as "pigs" are now seen on the lakes.

Having seen her best days as an ore carrier, the ship then began a more or less infamous career, sailing under the names, Trader, Blue Hill, Yuma, President Estrada and Catrera. Government officials declare she is technically a pirate ship.

THE MAN WHO STARTED THE 'FLAGPOLE SITTING' EPIDEMIC

LITTLE did Alvin "Shipwreck" Kelly—pictured at the right—dream that his stunt of sitting atop the flagpole of the St. Francis Hotel, Newark, N. J. for eight days and nights would bring out a lot of competitors. Since then, Joe Powers broke Kelly's records by lashing himself to the top of the flagpole on the Morrison Hotel in Chicago and stayed there over sixteen days.

And now—some woman down in St. Louis has announced that she'll try the racket and demonstrate that women are just as adept at it as men.



MICHIGAN TO APPLY NEW LAWS FOR GREATER SAFETY

The new Uniform Motor Vehicle Act which elimates the speed limit outside of cities and villages, but adds many new regulations designed to increase the safety of travel, becomes effective in Michigan on September five. Under the new law motorists must operate their cars at a "careful and prudent speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic surface and width of the highway and any other conditions then existing, and no person shall drive any vehicle on a highway at a greater speed than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead.'

In case of a collision between cars where both motorists are violating the law the question of who shall be held for damages shall be a question of fact.

There wil be no more arrests for speeding on rural highways in Michigan. In the future all motorists not obeying the regulations as to speed wil be charged with reckless driving.

Speeding complaints will continue in cities and villages however where the fifteen mile speed limit is in the business section and twenty mile an hour speed limit in the residence section will remain in force.

The new act is designed to decrease grade crossing accidents, and the State Highway Commissioner is authorized to erect signs at dangerous crossings, making it necessary for vehicles to come to a complete stop. It shall be unlawful for vehicles to proceed when warning signals are in operation at grade crossings without first coming to a complete stop, within the rural highway.

It is understood that the State Highway Department will take steps at once to designate certain dangerous crossings and erect signs making it necessary for motorists to stop their cars.

The only exceptions made in regard to the seed limit on rural high ways is in regard to heavy trucks. The speed of vehicles exceeding eighteen thousand pounds in weight with or without trailer, shall be fifteen miles an hour.

Vehicles of five thousand weight must not move faster than twenty-five miles an hour while a vehicle or combination of vehicles of greater than forty feet in length shall not exceed twenty miles an hour.

The speed regulations do not apply to buses operating under the Michigan Public Utilities Commission. The speed of buses will remain at thirty miles an hour.

Regulations are provided in passing another car. A warning must be given and the driver must give the right of way to the vehicle desiring to pass. It will be unlawful for a driver to speed up his automobile when another car desires to pass. Signals must be given as at present when a vehicle is to be stopped or turn made.

Under the new law all vehicles entering trunk line highways must stop. In the past, stop signs have been erected, but it has not been a violation if the motorist failed to stop.

The size, height, construction and equipment of vehicles are regulated by the new law, although farm machinery is exempted. No vehicle shall be more than ninety six inches in width ,and no load shall be carried exceeding fourteen feet in height. No vehicles including load shall exceed forty feet in length and no combination of vehicles shall exceed more than sixty feet in length.

The usual provisions regarding mirrors, lights, horns and the like are included in the law.

The new law is designated to eliminate so called 'spee d traps' where it has been charged that the officer works in conjunction with the justices. Provision is made that on the arrest of a motorist for other than a felony, he must be taken at once before the nearest justice if he so desires. If no justice is available notice shall be given the motorist in writing to appear.

A new feature of the law is that if the motorist fails to appear the Secretary of State is to revoke the license until the motorist does appear in court. Motorists from out of the state if not taken at once before a justice, can deposit twenty-five dollars as bail and a receipt must be given. If the motorist fails to appear, the money is held in lieu of fine.

The officer must forthwith make a written report to the justice, not to turn over the money constitutes embezzlement of public money.

Another wonderful feature of the law is that every justice or police judge shall keep a report of every case in which a person is charged and if a conviction is obtained, a report must be made to the Secretary of State. It has not been necessary to make reports to the state in the past. Courts of record must report also as to convictions within ten days. Failure to make such reports shall constitue misconduct in office and shall be grounds for removal.

TAXLESS VILLAGE FROM HALL PROFITS AIM OF PRESIDENT

Just as the casino at Monte Carlo provides revenue sufficient to maintain the government of Monaco without taxation so will the village hall pavillion of Eastlake near Manistee relieve the people of their taxes and provide funds for paving and making other improvements.

At least such is the prediction of Bill Germayne the village Pres. Germayne the son of the famous plainsman and guide "Wild Bill Germayne" became a globe trotter as a young man. He visited many countries of Europe and Asia making photographs for New York papers in a day before there were syndicates to supply pictures. It was on one such trip that he visited Monte Carlo and learned how the prince of Monaco obtains his revenue.

It was natural that when Germayne became president of Eastlake four years ago he should recall the casino for the village was laboring under heavy taxes and many homes were sold at tax sale. The lumber mills had left and work was scarce.

One year ago Germayne induced the village board to buy an old pavilion built several years ago by a lumber company for its employees. A hall committee was appointed to devise means of making it pay the village profit.

Dances are held each week and the hall is rented for theatrical ventures and entertainments. The hall has just about paid for itself in addition to providing offices for the village officials.

Let's Drive the Poultry Thieves out of Michigan

Stealing chickens, ducks and turkeys from the farms of this State has proven so profitable that we are fighting an organized gang of bandits who use motor trucks to rush their spoils to city markets. It has got to stop.

The Michigan Business Farmer has set aside ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00) to be paid in rewards to anyone, including state and county police officers, who secures the evidence and conviction of poultry thieves who steal chickens, ducks, turkeys or guinea fowl from its subscribers.

FIRST REWARD PAID

Frank Watkins, R. 2, Holly, Michigan, was paid the first reward under this offer. The thief he caught served 30 days in the Oakland county jail and paid $65 fine. Frank has $50 to show for ridding Michigan of one poultry thief.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Can The Church Teach Morality And Citizenship?

"Now let us take up the case of Fritz. Fritz has been arrested four times: once for jumping trucks once for truancy, once for stealing from a storage warehouse, and this time for assisting a bootlegger in the delivery of some bad liquor."

The scene was a conference of social workers and psychologists. For months they had been working together blending sympathy and science in their earnest and intelligent effort to help girls and boys. They had probed into heredity, and home life and school treatment, into physical condition and mental ability, searching for causes They had prescribed and directed readjustments which had resulted in changing the lives of scores of problem children. They were makers of character, salvaging citizens Yet during their many hours of work, only once did anyone mention that a Sunday school might be expected to have a beneficial effect upon any case. At the suggestion, a smile of condescending amusement passed over the faces of these experienced workers.

"A Sunday school? Well, really —!"

Why not a Sunday school? Surely the church has tried unceasingly of late years to interpret its efficacy in terms of character results. Surely there is potency yet in the dream of the despised Galilean who foresaw a Kingdom of Heaven in which men should do unto others as they wanted others to do unto them! Surely in generation after generation men have come to leadership in the life of the world, bringing with them memories of faithful Sunday school training. Surely there has never been a day when churches were more concerned with the development of effective methods of religious education than they are today. Could these social workers have heard the testimony of the Brooklyn judge who found among thousands of juvenile offenders, only five who had been fairly regular in Sunday school attendance?

As a matter of fact, such evidence leaves many students of child development very dubious. Some of them point out that going to Sunday school regularly may be a result of good character, not a cause. Like the wearing of clean shirts, and the speaking of correct English, church relationship is a symptom of good home life, some contact with popularly accepted moral standards, willingness to conform to convention, and other effective forces. What other evidence is there that the church can and does teach morality and citizenship?

Let us look first at the curricula which it provides for religious education. A recent survey conducted for the Federal Council of Churches and published by Religious Education (February, 1925) indicates that the average Protestant child who attends Sunday school spends less than ten minutes per year upon matters having some relationship to law. This includes all the time spent in reading the Bible, listening to the teacher or classmates, writing, thinking, engaging in activities or discussing such questions as how we got the commandments, which law is, how God's law is related to the laws of cities, counties and states, the basis of moral law, the obligation of obedience to the law, the source of authority in a democracy, etc.

The report studies particularly the prohibition question. If all the Biblical material, all the matter treating of the effects of alcohol on health, conduct, politics, economic factors, all the suggestions about self control, temperate eating, effects of tobacco, the history of the temperance movement, the justifications for the Eighteenth Amendment, be put together and added to the material dealing with law, the result would be a total of about seventy-five minutes per year. Can anyone presume that an hour and a quarter in the course of a year, given to the sixty percent of the enrolled children who chanced to be present, with half the time spent in exhortation and discussion which often is dry and uninteresting to the children, represents adequate preparation for handling a situation now becoming a grave issue in national life?

On questions such as sex ethics, economic justice, racial brotherhood, or international peace the situation is even less encouraging. Because adult leaders of the church have been unable to come to agreement upon these issues, the vital phases of the topics have been almost ignored in the curricula of religious education. It is probably safe to estimate that the average child who goes to Sunday school at all gets not more than ten minutes per year of instruction related directly to any of these issues. Because the past generation has been unable to find its way through on such involved and perplexing questions, the coming generation shall spend little or no time worrying about them! It does seem odd, doesn't it? One would suppose that an institution trying to teach morality and citizenship would be spending most of its time with the heated, controversial questions which are so unsettled and so significant that part of the adult world thinks the rest of the world is in a fair way to wreck civilization by its proposed policies.

Test Your Lung Capacity

The farm folks are about to announce a new novelty in the form of tests for the best and highest pitched cow caller in Michigan. This will be pulled off at the State Fair in Detroit September 5 to 12 and "Co Boss, Co" will echo from one end of the grounds to the other when the leather lunged contestants get into action. Whether these farmers are trying to awaken interest in the common things of life or are just putting up April fool stunts to amuse themselves nobody knows, at any rate a prize is offered for the "best" caller, whatever that means. It is expected that all the boys from down on the Amazon and up on the Sault will be present and give practical demonstrations of what a first class bellowing can accomplish when it is backed by 180 pounds of good physique and plenty of wind. George Washington crossed the Delaware in his retreat and history we believe relates how he did the job in the dark hours of night and in a fog. There was no way of knowing whether the boats were making toward the opposite shore or just traveling with the current in the darkness, so the Father of His Country offered a prize to the toughest loudest lunged husky in his army and after thet it was easy. The soldier was stationed on the opposite bank of the river and at intervals of about two minutes he let out that awful steam fog horn yell which penetrated the thickest fog and even aroused the drunken Hessians Tradition doth not say what the Father of the country offered this man but probably it was a square meal which the latter hadn't received for six months. We are not certain whether men are born with as good lungs as in Revolutionary times but we are positive that from the noise made by some of the rural boys just after the corn borer clean-up was announced they could hold their own at the cow calling contest all right.

In the death of James Oliver Curwood Michigan loses one of her most brilliant book authors for who has not read "The River's End" or "The Flaming Forest" two of his most outstanding works? J. O. Curwood was born in Owosso June 12th, 1878 and his boyhood days were passed near Vermillion Ohio. Supposedly he attended the Owosso schools and later the University of Michigan and has always lived in the home town, but has made many trips to the North Country where the scenes of many of his novels were laid. His first novel appeared in 1908, after he had spent 7 years as a newspaper writer. His books seem to have the punch and thrill of a highly successful writer, and sell very readily. Some of his stuff has been transformed into cinema work. He is survived by his wife, two daughters and one son. He was greatly interested in the vast stretches of Canadian Northwest and his yarns of the Mounted Police of Canada are very interesting reading.

Canada Is Sopping Wet in Principle and in Deed

The Michigan State Police have been instructed that any suspicion of wrong doing is sufficient reason for search and seizure and we know this is a fact, as Hillsdale County officers have proved. A probable nine-tenths of the arrests in Hillsdale county have been brought about by mere suspicious appearances without one iota of other evidence. Time after time our officers have been attracted to investigate an automobile because it didn't look right. Otherwise nothing would have been done—since the drivers were total strangers here. This method has landed many an unfortunate rum runner in Hillsdale jail.

Canadian whiskey is seeping through the mesh, it is boiling and seething at Trenton, Wyandotte, River Rouge and most down river ports, but we are of the opinion the time is coming when the vanguard of law enforcement is going to mix with the rum row whether in Canadian waters or not, and Bro Canook will be jolted. Law enforcement is organized and its in deadly earnest, you bet.

Whereas, a well laden whiskey peddler was a joke two years ago, he's something with a much less polite name now—a name that's not fit to print, and he stinks to Heaven as far as law enforcement is concerned.

That Brother Canook should be allowed to use Detroit River ports as a dumping ground for his whiskey excrement does not seem quite right to law abiding Americans who are trying to purge the country of lawlessness. The excrement ought by rights to be dashed in Brother Canook's face. We have trimmed the lion's whiskers, and we can do it again.

Rich Soil in Hawaii

Wrote 3,000 Verses a Day

Lopez De Vega, the celebrated Spanish poet, novelist and playwright, was a most prolific writer. He composed 22,000,000 verses, or 3,000 verses for each day of his life, which extended from 1562 to 1625.

"The plan is simple. It provides, briefly, for the following: Regular and frequent Masses and other services in all sections of the district; regular hours for confession in all the missions; catechism classes, of one hour each, in each church on Saturday afternoon; catechetical instructions for children and adults in farm houses and other centers where it is difficult or impossible to reach the church for Saturday classes; correspondence courses of instruction for widely-scattered families; pastoral visits to every family in the district at least three times annually; complete and constantly-revised census; weekly and monthly reports from each priest, and weekly meetings of the priests to discuss the work.

"Each priest has his own room in the mission house at Lapeer, at his disposal at all times. However, the three who administer the outlying missions find that distances are too great for a trip home each night, so they occupy rooms in Catholic homes, or hotels. Likewise, meals are taken wherever it is possible to obtain them while the priest is at work in his district.

"The parish provides a small coupe for each priest, and gives him an allowance for its maintenance and operating expenses. Incidentally, the amount of travelling done by the priests is evidenced by the fact that it has been found economy to trade in these motor cars on new models each year, rather than to repair the ravages of country roads on the old automobiles.

"The success of the St. Philip Neri experiment is unquestioned; results have far exceeded the expectations of even the most optimistic promotors of the Society. Hundreds of people who were neglected—and neglectful—are receiving the benefits of religious direction. Children who otherwise would have grown up with no church affiliation are being administered to. This whole vast territory is as well taken care of, spiritually, as most of the big city parishes.

"Why is the experiment successful? Because, for the first time in the history of this district, the people are being given service; the kind of service the successful business man gives his customers. When they cannot come to the church, the church is taken to them."

THE HIDDEN KEY--AND OTHER FAKES

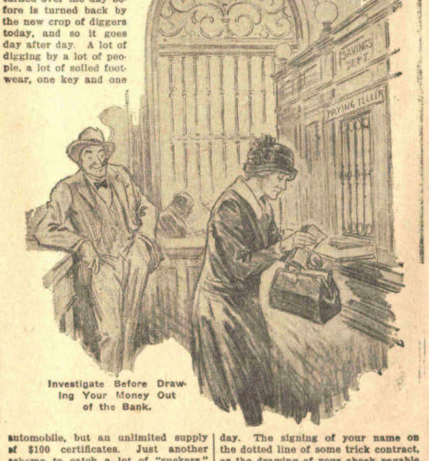
By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

HAVE you ever gone hunting for the hidden key—a key hidden by real estate dealers in order that you among hundreds of others might be given the exercise of tearing up the surface of some new subdivision looking for it? Talk about wild turkeys tearing up the "terra firma," they haven't anything on man. A new subdivision is put on the market. Public interest in the tract is needed, so a key that will open a box in the tract office is hidden beneath the earth's surface somewhere in the tract. This hidden key will open the box in the office and inside the box the lucky finder of the hidden key will find a valuable prize. It may be anything from a diamond ring to an order for an automobile. A new automobile stands in front of the office and presumably it is the prize.

W. R. MOREHOUSE

Picture in your own mind hundreds of eager searchers digging over the surface of a newly born boom subdivision, looking for the hidden key—the key to the big surprise box. About the time the diggers have been recruited to several hundred, the key shows up and the news of the discovery breaks. Soon the diggers gather around to see the mysterious box opened. Imagine the babble of joking remarks, some sarcastic and some expressing disappointment, as the grand prize is found to be a $100 certificate good as part payment on a lot, and not the new automobile. Day after day the hunt goes on, a new crop of diggers taking the places of those who have gone through the experience, with the same prize automobile serving as bait. The soil that was turned over the day before is turned back by the new crop of diggers today, and so it goes day after day. A lot of digging by a lot of people, a lot of soiled footwear, one key and one automobile, but an unlimited supply of $100 certificates. Just another scheme to catch a lot of "suckers."



Investigate Before Drawing Your Money Out of the Bank.

Nearly every person possesses the gambling instinct to a more or less degree. The truth is, the average American is more or less inclined to take unnecessary risks. In the realm of money making many are ready to take a long-shot chance in order to strike it rich, if possible.

Knowing the inclination of the average American to gamble, irresponsible schemers lie awake nights plotting as to the best way of arousing the gambling instinct of the investor, and when this has been done they proceed to fleece him out of his cash. By using various "baits" these get-rich-quick promoters are usually successful, especially among persons who are inexperienced in making investments and who neglect to investigate before they invest.

You can't get rich by dealing with promoters of the wild-cat type, but you can quickly lose what capital you have already saved. The road to the poorhouse is worn deep by the feet of persons who have dealt with irresponsible promoters and not by the feet of those who have a savings account or good bonds earning interest regularly and increasing in value day by day. The signing of your name on the dotted line of some trick contract, or the drawing of your check payable to some sharp real estate or other promoter, or the turning over of your cash, may spell financial ruin for you.

As a safeguard against losing your cash reserve, leave it in the bank until you have made a thorough investigation, which you can do without cost to you if you will consult your banker, or write to the National Better Business Bureau, New York.

Each day discloses new victims of some crooked scheme. Old schemes having lost their effectiveness as a result of exposure have given way to new schemes to defraud. The new schemes are even more deceptive than the old forms. Fractional-share schemes, territorial-rights schemes and co-operative land ventures are reaping a harvest for present promoters. Because so many new schemes are being formulated is another reason why you should investigate before you invest.

It might surprise many of our readers to know that there is still one tribe of Indians quite flourishing in Michigan and they are the remnants of the Pottawotamies whose reservation is a few miles east of Athens, Calhoun county and furthermore these Red Men are very religious and have requested for years that the Methodist church appoint a pastor to look after their church. They are now about to hold camp meeting on the reservation and a noted Methodist bishop returned from India and the local minister at Athens will be the main speakers on the program.

Weekly Report of the Sheriff's Office, Week Ending August 26th, 1927

Henry F. Dietz, of Hillsdale, was arrested Sunday morning on the complaint of his former wife that he had taken some jewelry belonging to her. A search of his personal effects failed to reveal any of the missing property. He was taken to Lansing on Monday, since the warrant was issued at that point.

Beryl Bloom of Toledo and Fremont Donnelly were arrested Sunday night at the Long Lake dance charged with intoxication. Donnelly, who claims the State of New York as his home, slipped away in the darkness. Bloom plead guilty before Justice Fitzsimmons the next day and was fined $20 and costs of $9.60 which were paid. Meanwhile Donnelly has returned to New York. The officers are not done with him, however. Watch this column for developments.

Clark C. Pierce, of Haslett, Mich., a former resident of Hillsdale, was brought here Monday on a Bodv warrant charging him with the non support of minor children.

After a hearing in Circuit Court on August 22nd, the much discussed and much fought over Buick car which was found at the Victor Fish place at the time of the raid on April 2nd, was ordered returned to it's original owner, Sterling Dusseau. Readers will remember that it was this car which brought Rollin Wilson into the toils of the law.

A detachment of the State Police, working under orders received directly from Lansing, confiscated a number of slot machines along U. S. 112 on August 20. On Monday, 5 men, who owned the filling stations and lunch rooms where the machines were being operated, appeared before Justice Aldrich and paid fines of $15 and costs each. These men were Fred Belcher, Tom Powers, John Doe, Joe Henn and Ed Riley.

Otto Ziegler was released on a new bond of $1500 on Wednesday.

Robert Norris, one time of Hillsdale Co., was arrested in Calhoun Co. on Friday on a Body Attachment. He was released Saturday after making a settlement which was satisfactory to the Circuit Court.

Albert Miller and Donald Wooden, both of Pulaski, were arrested Friday and charged with stealing four tires from a car belonging to the Simpson-Ely Co. of Litchfield. The boys confessed to the officers and were brought before Justice Fitzsimmons, charged with petty larceny. Sentence was deferred.

Thursday and Friday the Sheriff was in Traverse City attending the Convention of the Michigan State Sheriff's Association.

LaVerne VanCamp of Somerset Township was arrested Friday morning on a Body warrant issued from Jackson Co., charging non support. He was later released when he presented receipts showing that his payments were up to date.

Jay Pierson of Wheatland Township was arrested Saturday night on a warrant charging him with driving while drunk. He will be arraigned sometime Monday.

Lee Fletcher, of the County Farm, who spent a few days in jail during the past week and was returned to the County Farm on Friday is back in jail again. His one failing is that he won't "stay

From now on the reckless driver is going to have a much harder time convincing the authorities that he was not to blame. Under Michigan's new traffic law the old excuse, "I was not driving over thirty-five miles an hour", will no longer go. Cutting in and out of traffic passing other vehicles on curves or near a hill will be prima facie evidence of reckless driving. And the penalties for reckless driving are going to be far more severe than in the old days. True, out in the wide open stretches on the country lanes, where there is no traffic to speak of, one will be permitted to let his conscience be his guide, but it behooves him to have his car under control at all times. The old law fixed an approximate speed in the minds of motorists regardless of circumstances. The new law advises them to adjust their speed at all times to probable circumstances. It will be far better if one sees that his brakes are always kept in proper condition and that they regulate their course with judgment, rather than just a desire to get somewhere in a hurry.

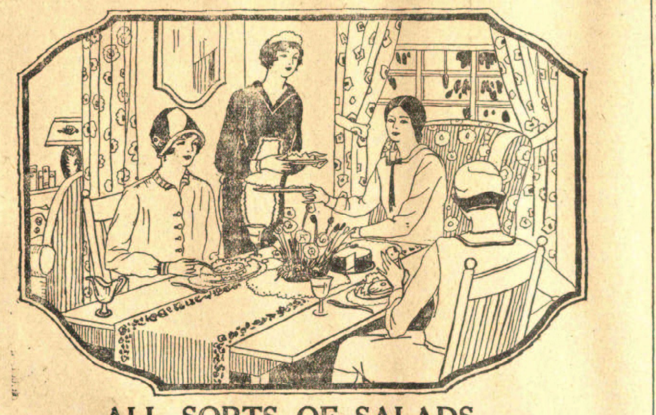
As we understand it the new law regarding railroad crossing signals requires every crossing in villages and towns to install an automatic danger signal light, part of the expense to be paid by the township and part by the railroad.



ALL SORTS OF SALADS

SUMMER or winter, cold days or hot, canned pineapple is at hand to lend its succulent gold to salads. It is always in season, and always a treat.

Most of us remember the first time we saw pineapple used in salad. It isn't so very long ago. Perhaps it was at a luncheon party where a slice was served on a lettuce leaf and sprinkled with blanched almonds. How good it tasted! It just fitted in after the Maryland chicken with sweet potatoes and peas. Everyone at the party resolved to introduce it into the home meals. Soon it was seen everywhere, in any course, in dishes hot or cold. It is amazing how many ways people are finding to use pineapple.

History Like a Romance

Indeed, the quick acceptance of pineapple by the American people as an everyday food reads like a romance. In 1892 an English nurseryman, Captain Kidwell, and his friend, John Emmeluth, after many difficulties shipped the first canned pineapple from Hawaii to the United States. They operated their modest canning plant until 1898, when they sold out, little suspecting what they had started. Then James D. Dole, a young Harvard man, came to Hawaii, intending to grow coffee. Instead, he became interested in pineapples. This fruit, he concluded, was the ideal crop of Hawaii, and canning the ideal way of sending it to market. So he urged his neighbors to plant pineapples, while he himself went back to Boston to raise money to build a cannery. In 1903 Dole's cannery put up 1893 cases of pineapples. Fifteen years later the output from Hawaii was 5,000,000 cases, and each year the number grows, as more people try canned pineapple and find it good.

"Praise from Sir Hubert"

So vast has this industry become in Hawaii that Hubert Work, Secretary of the Interior, who was recently escorted through the great Hawaiian Pineapple Company's cannery by Mr. Dole, said:

"Aside from the magnitude of the plant, what impressed me most was the cleanliness apparent everywhere, and the high health standard of the employees. Everyone looked happy and worked cheerfully. There can be no doubt but that the Hawaiian Pineapple Company ranks among the most advanced plants in the United States from the standpoint of size, sanitation and efficiency."

So, we shall always feel safe eating canned pineapple—indeed, many doctors have said that canned food is the safest food that comes to our tables—for we know that it has been picked in its fullest maturity, and canned with the utmost care and cleanliness. Its stimulating flavor is imprisoned in the cans, and we have only to open them to taste pineapple as it tastes in the fields of Hawaii.

Here are a few recipes for salads in which pineapple is the distinctive feature:

Pineapple Supper Salad: To make a salad for six people, mix one and a half cups of drained crushed pineapple with two cups finely shredded cabbage, one-half cup seedless raisins, one-half cup French or mayonnaise dressing, and arrange on shredded romaine or lettuce leaves.

Pineapple Waldorf Salad: Place slices of canned pineapple on crisp lettuce leaves. On top of each put a mound of chopped celery, diced apple, and walnuts, all well combined with mayonnaise. Decorate each serving with prunes stuffed with walnuts.

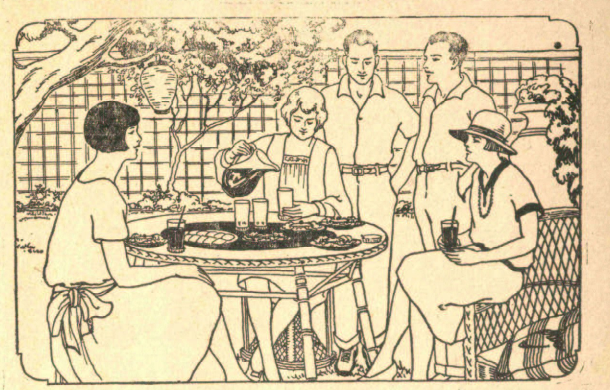
Mixed Fruit Salad: In the center of a nest of lettuce place a slice of canned Hawaiian pineapple. Arrange on top and around the pineapple, slices of orange, grapefruit, banana and dates. Thinly sliced fresh pear is also a welcome ingredient in this salad. Use a whipped cream or mayonnaise dressing.

Pineapple and Chicken Salad: For six people mix two cups of diced cooked chicken with three-fourths cup chopped celery, one cup drained sliced pineapple cut into small pieces, and one cup mayonnaise dressing. Arrange on lettuce leaves either shredded or whole, and garnish with thin slices of cucumber and stuffed olives.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese Salad: Arrange slices of pineapple on lettuce leaves, and in the center of each slice put a square of cream cheese decorated with slices of stuffed olive. On the outer rim of each slice of pineapple put thin rings of sweet green peppers and inside of these, slices of orange.

With any of these salads except that which has chicken in it a cooked pineapple dressing may be used if desired. The recipe for this dressing is as follows: Melt one tablespoon of butter in the top of a double boiler, add one tablespoon of flour, and one-eighth teaspoon of salt. Stir well and add one cup pineapple juice and two tablespoons lemon juice. When smooth, remove, chill and fold in one-half cup of whipped cream.

Spring-Time In the Hawaiian Islands



COOL SUMMER SALADS

THE most inviting spot after an exciting set of "doubles" is one where chairs are drawn up tete-a-tete near a table under a sheltering tree, where ice tinkles in tall glasses and a tempting salad is set forth on a cool nest of lettuce leaves.

Into this salad, whether it be one of meat, cheese, fruit or vegetable, the versatile pineapple finds its way. The cooling juices of canned Hawaiian pineapple are soothing to the throat while its tart tast adds the zest which youth demands.

The following summer salads present pineapple in some of its most alluring combinations.

Pineapple Salad De Luxe: Dice a cold boiled chicken and add two-thirds as much finely-cut celery as chicken. For each person place a slice of Hawaiian pineapple on a bed of lettuce leaves. On each slice lay four tips of canned asparagus and cover asparagus with chicken mixture. Garnish with slices of stuffed olives and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Treasure Island Chicken Salad: Mix two-thirds cup of drained, crushed Hawaiian pineapple with two cups chopped cooked chicken, one cup chopped celery, one-half cup chopped walnuts, one-half teaspoon salt. Garnish with lettuce or celery tips and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Oahu Island Salad: Remove skin from three bananas, cut in halves, then into quarters lengthwise and slice. Mix with one cup well-drained, crushed Hawaiian pineapple and mix thoroughly with French dressing. Set aside in a cold place at least one hour before serving. Serve on lettuce.

Hawaiian Pineapple Salad: Mix the contents of a medium-size can of Hawaiian pineapple tidbits (or slices of pineapple cut into pieces), one-half grapefruit sliced, one tart apple cut in small cubes. Place on crisp lettuce leaves and garnish with the contents of one small bottle of maraschino cherries. Serve with French dressing.

Pineapple and Cream Cheese Salad: Use the heart leaves of lettuce, arranging a ring of these on individual salad plates. On each ring place a whole slice of canned Hawaiian pineapple drained and slit across with a sharp knife so that it can be easily divided by the salad fork yet does not show the cutting. Rub a fresh cream cheese through a ricer or colander on the pineapple so that it stands up in light flakes, then with a teaspoon gently put in the hole of the pineapple guava or currant jelly. Finish by sprinkling with a French dressing in which lemon juice is used instead of vinegar. Serve fingers of whole wheat bread and butter with this salad.

Tomatoes Stuffed with Pineapple: Peel large ripe tomatoes, being careful to keep their shape. Cut a slice from the stem end of each and carefully remove pulp from the center. Cut the pulp in pieces and drain. Drain one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple and mix with the tomato pulp. Add one-half cup walnuts broken in pieces, one-fourth teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon paprika. Mix thoroughly with thick mayonnaise and refill tomatoes with the mixture. Garnish with lettuce and walnut halves.

Pineapple and Cucumber Salad: Thoroughly drain one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Mix with one cup of finely diced cucumber and add mayonnaise to moisten well. Arrange on lettuce and garnish with strips of red pimiento.

Pineapple and Pimiento Salad: Thoroughly drain two cups of crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Add one cup of diced celery and two chopped red pimientos. Mix with mayonnaise and serve on lettuce.

Celery Stuffed with Pineapple and Cheese: Wash, scrape, and cut celery stalks in four-inch pieces. Work one tablespoon butter until creamy, add two tablespoons cream cheese and two tablespoons crushed Hawaiian pineapple and stir until thoroughly blended, then season highly with salt and paprika. Spread mixture on inside of celery stalks and serve on bed of chopped ice.

Deviled Pineapple: Cut six hard-boiled eggs lengthwise. Remove yolks and mix with one cup of crushed Hawaiian pineapple, one tablespoon vinegar and one-half teaspoon salt. Pile pineapple mixture in the eggs and serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing. Garnish with two tablespoons chopped salted peanuts.

Since much of the success of the salad depends on the goodness of the salad dressing, the following suggestions are offered for unusual dressings:

French Fruit Dressing: Mix four tablespoons olive oil, one-half teaspoon salt, dash of pepper, one tablespoon lemon juice or vinegar and one tablespoon of sour cherry juice.

Cooked Salad Dressing: Is especially good with chicken salad. Scald one-half cup of cream and add one tablespoon of butter. Thoroughly mix one-half teaspoon salt, one teaspoon mustard, one-half tablespoon flour, one teaspoon sugar with three tablespoons vinegar. Add to cream. Stir and cook until thick, cover and continue cooking for ten minutes. Add one egg slightly beaten, stir and cook for one minute. Strain and cool before using.

Fruit Salad Dressing: Mix one-third cup of orange juice, one and one-half tablespoons pineapple juice, and add one egg, slightly beaten, and one cup of sugar. Cook in a double boiler ten minutes. Cool and fold in one-half pint of heavy cream, beaten until stiff; then add a few grains of salt.

Hawaiian Salad Dressing: Heat one cup of syrup drained from crushed Hawaiian pineapple. Mix three tablespoons sugar, three tablespoons flour, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon mustard and one-eighth teaspoon paprika. Add the hot syrup, stirring constantly, and bring to the boiling point. Add one-fourth cup of vinegar and allow to boil slowly for three minutes. Chill and serve on any fruit salad in place of mayonnaise or other cooked salad dressing.

ALGONAC The Venice of America

ON THE BEAUTIFUL ST CLAIR RIVER

By L. A. Simkins

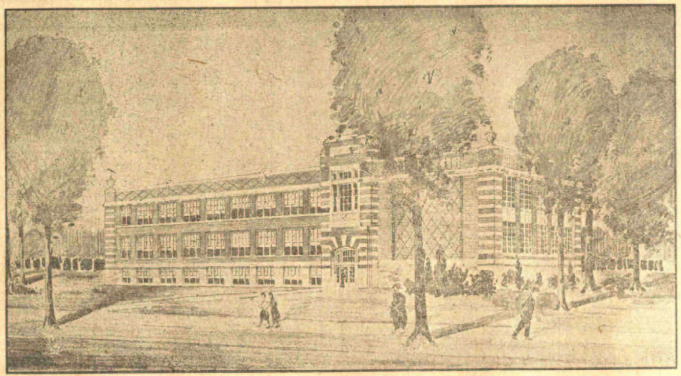
As more and more people are taking advantage of the many wonderful summer resort sections of Michigan, Algonac is taking her place at the head of the list as Eastern Michigan's leading watering place.

Located on the beautiful St. Clair river about ten miles above Lake St. Clair, just a short boat ride from the historic St. Clair Flats and directly across the river from Walpole Island, a Canadian Indian reservation where some eight hundred native indians live much as did their forefathers, it offers every advantage to the resorter.

Algonac is one of the oldest resorts in Michigan. Many of her present resorters have been going there for the past twenty five years never missing a summer in all this time, and several of them have sons and daughters that have summer homes of their own there now.

These "old-timers" relate many amusing incidents of their trips to and from Detroit long before autos and good roads where hardly thought of,

These people have seen Algonac grow as a summering place from a small semi-island at the south boundary of the village to ten miles of river frontages thickly built up with cottages and many 'cuts" leading back from the river from a quarter of a mile to a mile in length lined with pretty summer homes.



Algonac's New $200,000 School Building

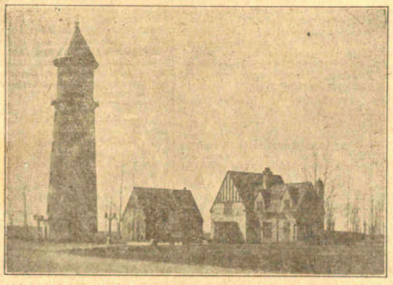
A town of two thousand people in the winter time, its population jumps to some 15 thousand during the warm months, many of these people staying until late October and even into November if the weather holds good. In the spring a sunshiny Saturday or Sunday in March and April will find many cottage owners there to putter around their places, getting them ready for the warm days to come.

Many fine summer homes have been built there in the last few years, prominent men from all over the United States picking this beauty spot as the ideal place for their families during the hot months of the year.

"Gar" Wood, Driver of the fastest Boats in the World

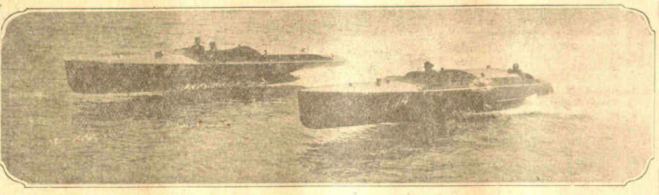
Always a boating center, Algonac gained international prominence seven years ago when "Gar" Wood took "Miss America" and Algonac built hydroplane, to England and brought back the Harmsworth Trophy. Since that time the fastest boats in the world have come from Algonac, and more fast pleasure boats have been shipped from Algonac than any other place in the world.

Chris Smith, who shared honors with Mr. Wood as the builder of the 'Miss America now has a boat plant in Algonac. Associated with him are his four sons and a daughter operating under the name of Chris Smith and Sons Boat Company, and their plant turns out about thirty Chris Crafts a week. These boats carry eight or more passengers in comfort and travel over the water at a forty mile an hour clip, and are shipped all over the United States and many foreign countries.



Tower and Entrance to the "Colony" and Exclusive River Front Development

Mr. Wood also has a boat factory there that builds two boats a day. These Baby Gars show real speed for their owners, the smaller ones traveling thirty miles and more an hour and the big thirty three footers making fifty miles with ease.



Baby Gars in Action

Not only are the fastest speed boats built there, but Algonac-built outboard motor boats hold many records. The Eckfield Boat Company, who specialize on outboard racing boats, have the distinction of building the fastest boat of this type in the world.

Chris Smith, the familiar cigar and a Chris Craft.

They have shipped boats to many foreign countries and their boats hold many sensational records.

Algonac has a beautiful golf course that attracts golfers from all over the eastern part of Michigan. A riding club started there early this year with a half dozen horses, has grown to the extent that some thirty odd horses are maintained there at the present time.

This little resort city has for several years, featured the Fourth of July with a water carnival, having boat races and other unique water stunts that drew thousands of people, not only from Michigan, but other states as well. This year Governor Green was expected to be present but was called away and promised to visit them later.

He has set Saturday August 27th as his day in Algonac and the people there who know how to handle big crowds in a small town, have arranged a program of boat will surpass anything else ever attempted and invites all Michigan to be in Algonac with Governor Green on that date, Saturday, August 27th.

BIOLOGY POST DRAWS CROWDS

College men and women are giving up a summer vacation to study mosses snakes and general plant life in Cheboygan and the University of Michigan biological station at Douglass Lake is crowded on visitors' day.

Guests are met by guides and taken in parties through the various exhibits of the station. In one of the exhibits the director explained parasitic infection of birds. The guests were shown through microscopes tiny parasites on the eyes and kidneys of frogs and fish. Then some of the infected fish were fed to gulls. One small bird seemed to be weaker afterwards, while a larger gull of the same age fed on the same diet appeared strong and vigorous.

The parasites were killing the small gull, the director explained, while the larger one was immune. The purpose of the experiment is to find the cause of immunity of the bigger gulls. If the student scientists can do this, they will work a great benefit, since gulls as natural scavengers, keep beaches clean and prevent diseases.

Another popular exhibit was the snake department, where black snakes, rattlesnakes, copperaheads grass snakes and garter snake were caged. The students bisect the snakes to learn their anatomy and the causes and methods of paisoning. Two co-eds and one man student picked snakes up in their hands while demonstrating methods. The reptiles seemed quie docile, one of them curling about the neck of the coed.

One of the attractions was a collection of one hundred different kinds of mosses. Over two hundred kinds are found in Michigan, two hundred and thirty of them growing at Douglass Lake thirty six of which have never been found elsewhere.

Other plants and animals used in the research work are ferns wolves chipmonks, raccoons skunks muskrats flying squirrels and white mce Water at various depths of Douglass Lake was also analyzed. The surface water was found to be full of dead and living life while at a lower depth it was found to be purer.

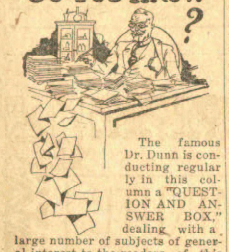
There are one hundred forty enrolled in the camp. The men are at one end and the co-eds at the other and they are not allowed to mingle except at meal times. The camp lasts eight weeks.

TRAVELING

This country as everybody knows has more miles of railroad track than any other country in the world. Something that ought to make railroad managers and their stockholders think is the fact that '.common carrier' motor omnibus lines have more miles of bus routes than railroads have of rail lines. Two hundred and seventy thousand miles for busses two hundred fifty seven thonsand miles for the railroads.

When airplanes begin competing with the railroads and buses the situation will be more complicated. Children in the schools now will tell their children "I remember when my father used to travel long distances in the railroad train. When he went to California he had to sleep four nights on the train.'

DO YOU KNOW



The famous Dr. Dunn is conducting regularly in this column a "QUESTION AND ANSWER BOX," dealing with a large number of subjects of general interest to the readers of this paper. You are invited to send in your questions to Dr. Dunn, care of this paper, and they will be given prompt consideration; and where deemed of general interest, will be answered through this column so far as space permits.

Dr. Dunn has for a long time been a member of the executive staff of the Michigan Mutual Liability Company of Detroit, and has become famous through his weekly broadcasting over WGHP. The doctor has had wide professional, commercial and sociological experience, and while the absolute accuracy of the answers to all questions is not guaranteed, the most authentic sources of information will be the basis of all replies.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn. To what extent are aviators and their planes insurable.

A. As one of the newer industries that is fast finding its level, aviation is already receiving considerable insurance protection. In this respect the Michigan Mutual Liability Company has pioneered the way and already covers through its compensation branch one of the largest factories manufacturing commercial aircraft; and is prepared to protect aviation including pasesngers, car and aviators. This, of course is as yet somewhat an expensive type of insurance as it is all figured out along an actuarial basis according to the the risk involved.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn. To what extent has modern sanitation reduced the death rate amongst mankind.

A. To a very, very great extent as can be shown by statistics carefully compiled during the past several decades. The sanitation work carried on in Panama under the leadership of General Gorgas during the construction of the canal is an outstanding example. During the French operations from 1881 to 1889 the cases of sickness were estimated to have been 333 per 1,000 men employed. During the ten years of construction under American direction, our force averaged 39,000 men. If a similar constant sick rate had obtained there would have been 13,000 sick employees in our hospitals every day. Auctually there were only 23 sick per 1,000 or a total of 900 ill each day. Thus about 12,000 fewer men were disabled every day due to illness than would have been the case if the French rate had continued. And this reduced rate of sickness was solely due to the modern improvements in sanitation put into force by the United States engineers.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn. At what motor speed is it generally conceded that there is the lowest consump tion per miles travel.

A. This, of course, varies with style of carburetor and mechanism in the individual car. But it is generally conceded that the most economical operation of a motor car lies between the speeds of twenty and twenty five miles an hour, where there is most vaporization of the fuel employed under all kinds of weather conditions, and where all the gas mixture is exploded and utilized.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn. Does the regular theft policy on an automobile cover only the stripped car or does it also cover theft of contents or accessories.

A. The usual theft policy issued by the ordinary automobile insurance company covers only the stripped car and does not protect contents or accessories, there being a substantial charge for coverage of accessories where the company will actually take this risk at all.

The Michigan Mutual Liability Company, is, however, the exception to this general rule and fully insures the accessories of the car it covers, without any extra charge to the motorists.

Q. Dear Dr. Dunn. Are women motorists safer drivers than men.

A. Considerable controversy has arisen over this question during the last two decades, and it is very difficult to give an authoritative answer; however, police reports from most large municipalities in the United States show that women drivers are responsible for a comparatively small number of the serious accidents. In the Detroit district alone women drivers were responsible for less than a dozen of the two hundred fourteen accidents that took place in the first seven months of the year.

CORUNNA SCHOOL ADDS NEW HEATING PLANT

The work of repairing the roof of the school house and installing the new steam heating plant is nesly finished.

The whole of the roof will be torn off and a new one put on in its place which will be asbestos hingles. When the roof was first built the cupola was made too large for the supports.

BARGAIN DAYS DRAW CROWDS AT SOUTH LYONS

That the merchants of South Lyons are right up to the minute is evidenced by the large crowds that come from a distance to the city every Tuesday evening to see the attractions offered by the merchants and partake of the bargain price banquet.

The merchnts who advertise liberally with The South Lyons Herald find their stores crowded and business brisk not only during the special offering, but that business over the course of the year shows a steady increase.

The other night the writer took particular pains to check the business places and found that advertising pays big profit to the advertiser and public alike. The merchant who advertises always has a fresh stock from which to select, the newest goods available and prices the lowest. No cob-webs hang over his door.

It was particularly noticeable to see and learn of the people who drove in from miles around attracted by the advertisments found in the Herald which testifies to its wide circulation and the power it sways in the community.

Even Mr. Hall will tie the matrimonial knot free of charge on Bargain Day so if any of our readers wish to join the band of contented citizens here is the chance and with the bargains offered, two can live as cheaply as one.

SOLDIER SHAFT TO BE MOVED IN PLAN FOR SAFE STREETS

After standing in the center of Monument square Battle Creek since nineteen hundred the soldier's monument will soon be moved to a new location probably directly in front of the First Methodist church.

Agitation for the removal of the monument has come up since the city wide program was inaugurated of making the streets safer for traffic. Corners are being widened in all parts of the city and other changes made to expedite traffic particularly in narrow downtown streets.

Under this program the monument would be replaced by a safety island and Monument square would become a "grand circle'.

At least $20,000,000 worth of farm property is destroyed by lightning in this country every year. That's the estimate of the farm fire protection committee of the National Fire Protection Association. The committee points out that lightning rods, good, bad, and indifferent, cut losses 85 per cent as compared with unrodded buildings.

Advertising Coupled With Good Merchandise

"At that time I was a kid, eighteen years old or thereabouts; and to me the stranger was an enigma. I could not help admiring his genteel ways, his neatness of dress, and particularly the heavy seal rings, of which he wore three on his forefinger. In addition to these, his waistcoat was ornamented with a chain of wonderfu workmanship, carved from ivory, in a quaint Eastern pattern of intricate design.

"From the chain dangled a charm of the most delicate coral I had ever seen, and upon this trinket my attention was centered more than anything else. It was carved in the form of a heathen god, so perfect in execution that even the veins in th hands were distinguishable.

"Just like any other boy, as soon as we were acquainted, I began to question him about New York, and I learned what neither the boss nor others could, viz.: that New York was not his home at all; that he had only been there six years, and that he wa by birth an Arabian of the desert, but had traveled pretty extensively over the continent—in fact, he told me, confidentially of course, enough to indicate that he was a man with a history—but when he offered to struct me on the machine, I was simply delighted; thence forth we were the best of friends.

"The Sanscript generally went to press at four o'clock in the morning, and the big rotaries usually turned out the whole edition in two hours, (barring accidents) and it was customary for the printers to spend the few remaining hours till daylight very much as they choose; and many a tramp about the city's great underworld did we take. The Arabian told me his name was Massini, a word which would slide off the Creole tongue as easy and natural as a darky would slide off the levee. Together we visited the all-night dance-halls and cafes of Bienville and Iberville streets. Massini was a nervous person when on the street, and seemed to be continually on the alert, as though he suspected someone was following. He constantly turned to look over his shoulder. Furthermore, I noticed that when we went into a cafe, Massini always seated himself facing the door, even going so far as to ask an old gentleman (very courteously of course) to vacate a seat because of this. I was so young and inexperienced, that these peculiar doings did not bother me in the least—indeed if I noticed them at all I probably attributed them to the fact that Massini was an Oriental—and being an Oriental meant anything or everything radically different.

"This sort of life continued for four years; I was becoming an expert operator as well as a good compositor, and when Massini was absent or indisposed, as frequently happened, I could take his place at the machine without any shortcomings.

"One morning Massini failed to appear, and the boss was somewhat indignant; for the linotype had been bothering considerably of late, which was attributed, I suppose, to my inexperience in handling. The office-boy was dispatched post-haste to the cheap rooming-house where Mas claimed to be staying, away over in the poorer residence district. Nothing could be learned of Massini, and the garrulous landlady could recollect no such man among her list of boarders. The boy returned, after two hours' fruitless search, and the mystery thickened.

"All that day I freted and fumed over the blankety-blanked bundle of springs, cams, levers, and wheels, which wouldn't work at all, and at 5:00 p. m. gave up in despair. Coming back at the usual hour, I was surprised to find Massini at the keyboard, and still more surprised at his general appearance. His face was drawn, eyes sunken and shifty—taken altogether, his looks were those of a man in the last stages of general debility. Nerve, which he possessed usually in large quantities, had forsaken him completely, and his hand shook like an aspen.

"When I accosted him with my usual cordial greeting, he seemed not to hear, and all through the evening his remarks were limited to the merest commonplace. This change in his demeanor was not noticed by others, because no one but myself ever had anything to do with Massini. He finished his 'take' at 11:30 that evening, and hung about my case until I took the last item from the hook, whereat I was beginning to doubt his sanity—he looked so strange. I fancied I had seen the same look in the eyes of the hunted wolves up in my father's big woods, when we and the dogs had cornered them.

"Thinking to cheer the fellow, I suggested we take a little whirl around the town to Navarro's theatre, where La Belle Mirzona was billed for the week, with her all-star troupe. After some time at Navarro's, we adjourned to the near-by cafe, and, as usual, Massini seated himself at a table in the extreme corner of the room opposite the door, and I likewise. Presently he seemed to warm up, under the aromatic influence of a Havana cigar, and I thought he smiled at one of my quips; but the smile faded so suddenly, it set me staring. Simultaneously his face blanched white, his eyes fairly popped from his head, and nervous tremors passed through his entire body, as he gazed at the entrance. Quickly I turned to learn the cause, and saw a heavy-set figure with cap drawn over his face, roughly dressed and with that peculiar rolling gait, such as I had noticed among the foreign sailors at the levees.

"'Who is that man?' I asked. Massini had by this regained his composure, and answered nonchalantly that he didn't know; but he had thought at first sight that the strange man was his long-lost brother, and that was why it frightened him so, he explained. After a while we made our exit, and went home: but I thought Massini's voice sounded queer when I bade him 'good-night,' and he grasped me convulsively by the hand, at 1:00 a. m., on the corner of Bienville.

"Next morning I arose early, and repaired toward the shop: because I had a little job which I wished to complete before the arrival of the boss. Passing around to the rear door, which we always left unlocked, I was surprised at the disturbed condition of the damp soil near the step. It looked as if a dozen men had engaged in a rough-and-tumble combat, and left their footprints. Here and there were little red spots, which I took to be red ink, but the funniest part of it all was, that the numerous tracks had all been made by just two pairs of shoes of vastly different make. One was the print of a common, light shoe, such as I myself wore; the other was made by a rather large stogy sole, but its shape was altogether different, being broad and rather wider at the toe than at the instep; and the bottom was studded with great hob-nails set in a peculiar zig-zag pattern. Where had I seen that identical pattern before? Massini's watch-chain had the same motif exactly, and you can bet I was getting interested.

"I passed into the composing room, and, Holy St. Patrick, what a sight! Tied to the stool before the machine in a sitting posture was the body of Massini, entirely nude above the waist ,and covered with blood which had congealed thereon; the head was lolled back as though looking at something above; the mouth was wide open, as also were the eyes, fixed with a stony, glassy stare. Blood was everywhere; on the machine, on the floor, and even the ceiling was bespattered. On the left temple of the corpse was carved a Maltese cross as neatly as you please; and both back and breast were mottled with strange devices like tattooing, worked out with a knife of razor-like sharpness; for the cuts were clean, and only extended through the skin.

"For several moments I was too horrified to move, and it required a gigantic effort to stop the clatter of my teeth; but my next impulse was obeyed explicitly, and I brought up breathless at the police station, not five rods distant, where I collapsed like an over-ripe pumpkin, but managed to give them an inkling.

"They lost no time in getting the ghastly thing to the morgue, and by this time the whole force had arrived. Of course I was the hero, and they plied me with questions galore; but I presume my answers were far from enlightening. The 'devil' was set at the task of cleaning up, while I glanced over the machine for the first time, and was surprised to find a few slugs had been run out 20 ems long, but the machine was jammed. I quickly tied up the metal, and proved it, and it read like this—(I lost the original proof through the offices of a compositor with sticky fingers some two years ago, but I have an exact duplicate of it now)."

Twonik handed out a much-folded sheet of greasy paper, and the boys jostled each other to get a good view, while he continued:

"You will notice the disconnected characters at the beginning. Well, probably Massini had some trouble in getting the machine started, inasmuch as he was being forced to do it. and it is more than probable that he was weak from the loss of blood. Once started, the machine quickly moulded his death-warrant.

"Read it, Johnson."

Johnson adjusted his glasses, and read as follows:

GREETINGS? TO MY FELLOW WORKERS.

"I am not, as you suppose, an Italian, but I am a native of the Arabian deserts. The curse of the Mogi is upon my head, and I must die. Even now the executioner stands ready to give the finishing stroke.

"At the age of nineten years, I came to Cairo, Egypt, where I joined the order of the Red Hand. I secured employment in the bazaar of Effendi Haidju. There I met the pretty daughter of a rich restauranter, and fell hopelessly into the net of her winning smiles and soulful eyes. But my love was not reciprocated, and one night I caught her in company with another young clerk, drinking gayly at a cafe; I nursed my jealousy, and watched. Soon I saw them leave the cafe; thence along the dark streets, I followed, with murder in my heart. I slew them both, with the trusty knife which is as silent as the foot of time..

"Her father was a member of the Mogi, and he has followed me relentlessly for twenty years. I came to New York disguised as a fruit-dealer, and hoped to escape the edict of the death-sentence, but in vain. You know the rest. Farewell; I who am about to die, salute you."

Johnson handed back the paper with a subdued expression, and Twonik resumed his composition, while the stentorian tones of the boss could be heard from the front office bawling hoarsely: "Cut it out, you fellows in there, and get busy."

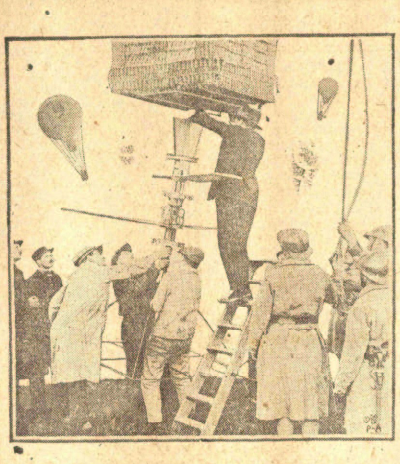
SUBSTITUTE FOR PARACHUTE?



PICTURED here is the start of a very interesting experiment recently carried out at an aeronautical school in France. That device below the balloon basket is a "planeur"—a kind of glider with revolving propellers—which is expected to replace the present day parachute. It was taken up to four hundred meters and released—falling vertically at a floating speed. There was no pilot.

Many of the troublesome household insects feed on crumbs, scraps, and other exposed food. So keep your food supplies in tight metal or glass containers. Clean up promptly any food crumbs that may be scattered about. Don't leave any food uncovered.

APIARIST CALLS 'BUSY BEE' BUNK

"This stuff about the 'busy bee is all the bunk", in the language of Attorney Colin P. Campbell of Grand Rapids, former speaker of the house, who during his spare time from his law office, gives his attention to his hobby, agriculture.

For twenty years the attorney has kept bees on his East Paris farm and during much of that time he has punched time cards for them with the result he refuses to give them a bonus for overtime. He has one hundred colonies of bees scattered in nine different bee yards to allow them the required pasturage.

According to his observations, bees average about four trips a day from their hive. Once in a while one is found which makes six trips a day. Most of them operate within a radius of one mile; sometimes they go two miles away from the hive and they fly at the rate of about one hundred thirty miles an hour.

With these fundamentals. Attorney Campbell explained, it can be easily determined they take long noonings. They may sit entirely idle in their hives between flights or perhaps may take turns at doing guard duty at the entrance.

Another observatian of this expert is that it is unprofitable to raise special bee pasturage except, perhaps, with such crops as clover and buckwheat where the crop can be turned to profit aside from the honey production. A single colony of bees requires at least an acre of clover to keep busy during the blooming season Honey alone would not pay for such extensive use of land.

High tide is reached about this time of the year in the bee hives. The queen in each colony has been laying eggs at the rate of three thousand a day and daily the young bees are hatching and it is upon these generations that the burden of gathering the money crop must fall

Recently when Attorney Campbel removed the winter top from the hives, it was estimated that each colony contained from twelve thousand to fifteen thousand bees. This number is recruited to one hundred thousand for each colony before the height of the season

SOFT DRINK MAKERS WAR ON HOME BREW LEGION

War is on between the legions of Lansing's home brewers and the brewers of the allagedly near drinks sold from soft drink parlors And the brewing companies so far enjoy the advantage although their weapons are radically different from those used by the police.

The brewing companies have just issued an ultimatum to their retail outlets that either they must discontinue the sale of bottles and other supplies for the home brewers or they will be deprived of the right to sell soft drinks.

At first this did not seem so serious a situation but it is apparent now that the shutdown on a large part of the bottle supply together with the extra demand for bottles created by warm weather has precipitated a bottle famine. As a result scores of batches of new beer have been spoiled while the brewers seached frantically for bottles.

RARE OLD BOOKS ARE PRESENTED TO STATE UNIVERSITY

Gifts of two lots of old books. including several of the Incunabula and a few first editions have been made to the University of Michigan by Herman . Hoskier, former New York banker, and now a student of early literature.

The first gift received in July included four books of the Incunabula, or volumes printed previous to fifteen hundred A. D. in the early days of printing. The first of these was printed in fourteen ninety two and the last in fourteen ninety eight. The university has a collection of slightly more than one hundred volumes of the Incunabula.

The first lot also includes three volumes printed in fifteen ten and fifteen eleven and one first edition of Francis Bacon. The latter is a history of the reign of King Henry the seventh.

OHIO DRY CHIEF COMES TO STATE

Thomas E. Stone, deputy prohibition administrator at Cleveland has been named to head the new prohibition administrative district of Michigan.

Mr. Stone will make his headquarters at Detroit, and it is expected that the office will be opened here October first. It was estimated that the opening of the Michigan office would create at least one hundred fifty jobs in Michigan ranging in pay from six thousand five hundred dollars to one thousand eight hundred sixty dollars the latter the pay of an ordinary buck private "rum chaser" and the former that of Mr. Stone himself.

The announcement from Washington said that Thomas Williams, deputy commissioner. who has been in charge of the Ohio-Michigan area, having taken the place vacated by Thomas H. Brennan. would be transferred to another post.

Mr. Stone is not unknown in Detroit liquor circles. In nineteen twenty one he appeared with a special detail of seventy men and announced that he proposed to dry up Ecorse" with his flying squadron of three fast cruisers. That was before the days of the famous "flying Dutchmen" which tried to dry up the Detroit river in the regime that followed that of Stone.

Once more the daily papers with a few exceptions proved their allegiance to the Money Power in publishing accounts of the death of J. Ogden Armour. The press forgot a great many things because the meat plants of Chicago have spent millions in advertising thru' the press besides the interests of the daily papers are identical with the interests of wealthy packers. Among other things the papers forgot all about the "Jungle" a famous book which exposed the Armour meat plants in Chicago. The "Jungle" has been called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of wage slavery" and was translated into 17 languages. The Jungle told how cattle which had died during the day were dressed in the dead hours of night and sold as good meat, how tons of rotten hams were mixed with good hams all being ground up together and passed off to the public; how an occasional rat fell into the lard vats and went unhappily into pure leaf lard; how a row of girls were kept in the outer establishments to clean the finger nails of a few of the workers for the purpose of blindi g the public. Many people haye never eaten since they read the "Jungle" and Mr. Roosevelt after reading the books urged Congress to pass a pure food law which was done in 1906 Great is the power of the press in hiding the truth.

A Visit To The Peach Orchard

The Editor had the pleasure last month of visiting one of the principal peach orchards in this county, Peach Crest, south-west of Hillsdale owned by W. S. Pullen & Sons. Here are literally thousands of thrifty young peach trees of many varieties in full bearing. Not one of them is high enough to require a ladder to reach the branches. The picking is all done from the ground Over hill and dale stretch the green ribbons of laden trees.

At the house the fruit is displayed and here the crowd are numerous especially on Sunday. People from Ohio and Indiana are always present in large numbers besides local folks, and the whole premises are a scene of activity during the harvesting season.

Death of J. S. Blackmer

John S. Blackmer, an old Civil war veteran who has been ill for the past four years, passed away at his home in this village Monday afternoon about 4 o'clock after having received several shocks of paralysis. Deceased was 79 years of age and had lived in this vicinity practically all his life, having been for a number of years a produce dealer here. He was a member of the Old Fourth Michigan Infantry and served three years in the army. He is survived by his wife, an only daughter having passed away several years ago.

Funeral services were held at the late home in this village Thursday September 8th, 1927 at 2:30 p. m. conducted by Rev. Wylie of the North Adams Methodist church and Rev. Merrill of Hillsdale.

Mr. Blackmer was one of the most active and vigorous of the Civil war survivors and saw much important service, he having been a guard on the prison wall when the murderers of President Lincoln were hung also participated in many skirmishes of the struggle of which he was fond of relating. He was a foremost leader in the G. A. R. while that lodge lasted and a progressive citizen whose going out will be much regretted by all.

Why the Sheetrock way is the quickest way

QUICK construction is one of the important advantages you get in using Sheetrock, the fireproof wallboard.

For Sheetrock comes all ready to use. You simply nail the wide, ceiling-high sheets to the supports. The trim and decoration can follow without waiting for the walls to dry.

Besides being ready for immediate decoration, Sheetrock walls are proof against cold and damp, fire and sound. They are non-warping, non-buckling and permanent.
